If, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen upon the other side of the House will open that subject, and repeal the bill in certain particulars, we, upon this side of the House, will, of course, feel ourselves justified in following their example; and not knowing whether they will vote for the Senate amendment, we must vote in ours before we allow them a vote on that question, otherwise they will get a repeal of what is obnoxious to them, whilst we shall fail in bringing them to a trial upon our amendment.

But I hope this committee will engage in no such business. The Committee of Ways and Means think it a wiser course to non-concur in this amendment. And I hope this committee will take the vote at once, and non-concur, and proceed to consider the other amendments of the Senate to the bill.

Mr. PHELPS, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. WALLEY. I move to amend by striking out the words, "as located the seat of government of Kansas at Fort Leavenworth," and inserting the following:

"And so much of said act as repeals the eighth section of the act providing for the admission of Missouri be, and the same are;" so that the clause would read:

For the erection of public buildings in the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, to be expended under the direction of the Governors thereof, respectively, $25,000 for each of said Territories; and so much of the act for the organization of said Territories as repeals the eighth section of the act providing for the admission of Missouri, be, and the same is hereby repealed.

Mr. JONES. I rise to a question of order. That amendment is not germane. This is an appropriation bill.

Mr. WALLEY. The section already provides for a partial repeal. I propose to make a further repeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I move an amendment: to strike out the words "so much of," and also the words "as located the seat of government of Kansas at Fort Leavenworth," so that the clause will read:

For the erection of public buildings in the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, to be expended under the direction of the Governors thereof, respectively, $25,000 for each of said Territories; and the act for the organization of said Territories is hereby repealed.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order. I ask whether the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order.

[Cries of "Read the amendment."]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio proposes to strike out the words "so much of," in the nine hundred and eighty-third line, and to strike out in the nine hundred and eighty-fourth line the words "as located the seat of government of Kansas at Fort Leavenworth;" so that the section, if so amended, will read:

For the erection of public buildings in the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, to be expended under the direction of the Governors thereof, respectively, $25,000 for each of said Territories; and the act for the organization of said Territories is hereby repealed.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The Chair having ruled that amendment in order, I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair; and I desire to state the grounds on which I base my appeal. My reason for the appeal is simply this: The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio proposes to accomplish precisely what the Committee of Ways and Means proposes to accomplish in striking out the section. The effect of the gentleman's amendment is to nullify the whole section, and make it of no effect at all, while the proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means is to strike it out. The clause proposes to appropriate money to be expended within the Territory, but the gentleman's amendment proposes to repeal the territorial act; and he attempts to accomplish indirectly what the Committee of Ways and Means proposes to accomplish directly. It is therefore out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will perceive that it is not for the Chair to decide a question of this sort. The Chair cannot be responsible for the fact as to whether the committee legislate sensibly or not.

Mr. STANTON. Well, my proposition is to let the committee decide the question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I desire to ask the Chair for information. I understand that the Chair has decided that in an appropriation bill an amendment proposing to repeal the territorial acts of Kansas and Nebraska is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio proposes to strike out certain words. It is in order for him to do so. If the words left in the clause repeal an act, the Chair cannot be responsible for it.

The question being "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. SOLLERS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HUGHES and KEITT were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 30.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained, and Mr. GIDDINGS's amendment ruled in order.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I regret that so many gentlemen should appear to have felt it necessary to oppose my amendment. Sir, I have offered it in the most perfect good faith. I entertain no doubt that its repeal will meet with the hearty approval of the President, for whom I entertain feelings of kindness. I have no doubt that his entire Cabinet most heartily desire its repeal, and would now be still more grateful could they say it had never been passed. For them, too, I have the kindest regard, and would repeal this law, if I had no other inducement than to relieve them from a burden, an incubus which sits heavily upon them, and is rapidly sinking them in the estimation of the American people. And I am quite sure that if gentlemen here would not conceal their feelings, they would unite with me most heartily in the repeal of this law.

Mr. MACDONALD. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests that the gentleman will confine himself strictly to his amendment. The gentleman had not proceeded far enough to enable the Chair to decide precisely to what point they were tending. But judging from the commencement of his remarks, the gentleman will not be in order if he does not get a little nearer to his amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIDDINGS. I will endeavor to keep myself within the rules. I urge the adoption of the amendment for the reason that, in justice and propriety, it ought to pass. This law ought to be repealed. Every moral and every political consideration worthy of statesmen urges that it be stricken from our statute-book. In this opinion, I sincerely think, every member of this body concurs. Or perhaps I should rather say I believe every member regrets its passage; but the partisan attachments of some may lead them to regard it as better to let it remain until next session. I speak of this consciousness of members from the presumption which teaches me that all have carefully noticed its effect upon the people, both North and South, and have contemplated the results which must inevitably flow from it. On those points it would appear almost impossible that any two members can differ. In this way I arrive at the conclusion in my own mind, that no members of this body can be found who do not, in the innermost recesses of their hearts, desire the repeal of this law, and regret its enactment.

Sir, this law has had its full effect on some points. Indeed, I can almost say it has done its perfect work, in scattering the old political organizations of the country to the four winds of heaven. It has obliterated old party lines, and thrown Whig and Democratic parties into chaos. Old fogies of the North and progressives of the South now find themselves so mixed up with each other, that at times I have been led to believe they had forgotten their own identity; while many southern members have become conscious of duty, and now "sit clothed in their right minds" acting with northern patriots. It is in vain that we hear the cry of Whiggery, or the more solemn and heart-rending appeals of the old line Democracy. They grow more and more faint, and both will soon be lost amid the rolling thunders of Republicanism and free Democracy. It has left the President in a minority; in truth, he is now very much in the condition of his grand Whig prototype, John Tyler, who boasted of presenting to the world the phenomenon of "A President without a party;" or if he be not now without a party, we may reasonably expect he will soon be in that condition, if this law be not repealed. This statute has also created an excitement throughout the country, to which no other political movement has approximated. It is to the Administration like that which was written upon the wall to Belshazzar. It not only says this Administration has been weighed in the balance and found wanting by the popular judgment of the nation, but it foretells the downfall of our "American Babylon"—of that power which has so long swayed the destinies of this Republic. If it be true that God brings good out of evil, surely I, and all lovers of liberty, have cause to thank those who brought forward and advocated the Nebraska bill. We have passed dry-shod over the sea of popular commotion, whose billows parted to let us through, and then returned to overwhelm the hosts of oppression. We witness the effect of this law in the country. It is exhibited in our primary meetings, in mammoth conventions, in the tone of the public press, in our sermons, in the action of our clergy, of our lawyers and our judges, of our farmers and mechanics; among all classes it has created an intense feeling that bids defiance to all the mesmeric efforts which the President, his Cabinet, and party can put forth. We witness the effects of this law in the Senate Chamber. There its effects have been salutary indeed. There the blind see, the dumb speak, and the poor have the gospel of freedom preached to them. Have not these facts resulted from the passage of the bill which I propose to repeal, and are they not matters of great good? I am now speaking of the good which God has brought out of this evil statute. In this production of good, the law has taken effect, has done its perfect work, and should be repealed. We see men flocking to Kansas armed for the bloody conflict to which the advocates of oppression have invited them. They are going in companies of ten, of twenty, of fifty, of hundreds, and soon they will go in companies of thousands. There men of conflicting opinions, opposing interests, are concentrating, ready armed and equipped for the maintenance of their antagonistic policy. There bombastic resolutions on one side are met with stern purpose and quiet determination on the other. There this law bids fair to result in civil war. And when blood commences flowing, who will predict the time when, or place where, it shall stop? Verily, if we love our country, if we regard the peace, the interests, or the honor of our nation, we shall not hesitate to repeal this law; to strike it from our statute-book, to obliterate every trace of its existence, so that coming generations shall find no evidence that such a barbarous law ever had an existence.

Sir, it would appear that the Committee of Ways and Means must have had some ideas of this nature, when they recommended the repeal of one of the important provisions of this law; yet it strikes me as bad policy to repeal it by piece-meal—one provision now, and another in the next appropriation bill that comes up. Let us do it at once; let us act boldly, as become statesmen. The law is impolitic, wrong, wicked; let us strike it from existence at a single blow. I think the committee were timid; they were too delicate. Had they recommended its entire repeal, they would have far better satisfied this House and the country. The people demand bold, energetic, efficient action. They will be satisfied with nothing short of that; and if we refuse to act in that manner, the people will set us an example in the coming elections. They have the power in their hands, and will hold us to a strict accountability. Already we hear the mutterings of the distant thunder; thousands and hundreds of thousands of freemen are threatening retributive justice upon those public servants who have proven recreant in the late conflict. In every free State we see the gathering storm. It is not of the diminutive size of a man's hand, like that which was seen by the prophet of old; it has already overspread the whole northern hemisphere, and threatens to overwhelm the advocates of oppression with popular indignation. As it rolls on, we see serviles and dough-faces turn pale and quake; and they already call upon the rocks and mountains of a slaveholding Administration to fall on them, and hide them from the indignation of the people.

Sir, I feel great solemnity when I look over this Hall and call to mind the many victims who must fall a prey to that popular vengeance which has been kindled by this passage of the law. I could point them out with almost unerring accuracy. They feel it; they are conscious of their coming doom. They find the Executive arm too short to save them; too weak to protect them. For them there is no escape. It is not merely political death that so terrifies them; their horror arises from the consideration that their immolation has been voluntary; that they have sacrificed themselves to the bloody Juggernaut of oppression.

Now, sir, would it not be an act of justice to our distressed fellow-members to repeal this law at once; now, before the close of the present session? Why, sir, the fatal cholera now sweeping over this land is but a feeble representation of that political pestilence about to sweep from this body so many of our friends and associates. How many now holding seats here will fall, prematurely fall, before this fatal pestilence, no one can foretell. But when this House shall convene, one year from December next, many of our youthful companions in service will lie low in the valley of political forgetfulness, and the grass will grow green over their political graves. That Congress will perform the work now proposed. They will do that which we shall have left undone.

Mr. McMULLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am happy in being afforded an opportunity to define my position in regard to the bill which has passed Congress for the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska. I understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIMMINGS] has offered an amendment for its repeal, and that in moving it he said that he believed that there was not a member of this body who was not at heart in favor of the repeal. Did he, could he have believed what he said? In making that declaration, the member from Ohio sported with the character of the American Congress. No member upon this floor knew better than he did that there were none here for the repeal of the Nebraska-Kansas act except those, like himself, Abolitionists, or their twin brothers.

I have said heretofore that I would not again engage in a discussion with the member from Ohio, after he had pocketed the indignity which he did from his colleague, [Mr. OLDS;] but his declaration to-day was so bold, so reckless, so uncalled for, and so directly at war with my feelings of what is right, that I cannot permit myself to remain silent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is traveling beyond the legitimate scope of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman, in his remarks, must confine himself to giving reasons why the words indicated should not be stricken out.

Mr. McMULLIN. I have no belief that this committee will, for one instant, entertain the idea of repealing this Nebraska-Kansas act, the declaration of the member from Ohio to the contrary notwithstanding. I was not present when the law was passed; but had I been, no act would have given me greater pleasure than yielding it my vote. Let the gentleman from Ohio go home and sing the syren song which he has heretofore sung against the South. The enactment of this act was called for by the people, and they will sustain its supporters. I, for one, never would have voted for the Missouri compromise. I would have voted for the organization of these Territories, and I repeat that I do not think that there is a member upon this floor who would vote for the repeal of the Nebraska-Kansas act, except an Abolitionist or Free-Soiler. If there be such a man, let him rise and show himself. If there be a man here who denies the doctrine that the people are capable of governing themselves, let us see him. If there be a member upon this floor for the repeal proposed, I should like to see his face.

Mr. MORGAN. I am for it.

Mr. McMULLIN. Then you ought to get down upon your marrow-bones and ask God to forgive you for showing yourself. [Great laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAURICE. I demand tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FARLEY and LETCHER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 77.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the Senate amendment, it was taken; and decided in the negative.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighty-sixth amendment:

For libraries at the seat of government of each of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by law, $5,000 for each of said Territories.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighty-seventh amendment:

In the nine hundred and ninety-third line strike out "$41,000," and insert "which said salaries shall hereafter be, of the Chief Justice, $7,000, and of the Associate Justices, $6,500 each, commencing with the present fiscal year, $59,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and eight Associate Judges, which said salaries shall hereafter be, of the Chief Justice, $7,000, and of the Associate Justices, $6,500 each, commencing with the present fiscal year, $59,000.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word upon this amendment. I desire the committee to forget the little episode upon the Nebraska and Kansas question for a moment, and I ask them to give their attention to the amendment I propose. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by striking out the word "seven," and insert "six" in its place. I also move to strike out "six," at the end of the same line, and insert "five" in its place; and also to strike out the word "nine," in the last line.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the Senate provides for increasing the compensation of the judges of the Supreme Court—that of the Chief Justice from $5,000 to $7,000, and that of the other judges from $4,500 to $6,500.

I am satisfied, sir, that that amendment cannot receive the sanction of this House. A majority of the Committee of Ways and Means are against it, and I am quite sure that a large majority of the House is against it. I have uniformly voted this year against all increase of salaries, but always with a declaration to the House, that when I could get an opportunity, I should cheerfully vote to increase the pay of the judges, both of the supreme and of the district courts. They all require increase, and some of the latter judges get much less pay than the clerks in the Departments here. For one, I do not think the amendment of the Senate goes too high. I would be glad, sir, to see that amendment adopted; but knowing the sense of the House, I feel bound to respect it. So far as I am concerned, I always act here somewhat in reference to what I believe to be the opinion of the other gentlemen on this floor; their judgment as well as mine controls this matter; and the opinion of a majority of us all must govern; and it is for that reason I propose the amendment, and hope the majority here will concur with me in sustaining it.

Sir, these salaries ought to be increased; and my proposition is to increase that of the Chief Justice from $5,000 to $6,000; and that of the Associate Judges from $4,500 to $5,500. That is lower than it ought to be. I should prefer going $500 more on each of them. This is a great office. These men have a silent, but all-powerful control over the business and destinies of this nation. The compensation attached to these offices has not, to my knowledge, been increased since the organization of the Government. These men pass, finally and forever, on all questions that come up from the courts below, and upon many questions where sovereign States are the parties. Now, there are thirty-one States in this Union—each of which is equal in prosperity, in standing, in wealth, and in commercial importance, to most of the kingdoms and republics of antiquity. Every one of these sovereign States has to wheel into line at the decision, at the mandate, of this august tribunal—the Supreme Court of the United States. It ought, therefore, to be placed in the highest and most secure and dignified position in the Government—to be well paid, and kept, as it always has been, thank God, above the breath of suspicion, and the temptations of want.

But I do not ask the committee to act upon any consideration of that kind. I say that the business of the country has increased so immensely within the last twenty years that these gentlemen have to come to this city annually to hold their court in bank, and remain nearly, or quite, half the year; and the other half of the time they spend in their circuits, constantly engaged in their laborious duties in the vicinities of their homes; so that they must live as a kind of vagrants, or vagabonds, at one or the other of the places, on their present salaries, with their families dispersed, or else it is absolutely necessary that they keep up establishments both here and at home. Sir, after board, washing, traveling expenses, and incidentals are paid from their present salaries, and the cost of keeping up their families at a frugal rate at home, on the supposition those families are not to accompany them here, how much do you suppose is left of their present salaries to provide for educating families, for sickness, and to guard against want in old age? They have no perquisites, and no retired list. We vote money to steam mail ships and Government contractors by thousands and without stint; but we do no justice to these frugal men, of simple tastes and habits, and of unobtrusive manners, but who so creditably fill the greatest and most conservative place in the Republic.

the last amendment but one may be forgotten, and that we may consider this question in sincerity and candor. I should like to give more; for my opinion of this great tribunal partakes of profound veneration; but I believe this is all this committee will consent to give, and I truly hope it will not withhold this. I ask, therefore, that the committee will express its assent to my proposition, and increase the salaries of these judges accordingly.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will it be in order to move to correct the gentleman's amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order now.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then I propose to make a few remarks in addition to that which has fallen from the gentleman from New York; but I oppose his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will be in order in speaking in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Singular as it may appear, I speak in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from New York, while I concur with the gentleman's argument. The gentleman's motion is to reduce the amount which the Senate has reported to us as a proper compensation for the judges. The gentleman's argument is to show that their salaries ought to be increased. So that I oppose his motion, though I concur in his argument.

Now, it is very clear to this House—it is very clear to the country—it has been a matter which has received public attention, that the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court, as they are now fixed by law, are wholly inadequate compensation for the responsibilities and the duties which attach to the office. The Supreme Court of the United States is, perhaps, the most august judicial tribunal in the world. It not only passes on all the disputed transactions between man and man brought before it, on all the relations between the citizen and his Government, but it sets, as it were, in judgment on the States, and on the National Legislature itself, looking to that law which is declared to be the supreme law of the land. It sits in judgment over the national and over the State governments. A more august tribunal has not existed in ancient or modern times, or one possessing greater powers or responsibilities. Now, sir, what salaries do you give to these officers? The sum of $4,500. What salary is proposed to be given to them by the amendment of the Senate? Six thousand five hundred dollars! The gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] not thinking that is too large in itself, but apprehending that the good sense and justice of this House would not recognize its propriety, is willing to lessen the amount reported by the Senate. I should be unwilling to do that, unless forced to it; and it seems to me that we should concur in the Senate amendment. Look at the amount of duty which these gentlemen have to perform. This court is in constant session from January to June; and is sitting, day after day, adjudicating the most important cases which can come before a judicial tribunal.

Again, they are at a vast expense in traveling from one extreme of our territory to the other. Look for a moment at the compensation derived by professional gentlemen—and it is from the ranks of the profession that they are taken. Look to the amount of compensation which a lawyer of third-rate reputation derives in many cities throughout the Union from the practice of his profession. And is the amount of $6,500 per annum too much to give to the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States? Could not either of the gentlemen who set upon that bench command for his services, in almost any city of the Union, more than that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I rise for the purpose of asking the committee to take a recess until seven o'clock; believing that we can then work with more comfort to ourselves than now.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. KERR. I call for tellers on that motion. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Boccock and Westbrook were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 50.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. ORR) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House (No. 48) making appropriation for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, and the amendments of the Senate thereto, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

CHANGE DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. FULLER. I rise to a privileged question. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet to-morrow at nine o'clock, a. m.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!" all over the Hall.]

Mr. HOUSTON. My object in rising is to ask the House if they will not consent to meet this evening?

[Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!" and "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The motion can only be submitted by unanimous consent.

Mr. REESE. I object.

Mr. PECKHAM. I rise to a privileged motion. I desire to make a motion to fix the hour of meeting when the House adjourns.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] has already submitted a proposition that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet at nine o'clock to-morrow morning. The motion, however, cannot be entertained except by unanimous consent, pending a motion to adjourn; and, if that motion be withdrawn, only by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. ORR. I appeal to the gentleman from New York to withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I will withdraw it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the House take a recess until seven o'clock this evening. I believe I am more unwell than any one here, but am willing to hold an evening session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama?

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is it in order to move a suspension of the rules for the purpose indicated by the gentleman from Alabama?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move, then, that the rules be suspended, in order that we may take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

The question was taken; and the rules were not suspended.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the hour for the daily meeting of the House be ten o'clock instead of eleven o'clock, a. m., until otherwise ordered.

Mr. ROWE. I object.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move a suspension of the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 95, noes 45.

So the rules were suspended, two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

Mr. FULLER. I move to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama by inserting nine o'clock instead of ten o'clock, a. m.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Houston's motion; and it was agreed to.

So it was ordered that the daily hour of meeting be ten o'clock, a. m.

LANDS FOR THE STATE OF ALABAMA.

Mr. COBB. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on Public Lands, "a bill granting to the State of Alabama public lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction of railroads from Mobile to Girard, from Selma to or near Gunter's Landing, with branches from or near Gadsden, through Wills and Chattanooga valleys to the eastern State line of Alabama, from Memphis to a point intersecting the Nashville, Chattanooga, and Charleston railroad, at or near Stephenson, Alabama; from Beard's bluff, via Elyton and Tuscaloosa, to some point on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, and from Montgomery to the northern State line of Alabama, via Decatur and Athens, in said State."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the introduction of the bill.

Mr. COBB. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned till to-morrow at ten o'clock, a. m.

Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of the heirs of Captain Matthew Jack, reported it back with amendments.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. NORRIS asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill to incorporate the Friend's Aid Society of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act for the relief of A. G. Penn;

An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morrel, in adjusting titles to land in Michigan; and

An act for the relief of Phineas M. Nightingale, administrator of the estate of General Nathaniel Greene, deceased.

A MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed the following bills of the Senate:

An act to establish a port of delivery at Lake Port, on Lake Pontchartrain, and for other purposes;

An act constituting Madison, in the State of Indiana, a port of delivery; and

An act creating a collection district in Texas and New Mexico.

ORANGE AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD.

The message also announced that the House insisted on their amendments to the bill of the Senate authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad in the District of Columbia; and that they asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. McMULLIN, MAY, and KERR, a committee of conference on their part.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, it was ordered that the Senate agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the above named bill, and that the appointment of the committee on the part of the Senate, be made by the President pro tempore. Messrs. BRIGHT, TOUCEY, and FISH were appointed.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. SLIDELL submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the daily hour of meeting of the Senate, for the residue of the session, be ten o'clock, a. m.

CHARLES GORDON.

Mr. FOOT. I reported yesterday morning, from the Committee on Public Lands, a resolution directing the Secretary to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the sum of $1,500 to Charles Gordon, for his services as draughtsman to the Committee on Public Lands for a period of ten months, when he was employed under the authority of a resolution of the Senate. In consequence of an objection then made by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] the resolution had to lie over. If he has no objection, I ask for its consideration this morning.

Mr. ADAMS. I did not object on account of the merits of the resolution, but simply that I wished to give priority to other business.

The motion to take up the resolution was agreed to; and it was adopted.

DANIEL STEENROD.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to call up a bill for the relief of Daniel Steenrod, which has been reported from the Committee on Claims, of which the Senator from Pennsylvania is chairman.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That is a bill which the Committee on Claims reported with amendments. It is a small claim, and the committee propose amendments to which, I presume, there will be no objection. It is a House bill, and it ought to be acted upon immediately, as our amendments will have to go back to the House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have heard something about that claim, which makes it necessary for me to object until I can look into it.

Mr. HUNTER subsequently said: The Senator from Maine is willing to withdraw his objection to the House bill for the relief of Daniel Steenrod; I therefore move to proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes that the petition of Daniel Steenrod, with the accompanying documents and depositions, shall be referred to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, who is to be authorized to appoint a commissioner to take evidence in the city of Wheeling or elsewhere, and ascertain and report what is justly and equitably due the petitioner, and if such report is approved by the Comptroller, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay such sum of money out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but there is a proviso that the commissioner shall be selected out of persons now in the employment of the Government, for which service no extra compensation shall be paid.

The Committee on Claims propose to amend the bill, so that it shall read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the petition of Daniel Steenrod, with the accompanying documents and depositions, be referred to the Secretary of War, who is hereby authorized to ascertain what is justly and equitably due to said petitioner thereon; and to pay such sum as may be found due, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read a third time, and passed.

SHERMAN PIERCE.

Mr. FOOT. I ask the consent of the Senate to consider a small invalid pension bill, which has been reported by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ALLEN,] from the Committee on Pensions. It is a bill for the relief of Sherman Pierce. He is a poor man, ninety years of age.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I hope we shall act upon that case; but after it is disposed of, if I can get the floor, I shall move to take up the fortification bill.

Mr. FOOT's motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is designed to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension roll the name of Sherman Pierce, of Londonderry, Windham county, Virginia, and to pay him, during his natural life, $12 per month, commencing January 1, 1854.

Pierce served in the war of 1812 a period of about seventy-five days, (being the full term of his enlistment,) and was honorably discharged. His health has become so impaired on account of his sufferings and hardships while in service, as to wholly disable him from procuring a livelihood. No evidence of sickness or disability is afforded by the rolls, or his discharge; but two reputable physicians certify to his present total disability, and their belief that it results from his remarkable exposure while in the service of the United States. Three of his former comrades in the service, attested to be men of truth and respectability, make oath to his having been a healthy man prior to his enlistment, and sick and lame to such an extent as to wholly disable him ever since his discharge. He was a quartermaster's sergeant in Colonel Martindale's regiment, who were embarked on bateaux, at Champlain, in November, 1812; the bateaux came down the river and attempted to cross the lake in the midst of a storm of snow and a strong rain. Some of the bateaux were driven ashore on Isle La Motte, and some on Grand Isle, and the men were exposed to all the inclemency of the weather, without shelter or sufficient provisions, for two days and nights; and to this exposure, of which many died, is attributed the disability of Pierce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill "to provide for taking charge of the Louisville and Portland canal, and to prevent the same from falling into bad repair;" which had been reported from the Committee on Roads and Canals, with an amendment.

The bill was originally introduced by Mr. DIXON, and was reported from the Committee on Roads and Canals by Mr. BRIGHT, with an amendment, the effect of which would be to make it read as follows:

Whereas the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by an act passed the 21st of January, 1842, authorized the Louisville and Portland Canal Company to appropriate the net income of the company in purchasing the shares other than those owned by the United States, until the United States should be the sole owner of the stock of said company; and whereas the United States will, under said arrangement, become the sole owner of said stock before the next session of Congress, and it is necessary to provide for the custody and preservation of the public property aforesaid, and to provide the proper officers to take charge and custody of the same, so that the commerce and navigation of the Ohio may not be obstructed, and that said canal may not fall into decay or bad repair; therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That so soon as the United States shall, under said arrangement, become the sole owner of said stock, the President of the United States is hereby authorized, and directed to appoint the proper officers to take possession of said canal on the part of the United States, and to take control of the canal and canal property aforesaid, and manage the same until further provided by law.

Mr. WALKER. I understand the provisions of the bill very well; but I cannot see or understand what may be its operation. What is the Government to do with the canal when it takes charge of it?

Mr. BRIGHT. The last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that before the meeting of the next Congress, the Louisville and Portland canal will become the property of the United States, the dividends on her stock having been applied under an act of the Commonwealth of Kentucky in purchasing and retiring the stock of private individuals. Under these circumstances it becomes necessary to provide for the custody and management of the canal, and as there is not time at the present session to pass a bill with all the proper details, the Committee on Roads and Canals recommend that the President be authorized to take such steps as he may deem necessary to secure the United States in her rights, and at the same time give the public the use of said canal, until further legislation can be had.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill from the Senate to constitute Tusculum, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the Senate.

RELATIONS WITH SPAIN.

Mr. MASON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the Senate (if, in his opinion, it be not incompatible with the public interest) whether anything has arisen since the date of his message to the House of Representatives of the 15th March last concerning our relations with the Government of Spain which, in his opinion, may dispense with the suggestions therein contained touching the propriety of "provisional measures" by Congress to meet any exigency that may arise in the recess of Congress affecting those relations.

Subsequently a message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, in relation to the above resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

The following is the message:

To the Senate of the United States:

I hasten to respond briefly to the resolution of the Senate of this date, "requesting the President to inform the Senate (if in his opinion it be not incompatible with the public interest) whether anything has arisen since the date of his message to the House of Representatives of the fifteenth of March last, concerning our relations with the Government of Spain, which, in his opinion, may dispense with the suggestions therein contained, touching the propriety of 'provisional measures' by Congress to meet any exigency that may arise, in the recess of Congress, affecting those relations."

In the message to the House of Representatives referred to, I availed myself of the occasion to present the following reflections and suggestions:

"In view of the position of the Island of Cuba, its proximity to our coast, the relations which it must ever bear to our commercial and other interests, it is vain to expect that a series of unfriendly acts, infringing our commercial rights, and the adoption of a policy threatening the honor and security of these States, can long exist with peaceful relations. In case the measures taken for amicable adjustment of our difficulties with Spain should unfortunately fail, I shall not hesitate to use the authority and means which Congress may grant to insure the observance of our just rights, to obtain redress for injuries received, and to vindicate the honor of our flag. In anticipation of that contingency, which I earnestly hope may not arise, I suggest to Congress the propriety of adopting such provisional measures as the exigency may seem to demand."

The two Houses of Congress may have anticipated that the hope then expressed would be realized before the period of its adjournment, and that our relations with Spain would have assumed a satisfactory condition, so as to remove past causes of complaint, and afford better security for tranquility and justice in the future. But I am constrained to say that such is not the fact. The formal demand for immediate reparation in the case of the "Black Warrior," instead of having been met on the part of Spain by prompt satisfaction, has only served to call forth a justification of the local authorities of Cuba, and thus to transfer the responsibility for their acts to the Spanish Government itself.

Meanwhile, information not only reliable in its nature, but of an official character, was received to the effect that preparation was making within the limits of the United States, by private individuals, under military organization, for a descent upon the island of Cuba, with a view to wrest that colony from the dominion of Spain. International comity, the obligations of treaties, and the express provisions of law, alike required, in my judgment, that all the constitutional power of the Executive should be exerted to prevent the consummation of such a violation of positive law, and of that good faith on which mainly the amicable relations of neighboring nations must depend. In conformity with these convictions of public duty, a proclamation was issued to warn all persons not to participate in the contemplated enterprise, and to invoke the interposition in this behalf of the proper officers of the Government. No provocation whatever can justify private expeditions of hostility against a country at peace with the United States. The power to declare war is vested by the Constitution in Congress; and the experience of our past history leaves no room to doubt that the wisdom of this arrangement of constitutional power will continue to be verified whenever the national interest and honor shall demand a resort to ultimate measures of redress. Pending negotiations by the Executive, and before the action of Congress, individuals could not be permitted to embarrass the operations of the one and usurp the powers of the other of these depositaries of the functions of Government.

I have only to add that nothing has arisen since the date of my former message to "dispense with the suggestions therein contained touching the propriety of provisional measures by Congress."

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

WASHINGTON, August 1, 1854.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HOUSTON, in pursuance of previous notice, proceeded to address the Senate in reference to certain charges contained against him in a book published by General Thomas Jefferson Green. [The speech will appear in the Appendix.]

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the river and harbor bill, which was the business pending before the Senate, when we adjourned last evening.

Mr. MASON. I must ask for the yeas and nays on that motion, because I cannot but consider that preference should be given to an Executive session for business which is well known to the Senate.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHASE. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair: whether this bill, having been the business under consideration at the time of adjournment last evening, is not first in order now? and whether we are not to proceed with it without any motion to that effect?

The PRESIDENT. It requires a motion.

Mr. GWIN. It is perfectly evident, that if the river and harbor bill be taken up this morning, we shall jeopardize all the appropriation bills. I hope those gentlemen who have charge of that measure will give us two, or three, or four hours this morning for the consideration of four or five appropriation bills now on the table, which we can pass in that time. By so doing, we could put the business upon which the Government rests—the bills which are necessary to carry on the Government—in such a position that there could be no danger of their being lost. I hope, therefore, those who have this bill in charge will give us two or three hours this morning for the consideration of those appropriation bills. Some of them have been reported back just as they came from the House, without amendment. I am satisfied that, in a very short time, we can put ourselves in such a position as to insure the passage of the regular appropriation bills. I hope, therefore, the gentlemen in charge of the river and harbor bill will give a short time this morning for those bills.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am sorry to decline acceding to the suggestion of the Senator from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of—

The PRESIDENT. That is not in order. There is now a motion before the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. What is it?

The PRESIDENT. To proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill; and on that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Cass, Chase, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Seward, Slidell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Clay, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Rusk, Toombs, and Toucey—18.

The Senate accordingly, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill from the House, "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law."

Various amendments were offered, and the bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in. Several amendments were then proposed; some of which were rejected and others adopted, and finally, the amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time by a vote of yeas 31, nays 17.

The bill was then read a third time, and passed [See Appendix for the detailed proceedings.]

CHARLOTTE S. WESTCOTT.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill for the relief of Mrs. Charlotte S. Westcott, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage; and I ask for its consideration at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for a pension of twenty dollars a month, commencing on the 1st of January last, with a proviso that, in case of the marriage or death of Mrs. Westcott, the pension shall be paid to her children, or the survivor of them.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the House bill "making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters, for the year ending the 30th June, 1855."

Mr. SLIDELL. I ask the Senator from Virginia if there is anybody here who represents the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee, as I understand, have an amendment which they are prepared to report, in which my State is deeply interested. If no member of it is here, I shall object to proceeding with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GWIN. I am very much opposed to the fortification bill myself, in its present form; but it is perfectly notorious that by amending it we shall endanger it in the House. It passed the House by only three majority. It may suit the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] but it does not suit some of the rest of us. There are some important appropriations in it; but I hope it will not be amended.

Mr. SLIDELL. I understand the Committee on Military Affairs have agreed to recommend an amendment to the bill, which will deeply interest my State; and if they are not prepared now to report it, I shall have to vote in favor of an adjournment. I have not the amendment in my possession; and if there is no gentleman here from the committee prepared to offer it, I cannot consent to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GWIN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to; and

The Senate, at seven o'clock, p. m., adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 1, 1854.

The House met at ten o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER announced as the first business in order the motion submitted yesterday evening by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB,] to suspend the rules for the purpose of enabling him to report, from the Committee on Public Lands, "a bill granting to the State of Alabama public lands, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of railroads from Mobile to Girard, from Selma, to or near Gunter's Landing, with branches from or near Gadsden, through Wills and Chattanooga valleys, to the eastern State line of Alabama, from Memphis, Tennessee, to a point intersecting the Nashville, Chattanooga and Charleston railroad, at or near Stephenson, Alabama, from Beard's Bluff, via Elyton to Tuscaloosa, to some point on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, and from Montgomery to the northern State line of Alabama, via Decatur and Athens, in said State."

CONSULAR SYSTEM.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, a bill to "remodel the diplomatic and consular system of the United States;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and, with an accompanying report in writing, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

THE GUANO TRADE.

Mr. SOLLERS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a resolution, which I am directed to offer by the select committee, upon the guano trade.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That twenty-thousand extra copies of the report of the special committee raised upon the guano trade be printed for the use of the members of the House.

Mr. SOLLERS. I hope there will be no objection to the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The resolution must go to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was referred, under the rule, to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting the annual report of the Board of Regents of that institution, and requesting that the same be laid before the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The annual report does not accompany the letter of the Secretary. The Chair understands that there is but one copy. It is very voluminous, and is now in the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. ENGLISH. I move that the communication and report be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed; and I move that twenty thousand extra copies be printed, and that that motion be referred to the Committee on Printing.

It was so ordered.

THE GUANO REPORT—AGAIN.

Mr. HUNT obtained the floor.

Mr. SOLLERS. I rise to a privileged question. The resolution which I submitted just now was, I took it for granted, to be put upon its passage. I did not conceive that there would be a motion to refer it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was in the act of putting the question on the adoption of the resolution, not recollecting at the moment that the rules of the House required it to be referred to the Committee on Printing, until the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] rose in his place and demanded the execution of the rule.

Mr. SOLLERS. Well, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his objection, and let the resolution be put upon its passage. It is a very important matter, and one in which the agriculturists of the country are deeply concerned.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Cannot the rules be suspended for the purpose of having the resolution put upon its passage?

The CHAIR. Yes, if a motion could be got in for that purpose. But there is now a motion pending to suspend the rules; and the motion indicated could only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. SOLLERS. Then I move that the rules be suspended.

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Tennessee objected to the consideration of the resolution. The order was therefore made that it be referred, as the rules require, to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SOLLERS. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his objection. As I said before, this is a matter of great importance, and I doubt whether, if it were referred to the Committee on Printing, we could get a report in time.

The objection was not withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] is on the floor, and only gave way for explanation on the part of the gentleman from Maryland.

PORT OF DELIVERY ON LAKE PONTCHARTRAIN.

Mr. HUNT. I only ask to occupy the attention of the House one moment. I wish to oblige a friend, and I therefore ask the favor of the House for my colleague, [Mr. DUNBAR,] who has been for some time too unwell to occupy his place. Sir, an act was committed to his care "to establish a port of delivery at Lake Port on Lake Pontchartrain, and for other purposes," which I desire may now be taken up and passed. There is no objection to it. The bill has passed the Senate, and I hope the House will allow it to be put upon its passage here. As I said, my colleague has been too unwell to attend to the matter himself. He has not asked any previous favors from this House.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. HUNT. It is Senate bill No. 243, and is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill (No. 243) "to establish a port of delivery at Lake Port, on Lake Pontchartrain, and for other purposes;" and said bill was ordered to be read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Some of the gentlemen interested in the report made on the guano trade are anxious to have that report printed under the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SOLLERS,] and also wish that the House should adopt the resolution without sending it to the Committee on Printing. I will withdraw my objection to that course.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the guano report, I object.

PASSAGE OF SENATE BILLS.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts, obtained unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Commerce, and thereupon reported back to the House, without amendment, Senate bill (No. 418) entitled "An act creating a collection district in Texas and New Mexico."

The bill having been read in extenso, was ordered to be read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. W., from the same committee, also reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill (No. 425) "to constitute Tusculum, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery."

The amendment provides that Paducah, in the State of Kentucky, Shreveport, in Louisiana, and Jeffersonville, in Indiana, shall severally be constituted ports of delivery in the collection district of New Orleans.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was then read.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move to amend the title by adding thereto the words, "and for other purposes."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. W., from the same committee, next reported Senate bill (No. 413) constituting Madison, in the State of Indiana, a port of delivery.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. DISNEY. I would inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts whether these bills are all of the same character?

Mr. WENTWORTH. They are.

Mr. DISNEY. Then I hope they will be disposed of at once without reading.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to know of the Chair if the gentleman from Massachusetts has a right to report all these bills?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Massachusetts, when he asked the consent of the House to make a report from the Committee on Commerce, that it was to report only a single bill; but the gentleman has several which he says he included in the motion.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman the right to have these bills passed?

The SPEAKER. If the bills are reported from the committee, the gentleman has the right to move to put them upon their passage.

Mr. WALSH. I object to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late to object to this bill, it having been received and read.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I distinctly stated, when I asked the consent of the House, that I wished to report several bills from the Committee of Commerce, mainly for the establishment of ports of entry and ports of delivery.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to refer these bills to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that they be printed, so that the House may see what they are. We can then take them up and act upon them the next session of Congress.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hope that will not be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair at the moment was certainly inattentive to the language used by the gentleman from Massachusetts, in asking the consent of the House to make this report, supposing that he desired to report only a single bill. The Chair decides that it is too late to object to the bill now under consideration, but he will entertain objections to other bills reported by the gentleman, if they are made in time.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask the House simply to allow me to say that I have been trying to get the floor for the last three weeks for the purpose of reporting these bills, which the Committee on Commerce have instructed me to report, but I have not succeeded until the present moment. The House will bear me witness that I have occupied but very little of their time during the present session. These bills are applicable to various sections of the country, for the establishment of such ports of entry and delivery as the wants of the business of those ports have rendered necessary.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will move to suspend the rules to enable him to report these bills.

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules is not in order, from the fact that there is already a motion pending to suspend the rules submitted by the gentleman from Alabama. The question is upon ordering the bill before the House to be read a third time.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I now ask leave to report another bill of the same character.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. DISNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. MAXWELL. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce has several bills of a similar character to those just passed, establishing ports of delivery in Florida, which I ask that the gentleman may be allowed to report.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the gentleman from Ohio and the House that the report shall be now submitted?

Mr. DISNEY. I cannot yield now. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to report back from the Committee on Public Lands two Senate bills, one in relation to a grant of land heretofore made to the State of Illinois, and the other in relation to a similar grant made to the State of Wisconsin. The facts in both cases are precisely similar, and the bills are identical in phraseology. The language in both is copied from a law in relation to a precisely similar case in regard to the State of Indiana. The Committee on Public Lands have instructed me to ask the unanimous consent for leave to report them back and put them on their passage.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I would ask the gentleman to embrace in his proposition Senate bill (No. 352) extending, in certain cases, the provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend preemption rights to certain lands therein mentioned," approved March 3, 1853.

Mr. DISNEY. I must decline the gentleman's proposition. I hope that the House will now dispose of these bills. I repeat, that the facts in both cases are alike. They are precisely similar to a case which occurred in Indiana some years ago. The rule for the government of all such cases has been already fixed.

Mr. EASTMAN. Have not these bills been recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. DISNEY. They have.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I object to the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. DISNEY. I move, then, that the rules be suspended for the purpose which I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. There is now pending a motion for the suspension of the rules.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] will consent to his motion for a suspension of the rules going over until to-morrow morning, so that we may suspend the rules and go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Senate amendments to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I submit the motion to go into committee.

Mr. PECKHAM. I ask the unanimous consent to report three or four Senate bills merely for reference.

Mr. JONES. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules, submitted by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB.]

Mr. JONES. Is not my motion in order?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama withdraw his motion?

Mr. COBB. I do not, sir.

Mr. JONES. I insist, then, on the regular order of business.

Mr. McMULLIN. I would ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment.

Mr. COBB. I cannot just now. If the House will allow me, I think that I may make a suggestion which will meet with the general concurrence. An appeal has been made to me to let my motion for a suspension of the rules go over until to-morrow morning, with a view of the House going into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Senate amendments to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I have not the slightest objection to the proposition. If it be the pleasure of the House, I shall even waive those rights in which my whole political existence is involved.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion submitted by the gentleman from Alabama shall go over until to-morrow morning?

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE.

Mr. McMULLIN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman desires to ask a committee of conference on a Senate bill.

Mr. JONES. What bill is it?

Mr. McMULLIN. It is Senate bill No. 388, "authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia." The House made an amendment to the bill, but the Senate disagreed to that amendment; and I now move that the House insist on its amendment, and that a committee of conference be appointed on the part of the House to meet a like committee on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing vote.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion pending, made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] is of equal privilege.

Mr. PHELPS. A communication was made from the Senate yesterday, to the House of Representatives, showing that the Secretary of the Senate had, by mistake, neglected to engross two amendments to the civil and diplomatic bill. I ask that that message may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to be considered in connection with the civil and diplomatic bill.

It was so ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. JONES's motion; and it was agreed to.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to House bill (No. 48) "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855."

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, at its last sitting, had under consideration the eighty-seventh amendment of the Senate, which is in line nine hundred and ninety-three, to strike out "$41,000," and insert as follows:

Which said salaries shall hereafter be, of the Chief Justice, $7,000, and of the Associate Justices, $6,500 each, commencing the present fiscal year, $59,000.

So as to make the clause read as follows:

For salaries of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and eight Associate Judges, which said salaries shall hereafter be, of the Chief Justice, $7,000, and of the Associate Justices, $6,500 each, commencing with the present fiscal year, $59,000."

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the word "seven," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "six," and to amend also in the same line by striking out the word "six," and inserting in lieu thereof "five," and in the last line by striking out the word "nine."

The question was taken on Mr. HAVEN's amendment; and it was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the Senate amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I propose to amend the amendment by reducing the sum one dollar on each of the proposed augmentations of salary.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say to my colleague that, under the circumstances of our having so short a portion of the session left to act on all the bills before Congress, I shall insist on the Chair administering the rule which requires members to speak to their amendments. I say so in respect to my colleague's amendment, because I know that he will understand and appreciate my motive.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I desire to make a correction in my amendment. I propose to increase the salaries one dollar, instead of reducing them that amount. I am very well aware of the value of the time of the House at this period of the session. I know that there are important bills to be perfected, but I also know this, that there is not a measure before this House which is, in my estimation, of more importance than the particular amendment which now addresses itself to the attention of this committee. If there is one branch of this Government which should, more than another, receive the favor of this House, it is the Supreme Court, which constitutes a coordinate branch of the Government. The judges of this court have no political alliance, and therefore it is, I suppose, that no gentlemen on this floor are particularly interested in seeing that proper justice is done to them. If this were a proposition to increase the compensation of the clerks of the House, of the pages of the House, or of the clerks of the Departments, there would be scores of gentlemen ready to stand up and urge the House to agree to it. I say, that if the judges of the Supreme Court were men of political influence, there would not be so few members in this House anxious to urge their just claims upon us for an increase of salary. Unlike almost every other branch of the Government, they are cut off from the exercise of political influence. They hold their sessions remote from us, and remote from the society over which they might have influence. That is the reason why so few members of this House seem disposed to support the Senate's amendment proposing to increase their salary; a proposition which seems to me to be nothing more than common justice. Sir, I say if there is any one branch of the public service ill-paid, it is the service to which I have reference. We have propositions to increase the salaries of all other officers of the Government. Almost every other branch of the public service has succeeded in having the salaries of officers increased. Compare the labor, the responsibilities, the expenses attending this position, and you will find that even common justice requires, at our hands, that we should vote the increase proposed here by the Senate and by my motion.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield me the floor?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Yes; you may have the rest of my time.

Mr. STANTON. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama. My object in rising at this time is to oppose that amendment, for the reason that I am in favor of the original amendment of the Senate.

Now, sir, I presume that it is not necessary before this committee—composed as it is of gentlemen, many of them belonging to the legal profession, and all of them sufficiently well acquainted with the high character and importance of the duties performed by the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States—to refer to them. And, sir, I feel that nothing more is necessary, if, indeed, so much is necessary, than to say that I believe that the sum proposed by the Senate, as an amendment to this clause, is not more than sufficient for—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. I think the gentleman is speaking upon the same side with the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STANTON. No, sir; I am opposed to his amendment. I contend that the amount recommended by the Senate is just the right amount, and that the one dollar which the gentleman from Alabama proposes to add to it is one dollar too much, and for that reason I am opposed to his amendment. That is the point of my argument, and I will confine my remarks within the limits of proper debate in regard to it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROW. Is that speech in opposition to the one made by the gentleman from Alabama?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee said so. [A laugh.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. I withdraw my amendment, if there is no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the withdrawal. Let us have a vote upon it.

The question was then taken upon Mr. PHILLIPS's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to strike out the Senate amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the words "and their salary shall be the same as now prescribed by law." I offer this amendment merely for the purpose of affording me the opportunity of expressing my opinion upon the amendment of the Senate. You have had presented to you, at the present session of Congress, a plan for the reorganization of the judiciary of the United States.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman proposes, by his amendment, to strike out the amount proposed by the Senate, and to insert in lieu thereof the amount now prescribed by law. I ask if a concurrence in the recommendation of the committee, that is to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate, does not produce that very effect? Whether that question is not involved in the question of concurrence or non-concurrence, and if so, the amendment cannot be in order.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from Alabama misunderstands my amendment. It is to amend the amendment of the Senate by striking all of it out, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and their salaries shall be the same as now prescribed by law."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment, and is of opinion that it is in order.

Mr. PHELPS. At the commencement of this session of Congress you had presented to both Houses of Congress a proposition for the reorganization of the judiciary of the United States. Complaints are made to you from every quarter, of the insufficiency of the salaries of the judges of the United States courts. The judges of the district courts of the United States come here, and ask for an increase of their salaries. The committee of this House who were charged with the investigation of this matter, have declared their intention to report a bill providing for the reorganization of all the courts of the United States. Plans were pending, at that time, for the centralization and consolidation of the Supreme Court of the United States, in order not to require the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States to perform circuit court duties, but to constitute another set of judges to perform those duties. Now, if it is the intention of Congress to consolidate the Supreme Court of the United States, and to release them from the performance of circuit court duties—and the reason upon which they ask to be released from the performance of their circuit court duties, is, that the business of both the Supreme Court and the circuit courts, have greatly increased within the last few years—you release them from the performance of that class of their duties which causes them a great part of their expense, and that is the necessity of traveling over distant portions of the country in order to hold their circuit courts.

I have another objection to the increase of these salaries. I object to the enlargement of the salaries in this manner. I object to a minority, or at least to but a small majority of the committee fastening upon the civil and diplomatic bill an amendment providing for the increase of salaries, a subject which legitimately and properly belongs to another and a separate bill. If you are going to reorganize the judiciary, in the bill for that purpose you should fix the salaries of the judges, and graduate the salaries of the different grades of judges as you believe to be right and proper. Do not let the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States alone be here raised, and thereby allow it to be said that partiality has been shown to those judges. Many of the judges of the district courts receive but a thousand dollars a year, and others only fifteen hundred, who, in the discharge of their duties, and oftentimes in consequence of the absence of the judges of the Supreme Court, who properly hold the circuit courts, have to hold the circuit courts and perform the duties of the judges of those courts. Now, then, you propose to make an invidious distinction. You propose that the salaries of the Supreme Court judges shall be increased, while you do not propose to increase the salaries of another equally meritorious class of citizens and equally meritorious officers at all. That is the reason why I oppose the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am opposed to this amendment, and to every other amendment that can be offered to this proposition. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a non-concurrence in this amendment, and this committee are as competent to vote upon the whole proposition now as they would be if they were to discuss it under the five-minute rule for the balance of the day. I am opposed to the amendment, and ask that the vote may be taken at once.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I suppose the speech made by the member of the Committee of Ways and Means, who has just taken his seat, was intended as a backer to that of his colleague upon the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. PHELPS,] and that it is in order to speak in opposition.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. What is there before the committee that the gentleman from Virginia can speak upon?

Mr. SMITH. I submit that the gentleman from Tennessee did not speak in opposition to the gentleman from Missouri. The gentleman from Missouri proposes to allow the salaries of the judges to remain as they are. The gentleman from Tennessee proposes to do the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Tennessee proposes to accomplish the same object by a different course.

Mr. PHELPS's amendment was then disagreed to.

Mr. SMITH. I now propose to reduce the amounts appropriated in this amendment to $6,500 for the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and to $6,000 for the Associate Judges.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, if I can get the ear of the committee for a few moments, I think what I have to say will not be entirely unprofitable. I suppose the American people, as well as the American Congress, ought to be disposed, and are disposed, to place these high functionaries in an independent position. They are intrusted with the highest jurisdiction. They have the gravest duties to perform, and they should never know the pressure of pecuniary wants. They should be placed beyond the reach of temptation. Their salaries ought to be sufficient to make them perfectly independent.

Mr. SEWARD. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, I hope the gentleman from Georgia will allow me to go on without interruption.

Mr. SEWARD. I insist upon my point of order. The gentleman has moved to reduce the salaries of the judges, and he is making a speech in favor of increasing them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not been able to hear a word the gentleman from Virginia has said, and, therefore, cannot decide whether he is in order or not.

Mr. SMITH. Why I go for increasing the amount of these salaries.

Mr. SEWARD. But the amendment was the other way.

Mr. SMITH. My amendment is to reduce the amount fixed in the Senate amendment, but to increase that allowed under existing law. But, sir, I am making my argument to those in this committee who can appreciate it.

Mr. SEWARD. I doubt very much whether anybody in this committee can appreciate the speeches of the gentleman from Virginia at all times. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. I am very sure that is the condition of the gentleman from Georgia. But, sir, to proceed: And as I find it necessary to repeat the remarks I have already made, I hope what time has already been consumed will not be taken out of my five minutes. I was saying that it was the very highest duty of the American people, and of the American Congress, to place these high functionaries in a position pecuniarily which shall place them entirely beyond the reach of temptation. They should never become embarrassed in the discharge of their high and grave duties by the wants of life. I said that in this view of the subject all of us would be prepared to do what was right and proper.

The question is just this: Is the salary which they are now receiving sufficient to place them in this situation? I was going on to state, and I will now state, and come down to the gentleman's comprehension, good as it is. I have no doubt that one of our present judges has to travel eleven thousand miles, and pay $500 as traveling expenses. Judges get no mileage. He has, I say, to pay $500 as traveling expenses out of his salary of $4,500. Besides, out of this $4,000, he has to pay in the city of Washington $3,000 a year for the house which covers him, and there is left then $1,000 to supply his table, and to support and educate his family, and I put it to the committee, and to the honorable gentleman from Georgia himself, whether this pittance is proper compensation for a Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The committee then have the facts as to one of these judges. I shall not comment on the salary paid Chief Justice Taney. He is known, respected, and beloved; yet he and his family are unable to live on the salary which he now receives. While we all participate in the burdens of increased expenditure, are these high functionaries of the Government to be denied what is absolutely necessary to their support? And I say to this committee that one of the judges, feels, that instead of the Government supporting him, he is helping to support the Government. He lays out $3,000 in house-rent, $500 as traveling expenses, in going over a distance of eleven thousand miles, and has $1,000 left for the support and education of his family. Will you not increase this man's salary, and at least leave him $2,500, the amount proposed by my amendment? Is the allowance an unreasonable one? Can any member refuse the proposition his vote in view of all the circumstances?

Mr. SEWARD. I am opposed to increase of pay for this reason: The Judges of the Supreme Court are not responsible to the people of this country, and it sometimes happens that in the exercise of the power with which they are clothed, they commit great outrages on the people's rights. They sometimes use power which does not belong to them under the Constitution of the United States. We have had a recent instance of the exercise of such power, and the only way in which we can control this branch of the Government is to refuse to increase its pay. Let us teach them that while they are not directly responsible to the people, they are, at least, dependent on the people of this country for their salaries.

Now, in reference to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH.] It is perfectly apparent to the members of this committee that he has undertaken to assume to himself the responsibility of the entire legislation of this country. [Laughter.] He has set up for himself a higher order of intellect than anybody else is willing to accord to him, [renewed laughter;] and I want the gentleman to understand, however much he may desire to read lectures to other people, that when he undertakes to read them to me he must do it respectfully. I have sought to injure the feelings of no one. I have treated all respectfully, and I shall not tolerate disrespect from the gentleman from Virginia, or anybody else. When I am the aggressor, and do wrong, I shall acknowledge it.

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. SEWARD. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. I will ask the gentleman if it is not disrespectful to get up here, and say that an argument, addressed in support of a proposition, is not in support of that proposition?

Mr. SEWARD. The gentleman said that my comprehension was so dull that he knew I could not appreciate the argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia must confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. SEWARD. Having said thus much, I propose to say nothing more.

The question was taken upon Mr. SMITH's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. HUNT. I move to increase the salaries in the amendment $1,000.

My object in addressing the committee is to support the proposition of the Senate, although I do not deem the amount moved in addition to that recommended by the Senate, at all too large. As wise and enlightened legislators we should duly appreciate the learning, virtue, and ability of the judges of the Supreme Court, who only attain their elevated position after a life of great labor—the incubationes viginti annorum—the study, the reflections, and practice of many years. A judge of the Supreme Court must have varied, extensive, and profound attainments; and he must especially be learned in all the departments of his high profession. And, Mr. Chairman, all these attainments and this learning cannot be acquired by the ablest man in a period short of fifteen or twenty years; for, whatever may be the force of natural genius, labor, and study, and experience are necessary for the acquisition of the knowledge indispensable to a judge. Properly estimating that knowledge so requisite to the administration of public justice, and knowing how few possess it fully, we should take care to keep the door of honor open to the competent by offering such salaries as may operate upon their ambition to aspire to and accept the exalted and dignified office of a judge. The salary of a judge of the Supreme Court should at least be sufficient to maintain him and his family according to the condition in which he stands in society. His expenses are necessarily large. He must receive and entertain the members of the bar, and other distinguished and learned persons who will feel disposed to visit him. And if he has children they must be liberally educated, and supported in a manner suitable to his high position. Gentlemen should bear in mind too, the severe and constant duties of the judge. His life is devoted to labor by day and by night, by the light of the sun, and by the light of the lamp. While others are indulging in recreation and enjoyment, he is poring over books of ancient and modern learning, examining and developing the principles of his noble science, and weighing those things which are proper to form a perfect judgment for his country, and all parties that appear before his tribunal.

In estimating what is a proper salary for a judge we should not lose sight of what an eminent lawyer usually earns by his practice at the bar. It is not uncommon for a distinguished lawyer in any of our large cities, and even elsewhere, to earn $15,000 or $20,000 a year. While this is the case, it is certainly but fair that the judge should receive at least the salary proposed in the amendment of the Senate.

But there are other considerations which recommend the amendment. A judge should be independent in his circumstances. He ought not to be troubled and harassed by pecuniary cares. He should be free and ready at all times, to devote his entire energies, his heart and soul to the cases that come before him for his decision. And he should also be independent through his salary, so as to be beyond temptation and beyond suspicion. He ought so to be provided for, as not only to be able to maintain his family properly, but to command the entire confidence of his fellow citizens in the uprightness and disinterestedness of his action.

And now, looking upon this matter practically, we all know that the expenses of living have increased greatly in Washington of late years, and that if a judge who has a family, rears up his children here, where he is obliged to spend so much of his time, he can with difficulty meet his expenses, unless he is possessed of a private fortune. Now, then, I would ask, is the office to be kept open only to the wealthy? Are the wise, the virtuous, and the learned, who have lived regardless of worldly pelf, and who have not accumulated riches, to be excluded from the bench. Is this Democratic doctrine? Is this a doctrine for the government of science? No, sir; let us be just and liberal. Let us appreciate learning. Let us fairly compensate labor. Let us secure independent men for the judgment seat, men above suspicion, men who will faithfully devote their time to the business of their great office.

But, it has been urged as a reason against an increase of salary, that the judges are not responsible to the people. Not responsible to the people! Is this true, constitutionally? Sir, they are responsible to the people as long as they are responsible to the organs constituted by the people to impeach and to try them in case of delinquency. But, I would ask, if you diminish the salaries of judges, do you thereby increase their responsibility? If you adopt a pitiful salary which would only be received by a mean, an ignorant, and an incompetent man, do you thereby increase the responsibility of the judicial office?

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise simply to say that I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana, and I hope the vote will be taken on the amendment, as I desire to offer another as soon as it is disposed of.

The question was taken on Mr. HUNT's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I propose the following amendment to the amendment of the Senate:

And the salary of the judge of the orphans' court in the District of Columbia, shall be $2,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit a question of order in respect to this amendment. It is on a different subject entirely. It has no connection with the Supreme Court; and it proposes to change the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the question of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, and rules the amendment of his colleague out of order.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by reducing the increase $900 in each case.

I shall not detain the committee five minutes; but I desire to call the attention of the committee to this important fact: This civil and diplomatic bill was originally intended to make appropriations. It was not intended to be made the medium for the increase of salaries.

Mr. HUNT. I ask if the gentleman is in order? I object to his proceeding in this argument, as he is not speaking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has hardly proceeded far enough for the Chair to determine whether he is in order or not. But the Chair has been appealed to by three different gentlemen to enforce the rule, and the Chair will feel himself constrained to do so. The Chair, therefore, hopes that the gentleman from Virginia will confine himself strictly to the explanation of his amendment.

Mr. McMULLIN. I shall do so. Now, it occurs to me, that this amendment of the Senate should not have been put into this bill. This is an appropriation bill, and is not to be made a national omnibus to carry through this House all the amendments of a character similar to this.

Mr. HUNT. I respectfully repeat my question of order.

Mr. McMULLIN. The gentleman has made his speech; and the call to order comes with a bad grace from him. I hold that the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court are now amply sufficient for them. When the President, who rules over this great nation, is unable to find men competent to discharge these duties, for the salaries now provided, then, and then only, it will be time for gentlemen to act upon this doctrine for an increase of the salaries of the judges. Sir, whenever a vacancy happens in the office of a judge, either in a State or a Territory, you find swarms of applicants coming forward with recommendations of appointment for that office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the gentleman that the rule requires that he should confine his remarks to the amendment.

Mr. McMULLIN. That was what I was doing. I was attempting to show that it is not necessary to increase the salaries of the judges; and is it not a legitimate argument to that end, to show that when there is a vacancy in the office of one of these judges, you find swarms of persons seeking the appointment to the vacancy?

I admit that these gentlemen live a life of labor, and that they are gentlemen of high legal qualifications and attainments. But have you ever known a judge resign his office on account of the inadequacy of his salary? Has the gentleman from New Orleans [Mr. HUNT] ever known an instance of that sort?

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, (in his seat.) I have known such cases.

Mr. McMULLIN. Well, the gentleman is a rare man.

But aside from that matter, I hold, Mr. Chairman, that the committee ought not now to increase these salaries. You have before the House a general bill providing for the increase of the judges' salaries generally. Now, this whole matter of salaries should be settled in connection with that bill. Let this civil and diplomatic bill have as few amendments attached to it as possible.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, and I am opposed to any other amendment which may be offered to the Senate amendment. I want to get to a vote immediately upon the question of concurrence or non-concurrence. I appeal to the committee to proceed at once to a vote. We have much other and important business connected with this bill, and I doubt not all of our minds are made up upon this question.

The question was then taken upon Mr. McMULLIN's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon concurrence in the Senate amendment,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KNOX and SOLLERS were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 80.

So the Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

For compensation of the district judge of the southern district of California, commencing the 23d of January, 1854, $4,028 88.

Mr. PARKER. I have a proposition to amend that amendment, which I think will meet with universal approbation in this committee. It is in reference to the regulation of the salaries of the district judges of the United States. I send up my amendment to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have it read.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman does not wish to have his amendment read, I will make a point of order upon it now. The gentleman has stated what it is.

Mr. PARKER. I do wish to have it read. I move to add at the end of the Senate amendment the following:

And that the judges of the district courts of the United States shall receive, as compensation for their services, the following yearly salaries, to be paid quarterly from the Treasury of the United States, to wit:

The judges of the districts of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Delaware, New Jersey, Iowa, and Wisconsin, $2,000.

The judge of the northern district of Florida, $2,250.

The judges of the western district of Virginia, North Carolina, eastern, western, and middle districts of Tennessee, northern and southern districts of Mississippi, western district of Pennsylvania, western district of Louisiana, Texas, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, eastern and western districts of Arkansas, Illinois, and Michigan, $2,500.

The judges of the districts of Georgia, South Carolina, eastern district of Virginia, northern district of New York, northern and southern districts of Alabama, $2,750.

The judges of the districts of Maryland, Massachusetts, eastern district of Pennsylvania, southern district of Florida, and southern district of California, $3,000.

The judge of the eastern district of Louisiana, $3,500.

The judge of the southern district of New York, $3,750.

The judge of the northern district of California, $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now raise a question of order upon that amendment. It proposes to increase the salaries of the district judges. The amendment of the Senate, to which it is offered, makes appropriation for the increase of the salaries in pursuance of a law passed the present session of Congress, and is, therefore, a proper and legitimate appropriation to be inserted in a general appropriation bill. There is no law authorizing the increase proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. I submit, therefore, that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to say a word upon the question of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is not debatable. I object.

Mr. PARKER. This is for the compensation of district judges.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana cannot proceed with his reasons except by the unanimous consent of the committee. If the gentleman takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair, he can state the grounds of his appeal.

Mr. PARKER. I do appeal, and upon this ground. The amendment of the Senate is to provide for the compensation of a district judge. My amendment is to provide for the compensation of other district judges. The amendment is, therefore, germane upon its face.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is arguing his amendment, and not stating the grounds of his appeal.

Mr. PARKER. I will observe, further, that the salaries of the judges of the courts in California are already fixed by law.

Mr. HOUSTON. I must call the gentleman to order. He is arguing his amendment. The difference between the amendments is very clear.

Mr. PARKER. There is no difference whatever between them.

Mr. KERR. I ask for tellers upon the appeal. Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and on a division, there were—ayes 56, noes 46; no quorum.

Mr. BELCHER. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers have been refused, but they may be, by unanimous consent, now ordered.

There was no objection.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. McNAIR and Cox were appointed.

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained, the tellers having reported—ayes 70, noes 56.

The question was then taken; and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Eighty-ninth amendment:

Strike out "$12,300," and insert "$19,900," so that the paragraph will read:

For salaries of the Attorney General, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $19,900.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Ninetieth amendment:

Insert at the end of the clause, "For salary of the reporter of the Decisions of the Supreme Court, $1,300," the words "if only one volume of the reports shall be published, and in case the Supreme Court shall direct him to publish two volumes, then the sum of $1,300 for each volume so published;" so as to make it read:

For salary of the reporter of the Decisions of the Supreme Court, $1,300, if only one volume of the reports shall be published; and in case the Supreme Court shall direct him to publish two volumes, then the sum of $1,300 for each volume so published.

Mr. PECKHAM. I move to strike out the Senate amendment. I think that we are getting reports enough from this Supreme Court, as well as from other courts; and from the specimen we have had of the reports of that court, I do not think that we ought to offer a premium to increase the number. I think that in the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States already published, there is a greater quantity of chaff for the same quantity of wheat than in any other reports. We have reports of the argument, of all the papers and pleadings, making sometimes one case constitute a volume. I hope that the committee in this case will not offer a premium, at least so far as the latter clause of this section is concerned. The latter part of the clause proposes, that if the Supreme Court shall direct him to publish two volumes, then the sum of $1,300 shall be paid for each volume so published. I move to strike out the latter part of the clause. I have no objection to the first part. I would much rather give him $2,000, if he would publish but one volume, than $3,000 if he published two. The less of these reports we have in this extended form the better for the country and the profession.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose that the committee, after the very high-wrought eulogy pronounced upon this Supreme Court, will at least trust them to say whether they will have one or two volumes of these decisions printed.

Mr. PECKHAM. I ask for a division of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PECKHAM] proposes to strike out the Senate amendment.

Mr. PECKHAM. I will withdraw my amendment, as I have no objection to allowing the vote to be taken on concurring or non-concurring with the Senate amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I renew the amendment, and call for a division of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York proposes to strike out from the Senate amendment all after the word "published," or the following words:

And in case the Supreme Court shall direct him to publish two volumes, then the sum of $1,300 for each volume so published.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentlemen will just non-concur with the Senate amendment, they will accomplish the object they have in view. In the original bill passed by the House, the appropriation for the salary of the reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court was fixed at $1,300, upon the presumption that he was to publish but one volume. If you non-concur in the Senate amendment, you have the thing as it was originally passed.

Mr. WALSH. I do not insist upon it, if it is distinctly understood that it leaves the proposition as stated in the first two lines.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Ninety-first amendment:

Page forty-three, line one thousand and thirty-five, strike out the word "ten," and insert in lieu thereof the words "six of the."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For salaries of six of the additional clerks, &c.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Ninety-second amendment:

Line one thousand and forty strike out "$10,800," and insert in lieu thereof "$6,000."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For salaries of six of the additional clerks, authorized by the acts of August 6, 1846, August 12, 1848, March 3, 1851, and August 31, 1852, $6,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Ninety-third amendment:

For one additional clerk in the office of the assistant treasurer at Boston, Massachusetts, $1,200.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Ninety-fourth amendment:

Page one thousand and forty-five strike out "for salary of chief clerk to the assistant treasurer at New York, $1,600," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For clerks, messenger, and watchmen in the office of the assistant treasurer at New York, $13,900.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Ninety-fifth amendment:

Page forty-six, line one thousand one hundred and ten, after the word "dollars," add the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract for the construction of a custom-house on said site, to include accommodations for a post office and United States court room, at a cost not exceeding $200,000.

The clause, as amended, reads:

To purchase a site for custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island, $24,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury, &c.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. I propose to amend the amendment of the Senate by increasing the appropriation $100.

I would not rise at this time in the House to ask this appropriation for the city of Providence, if I did not see that every other city of equal size in this whole Republic, and under similar circumstances as those under which Providence stands, has received appropriations as large as that asked for. Some of no more than half the population have received appropriations amounting to that which is asked for Providence. And I do not see why we should be singled out at this time to be excluded from the common benefits conferred on other cities.

The revenues paid to the national Treasury from this port in Rhode Island has amounted to $10,000,000, and we have never from the first received any appropriations for a custom-house, save of about $8,000, by which the present building was erected. We ask but one fiftieth part of the revenues received there in that long time to erect a building necessary for the business of the city. This building is designed to accommodate not merely the custom-house, but the post office, and the courts of the United States. The site has been selected, having three of its sides fronting streets; and you cannot put up a cheap or small building to meet the increase of business, and afford suitable accommodation for all these departments.

I think in view of these facts, that the city of Providence and the State of Rhode Island, though she is a small State, should be treated as other cities and States are, which collect equal revenues. I ask that, and nothing more. I ask the Committee of Ways and Means to show me a single city in this whole country on the seaboard, with an equal population and revenue, where an amount near to this has not already been appropriated, or is not in the progress of appropriation? We have already a site, and I ask what we are to do with it, if you do not allow us an appropriation to erect a building thereon?

Now, sir, allow me to make a statement of facts, which will show the propriety of making such an appropriation. The city of Charleston, with a population not larger than ours, has already had $1,000,000 appropriated for a custom-house at that point. She collects a larger revenue than Providence does, and I do not say she is not entitled to a larger appropriation than Providence. But the question is, is she entitled to three, four, or five times as much as we are? We do not object to what she has, but justice compels us to say that if she is entitled to $1,500,000, and it will require that sum at least to complete hers, the city of Providence may fairly ask for $200,000. The city of Richmond, with a population of twenty-seven thousand, and a revenue about equal to ours, has had appropriated for her $250,000. Is Providence entitled to anything less than that? Mobile with about the same population, and with not much larger revenue, has also received $250,000. In speaking of these places, I speak of their population as shown by the census of 1850. The population of Providence now, is fifty thousand. Mobile with a population of twenty thousand in 1850, has received $250,000, and Providence, it seems to me, is the only place which gentlemen are willing to cut off. Is it because she is a small State? That is no reason why this injustice should be done, and I appeal to gentlemen from the large States to sustain us in this matter, and give us their aid. We have not asked anything before and we only ask now for a fiftieth part of the revenue which has been collected in that city, to erect a building which shall be useful and elegant.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not expect to engage in any debate growing up in reference to these custom-houses. I expressed my views very fully when this subject was up in connection to another bill; but I feel bound, in justification of the action of the Committee of Ways and Means, to present the facts bearing upon this case.

[The committee here rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the House, for the relief of Daniel Steenrod, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.]

Mr. HOUSTON, (resuming.) The gentleman from Rhode Island, I think, makes an entire mistake in the manner in which he discusses this amendment. He speaks of the population of his city in comparison with that of other places. The amount of revenue collected at Providence is about $65,000 a year, while at Richmond the amount of revenue collected is more than $150,000; and at Mobile it is over $100,000. So the committee will see that the gentleman fails in his argument whenever he refers to the amount of population of the cities, and loses sight of the amount of business which is done at these several points. It is the matter of the amount of business done at any of these cities, taking into consideration, at the same time, the number of persons in the employ of the Government there, which makes it necessary to have these custom-houses at all.

Besides, the Committee of Ways and Means recommended an appropriation, which was adopted by the House, and which goes to the full extent of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. The recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury at the commencement of the present Congress, was in these words:

"On a full examination of the city of Providence, no suitable site could be obtained for a new custom-house for a less sum than $30,000; and if a new custom-house is to be erected, it would be bad economy to build on an improper site.

"The Department being satisfied that a proper site will cost that amount, has asked for $24,000 in addition to the $16,000 already appropriated, in order to bring the subject to the attention of Congress, and recommending the appropriation for that purpose, and of that amount."

In this bill, preceding the amendment of the Senate, gentlemen will perceive that there is an appropriation of $24,000 for this purpose, which is the amount the Secretary of the Treasury asked for. But, sir, this amendment is based upon no recommendation or estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury—at least upon none that has ever come before the Committee of Ways and Means, or become a part of the records of the House. Then, again, at the last session of Congress, we made an appropriation, which is in the following language:

"For the purchase of land additional to the present custom-house lot at Providence, Rhode Island, $16,000; and for the erection of a new custom-house at said port, which shall be so constructed and arranged as to furnish a suitable room for the United States circuit and district courts, with the necessary offices for district judge, clerk, marshal, &c., $34,000: Provided, That the entire cost of such additional site and building shall in no event exceed the sum hereby appropriated."

But, in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury at the present session, it was stated that a proper site could not be obtained for the amount appropriated. The Secretary of the Treasury asked that a further appropriation of $24,000 should be granted for that purpose. The Committee of Ways and Means recommended, and the House agreed, that that additional amount should be appropriated; making, in all, $74,000 for completing the building for a custom-house, court-room, &c. It is true that further appropriations were asked for all these custom-houses, but the committee recommended this.

Now, sir, I have no feeling in relation to the matter. I do not care whether the committee agrees to this amendment or not. But I ask that the vote shall be taken.

Mr. DAVIS's amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island, moved a pro forma amendment, and said: Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that when the calculations were made for the first building in Providence, it was contemplated to build only a custom-house. But on an examination of the city, it was found that the sum appropriated for the purchase of a site, would not purchase a proper one. The Department, therefore, recommended an additional appropriation for a site. I will state, however, that this appropriation, which it is now proposed to make, is for a custom-house, court-room, and post office—the same as the other custom-houses which have been provided for.

Now, one word in reference to another subject. The gentleman says the revenue collected at the city of Providence is not as great as that collected in other cities. Now, sir, the revenue collected there is more than it is in two or three other cities where custom-houses are established. The revenues collected at Providence are about the same that they are in Richmond, and they are more than they are in some of the other cities. They are larger than they are in Louisville. They are larger, so far as those from the post office is concerned, and that is a point that should not be overlooked.

They have about fifty officials there, and that is much more than you will find in many of these custom-houses. They have about twenty-five connected with the custom-house proper, about fifteen in the post office, and ten or twelve connected with the courts; so that we stand on as good footing as most of the places where custom-houses are established. Sir, the city of Providence is important enough in point of revenue, in point of population, and in point of wealth to demand the erection of this building, and I hope this House as a matter of justice, will adopt the amendment.

I appeal to the generosity of the House, while they are appropriating more than $2,000,000 for the West, that they should do something for the East. The East is entitled to some consideration as well as the West. It is true that the sun sets in the West, but it is equally true that it rises in the East. We only ask for this little amount, and I trust it will be granted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not intend to submit an argument. I have said all that I desire to on the question under consideration. In answer to the gentleman from Rhode Island, I would refer him to the law, which is in these words:

"For the purchase of land additional to the present custom-house lot at Providence, Rhode Island, $16,000; and for the erection of a new custom-house at said port, which shall be so constructed and arranged as to furnish a suitable room for the United States circuit and district courts, with the necessary offices for district judge, clerk, marshal, &c., $34,000: Provided, That the entire cost of such additional site and building shall, in no event, exceed the sum hereby appropriated."

So the gentleman is evidently mistaken.

Mr. DAVIS. It could not be made.

Mr. DAVIS's amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on concurrence in the Senate's amendment.

Mr. THURSTON. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN, of Maine, and PRATT, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; the tellers having reported—ayes 69, noes 53.

Ninety-sixth amendment:

For the rebuilding of the custom-house, Portland, Maine, including accommodations for a post office and rooms for the United States courts, $200,000.

Mr. HAVEN. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. FULLER. I propose the following amendment, to come in at the end of the clause just read:

That $3,600 of the above sum, which was appropriated in the civil and diplomatic bill of 1850, be hereby reappropriated for the purpose of repairs, alterations, and furniture, for the custom-house at Castine, in the collection district of Penobscot.

In explanation of that amendment, I have this to say, that by the appropriation act of 1850, in the civil and diplomatic bill, the sum named in my amendment was appropriated for repairs at that place.

Mr. WALSH. Is the amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. FULLER. The amendment I offer is a distinct and independent amendment. It makes a reappropriation of the sum of money which was appropriated in a former bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is not in order, as it introduces an original proposition.

Mr. FULLER. I offer it as a distinct, independent proposition, to carry out an existing provision of law.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to any amendment which the Senate has sent back to the House.

Mr. FULLER. I would ask whether the amendment would be in order at any other portion of the bill. It is clearly within the meaning of the rule, that the appropriation must be made in accordance with an existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be true, and the amendment may have been perfectly in order to the original bill or in the Senate. But the committee are now engaged in the consideration of the Senate amendments, and the Chair decides that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine is not in order to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. LINDSLEY. I offer the following amendment:

To increase the salary of the custom house officer at Sandusky, so as to make it $1,250, equal to that of the collector at Detroit.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is not in order. It is not germane to any pending amendment, and it proposes to change existing law.

Mr. LINDSLEY. An amendment passed at the last session of Congress precisely like this.

The CHAIRMAN. It may have originated in the other wing of the Capitol. The rules which govern that body are very different from our own.

Mr. LINDSLEY. I respectfully give notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, I shall introduce a bill for the purpose of accomplishing the same object.

Ninety-seventh amendment:

For the completion of the custom-house at San Francisco, California, including all expenses of filling in, piling, sewers, drains, pavements, inclosure, gateways, the extinguishment of private claims for the possession of the whole or any part thereof, and contingencies incident thereto, $163,386 09.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Ninety-eighth amendment:

Page forty-seven, line one thousand one hundred and twenty-nine, strike out the words "for any building mentioned in this act," and insert in lieu thereof the words "by this act for any custom-house or marine hospital."

The amendment, as amended, reads:

Provided, That none of the moneys appropriated by this act for any custom-house or marine hospital shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned, &c.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Ninety-ninth amendment:

Line one thousand one hundred and thirty-four, after the word "States," strike out the following:

"And until the State in which such building is to be completed shall in due form, and in a manner that shall bind such State, release and surrender to the United States jurisdiction over the site of such building."

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundredth amendment:

Line one thousand one hundred and forty-two, strike out the words "any building," and insert in lieu thereof the words "said buildings."

The sentence of the clause, as amended, reads:

That none of the said moneys appropriated for said buildings by this act, &c.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and first amendment:

Page forty-eight, line one thousand one hundred and fifty-six, after the word "mentioned," strike out the words "in this act."

The sentence, as amended, reads:

And the said Secretary of the Treasury shall enter into no contract, either conditional or final for the purposes mentioned, which shall involve an expenditure in any one case beyond the sums appropriated and remaining unexpended for such case.

Mr. FULLER. I now renew the amendment which I offered before. The amendment which I propose is, to increase the sum to $46,601 59, provided that $3,601 59, appropriated by the act approved 30th September, 1850, for repairs and alterations in the custom-house at Castine, in the collection district of Penobscot, be incorporated.

Mr. HOUSTON. If I understand the gentleman, it appears that there is no call for this appropriation from the Department, the Department having at this session of Congress asked for an amount which covers that as well as it is covered by this appropriation. We propose $30,000 to be appropriated for the annual repairs of this custom-house; and it can be applied to this custom-house at Castine as well as to any other; and no doubt it is intended to be in part so applied.

Mr. FULLER. I am not aware of that fact.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I would say to the gentleman from Maine that his proviso could come in at the end of the eleven hundred and eighty-third line. If placed anywhere else, it will not make sense.

Mr. WALSH. Let us take a vote upon it.

Mr. FULLER. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman could not offer his proviso at the end of the eleven hundred and seventy-eighth line.

Mr. STEPHENS. To put it in there would be to qualify the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HAVEN. The gentleman, to accomplish his object, might say, "provided that so much of the sum recommended be appropriated," &c., as he desires.

Mr. FULLER. That is the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As you cannot amend the original text, I would like to know where the proviso comes in?

The CHAIRMAN. It comes in after the words "$43,000."

Mr. JONES. But there is no place to put in a proviso there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let us vote upon it, and vote it down.

Mr. PHELPS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maine that he can accomplish his object by moving to strike out "$43,000," and to insert in lieu thereof "$45,600"—that is, by increasing the Senate amount by the amount which he wishes to have appropriated to his particular purpose.

Mr. JONES. That is not in order, for there is no place to put in the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. JONES. Then you will have to make a place for it; for it does not read with the text.

The CHAIRMAN. If the text does not read well, the Chair is not responsible for it.

Mr. JONES. If you put it in there, you divide the sum appropriated, and insert a proviso in the middle of it.

Mr. HIBBARD. As I understand it, the motion of the gentleman from Maine relates to the custom-house at Castine; and, if it is in order, I desire to oppose that amendment. I refer gentlemen of the committee to Executive document No. 3, page 272, where they will find the finance report of the Secretary of the Treasury. In that report I find that this custom-house at Castine, Maine, was purchased in the year 1852 for $800. An additional site was afterwards purchased of the inhabitants of Hancock county for $400, and the sum of $750 has been expended in repairs. Another part of the report shows that only seven or eight employees have been engaged there. I do not remember the amount of revenue which is collected. It is not very much.

The custom-house, then, cost $1,200 in all, and in addition to that, $750 have been expended for repairs, making in all $1,950. And now the gentleman asks for $3,000 to expend in repairing this custom-house. When this fact is taken into consideration, I should hardly suppose the gentleman would ask for this sum to repair a custom-house which originally cost but $1,200.

[The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. SIDNEY WEBSTER, his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he did on this day approve and sign sundry House bills and joint resolutions.]

A message was also received from the Senate, by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that they had passed bills of the following titles:

An act for the relief of Sherman Price; and

An act to provide for taking charge of the Louisville and Portland canal, and to prevent the same from falling into bad repair.

In which he asked the concurrence of the House.]

The question now being upon Mr. FULLER's amendment, it was taken, and decided in the negative.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate, as amended; and being taken, it was decided in the negative.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and third amendment:

Strike out in the proviso to the clause of the bill, making an appropriation for the completion of the Richmond custom house the words "in due form, and in a manner that shall bind said State, release and surrender to the United States jurisdiction over the site of such building; and shall also," so as to make it read:

Provided, That none of the moneys appropriated for this building in and by this act, or by any former act, and now remaining unexpended, shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned in this act by the Secretary of the Treasury, until a valid title to the land for the site of such building shall be vested in the United States, and until the State of Virginia shall duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way assess said site, or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the said United States shall be, or remain the owner thereof.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and fourth amendment:

Strike out in the twelve hundred and eleventh line the words "in this act," so that the clause would read:

And the said Secretary of the Treasury shall enter into no contract, either conditional or final, for the purpose mentioned, which shall involve an expenditure beyond the sums appropriated and remaining unexpended.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and fifth amendment:

For buildings for the use of the courts of the United States at Pontotoc, Mississippi, $4,000.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment, with the following amendment:

Provided, That said sum shall complete said building; and also the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to make a contract with the proper authorities for furnishing a suitable building for the permanent use and accommodation of the United States district court in holding its sessions at Marietta, Georgia, which contract the said Secretary is hereby authorized to make: Provided, It can be made for the sum aforesaid, or less: And provided, That said contract shall be made with sufficient guarantees to secure to said court a suitable building for holding said court, so long as its sessions may be held at that place, without further charge on the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

One hundred and sixth amendment:

For the erection of a building for a boarding station at Pass a l'Ouvre, Louisiana, $3,500: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the title to the land selected as the site of said building be first secured to the United States.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventh amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase, for the use of the United States, the land and buildings thereon, constituting the boarding station at the southwest pass of the Mississippi river, $3,500: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the title to said land be secured to the United States, and the consent of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana obtained to the release of said land from taxation or assessment of any kind.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and eighth amendment:

For the construction of an appraiser's store on a portion of the square selected for the custom house at San Francisco, California, including the expense of piling for the foundation thereof, by contract or otherwise, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem best $100,000: Provided, That the same restrictions regarding the completion of said work with the sum hereby appropriated, as are contained in this act concerning the erection and completion of custom-houses and marine hospitals, shall be applicable thereto.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. They have a custom-house there, and I should like to have some explanation of this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. There is no such thing known in New York city as an appraiser's building. The room occupied by the appraisers there is not as large as the clerk's room here. I should like to have some explanation of the amendment from the committee?

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia speaks of this amendment in connection with the custom-house. We have just disagreed to vote $160,000 for a custom-house at San Francisco. This is for an appraiser's building.

We are now paying a very large rent, at least a quarter of this amount, for the use of a building for these appraisers. The Committee of Ways and Means, after some hesitation, agreed to recommend a concurrence in the amendment. I can give no other explanation.

Mr. WALSH. What is the object of having an appraiser's building? As I have already said, Mr. Chairman, the appraisers in New York city do the whole of their business in a room smaller than that occupied by the clerks of this House. There is no such thing known in any city of the country as an appraiser's building.

Mr. HAVEN. It is a place where goods are stored to some extent, and where the appraisers inspect them for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are liable to one or other kind of custom.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will say that, by erecting this building, we shall save the heavy rent which we are now forced to pay. In a few years the rent would amount to the present appropriation. We own the ground on which it is proposed to erect this building.

The question then being upon concurring in the Senate amendment,

Mr. LATHAM demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in—ayes forty-eight, noes not counted.

One hundred and ninth amendment:

Strike out the words: "Provided, That before the said purchase is completed, the State of New York shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over said land and property, and shall by law exonerate the same and the property of the United States thereon from all taxes, levies, and assessments thereon, whilst the same remains the property of the United States, $530,000: Provided, however, That no part of this appropriation is to be used until the Secretary of the Treasury has entered into a negotiation with the lessors of the lot in question to get rid of said lease, and also has ascertained upon what terms said lease can be disposed of, and has reported the result of said negotiation to the next session of Congress," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Five hundred and thirty thousand dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from the 15th day of September, 1853, until said purchases shall be completed: Provided, That the same be so completed within one year from the day such interest is hereby authorized to be paid.

And the Secretary of the Treasury, at his discretion, is hereby further authorized to purchase, for the use of the United States, such property adjoining thereto, situated on Pine street, on which the United States now hold a mortgage, as may be sold to satisfy the same, at a price not exceeding the amount of said lien.

So that, as amended, it would read:

For the purchase of the lots or parcels of land, with the appurtenances and the buildings thereon, belonging to the one thereof to the Bank of Commerce, and the other thereof to the Bank of the State of New York, and particularly referred to and described in two contracts: one with each of said banks, for the leasing and right to purchase the same, bearing date the 19th of August, 1853, $530,000, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from the 15th day of September, 1853, until said purchases shall be completed: Provided, That the same be so completed within one year from the day such interest is hereby authorized to be paid.

And the Secretary of the Treasury, at his discretion, is hereby further authorized to purchase, for the use of the United States, such property adjoining thereto, situated on Pine street, on which the United States now hold a mortgage, as may be sold to satisfy the same, at a price not exceeding the amount of said lien.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I am surprised to hear my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] express a willingness to concur in this amendment. The bill was bad enough as it passed this House. There was a provision inserted in it upon my motion to meet the argument that was then made that, at the amount of rent asked, it was cheaper to buy the building than to continue to pay the rent. A provision was inserted by this House to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate and get clear of that lease. The Senate have so amended the bill as not only to strike out this provision of the House to get clear of this enormous contract, but they have added to it by authorizing the purchase of still more land there. I hope that the committee will disagree to the Senate amendment.

I believe in the first instance that the rent was an improvident one, and that the agreement to purchase predicated upon that first error was an improvident one, and as bad as the bill was when before the House. I think the Senate amendment makes it still worse. I hope that the committee will disagree to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As much as the gentleman from Virginia may be surprised to hear me express a willingness to concur in this amendment, he could not be more surprised than I am to find that he opposes the purchase of this property, under all the circumstances. If it is his object to get clear of this lease upon the best terms for the Government, then, in my opinion, the gentleman can accomplish his object by purchasing the property according to the proposition made. He can do it better in that way than he can by selling that lease. It has been shown here, over and over again, that if that lease is to go on for fifteen years, you will have paid more money than the purchase money would amount to by some $295,000. And then, you will have to give up the property; whereas, if you pay this $530,000 now, you will have the use of the property for the fifteen years for which it is leased, and for which you have agreed to pay $795,000; and then, at the end of that term, you will own the property, and can sell it, or dispose of it to the best advantage. Then, if you wish to get rid of the lease, the best and most economical way, I think, is, as the figures demonstrate, to purchase the property under the proposal which you have in this contract.

The gentleman from Virginia says he is surprised, again, that we are not only willing to purchase this property, but that we also wish to buy still another piece. Well, sir, in reply to that, I will say that I suppose the gentleman has heard of the name of Jesse Hoyt, of New York. He became insolvent, being liable to the Government for a large amount; and a mortgage was made by him on this other small piece of property, which is not worth so much as the other; and we are desirous that, when the property comes to be sold under that mortgage, the Secretary of the Treasury may buy it at a price not exceeding the debt for which this mortgage was given.

A MEMBER. How much is it for?

Mr. JONES. It is somewhere about $60,000 or $64,000, with a prior lien upon it of $10,000. And if it is sold now under the mortgage, without authority being vested in the Secretary of the Treasury to buy it, it may be bought up for the $10,000, the amount of the prior lien, and the Government would not get one cent upon the debt which is now a lien upon that piece of property.

Mr. HAVEN. If the gentleman from Tennessee will allow me a moment of his time, I desire to say to the committee in brief, that the House is entirely familiar with the merits of the proposition made by the Senate to strike out. The matter was discussed before, when the appropriation of $530,000 was inserted, and that superseded the necessity of the amendment which we have objected to number seventy-four, and of amendment one hundred and forty-two, which the Committee of Ways and Means have recommended to be stricken out.

Then as to the other clause. I believe the gentleman from Tennessee has sufficiently explained why we chose to purchase the other piece of land. It has no necessary connection with the Mint in any way or shape. There is a mortgage of $10,000 upon it, which is held by some person whom we do not know; and then the United States has got a second mortgage on it for the amount of Jesse Hoyt's defalcations under General Jackson. The property is worth $40,000; but it may be bought up at $10,000, unless the Secretary of the Treasury get authority to bid for it to the amount of the mortgage we have on it. It will then be our property, and we can sell it or use it in whatever way we may choose.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. Do I understand the gentleman from New York as saying that the defalcations of Jesse Hoyt took place under the administration of General Jackson?

Mr. HAVEN. Yes.

Mr. STUART. Not at all. It was under Mr. Van Buren.

Mr. HAVEN. Well, the House can determine about that. I understand that this is the last of Jesse Hoyt's securities, except another small mortgage. He is entirely insolvent; and it is a matter of doubt whether we could get five dollars out of him. We can get nothing except out of this piece of property. It seems to me that this is a full, though brief explanation.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it in order to move to strike out the Senate amendment, and to insert the House proposition?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is the proposition pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would be in order in moving to strike out the Senate amendment.

Mr. FLORENCE. Then I move to strike it out. I was not surprised at the remark made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Jones,] that the Committee of Ways and Means recommended a concurrence in this proposition, but I am surprised that it has indeed ever been brought again into this House after the verdicts which have been given against it three or four times by this House. It will be recollected by the committee that when the first proposition for the establishment of an assay office in the city of New York was made, and when an appropriation was made for that purpose, it was said that it would cover the whole expense. That appropriation was $100,000. I do not believe the House of Representatives are now going to follow the example of Jesse Hoyt in its action upon this appropriation. It would not surprise me if every particle of property in Wall street should be proposed to be bought, before long, for the use of this assay office; for it was said, and prophetically too, when this proposition was first submitted, that it looked to the establishment of a Mint of the United States, and not merely for the establishment of an assay office.

Now, let us look to the property, and let us look to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ROBBINS.] I am told—I do not know, for I have not visited the premises—but I am told that the assay establishment in New York is located in a very narrow street, standing back from the main street, in a narrow alley leading from the custom-house—I state facts as I have heard them—at a place where it is hardly protected from fire; and if the establishments around it should take fire, the whole would be reduced to a mass of ruins. Now, the proposition of my colleague proposes to direct—and very properly too—that the Secretary of the Treasury shall take early means to make a disposition of the property. If it is so valuable, let it be sold. When the original proposition was brought in here, it was said that the city of New York would provide a place for the building of the assay office, or a branch Mint, as it was then said. Well, now, if they are desirous of keeping this assay office among them, why do they not keep their pledge, and present a lot of land to the United States?

The proposition now pending directs the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the property, and to make an arrangement with the lessees, and report the result to the House at the next session of Congress. I submit it to the House, and this committee, in all fairness and equity, whether we will submit to the attempt to dragoon this House into making this enormous and extravagant appropriation? In the first place, if it is in order, I would desire—

Mr. PECKHAM, (interrupting.) I merely desire to ask the gentleman what extravagant appropriation he refers to?

Mr. FLORENCE. The extravagant appropriation of $580,000.

Mr. WALKER, (interrupting.) I wish to advert to one remark made by the gentleman; and that is in reference to the liability of this building to take fire. Now, the building is most emphatically fire-proof in all its parts. It is as thoroughly constructed as any building in the United States, and as fire-proof as stone, brick, and iron can make it.

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not care how thoroughly fire-proof it is, it is impossible, in case of fire, to get access to this building; and furthermore, in case of the burning of the surrounding buildings, the walls would tumble down upon it, and crush it into one mass of ruins.

I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee at this late hour of the session, and I trust this amendment will not be concurred in. The whole question was fairly and freely discussed on a former occasion.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAVEN. I can give no explanation of this amendment, further than has already been given. This proposition has no connection with the assay office at all. It stands by itself, as a single proposition. The only question for the committee to decide is, whether they will allow this property, which is worth $45,000, to go, rather than pay this prior claim, which will secure it to the Government?

Mr. FULLER. Why did the Committee of Ways and Means recommend to strike out the proviso at the end of the provision for the assay office?

Mr. HAVEN. Because the authority of the State of New York has been already ceded. That is the only reason. Now, sir, I have no more to say upon this subject. I hope the committee will not longer discuss it, but come at once to a vote. It is a matter of no consequence to the city of New York whether the committee concur or non-concur in the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will simply make one remark to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FLORENCE,] who also seems surprised that I should support this amendment. Sir, the gentleman may recollect that on a former occasion, when it was proposed to purchase a certain marble palace in Chestnut street, Philadelphia, that I supported that proposition. I voted for it because I thought it was right, because the Government needed the building, and because it could be obtained upon better terms than they could obtain any other building that would answer the purpose equally well.

Mr. FLORENCE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I move the following amendment:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to purchase a site, and contract for the construction of a custom-house at Nashville, Tennessee, to include accommodations for a post-office and United States court room, at a cost not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars, and to be paid only out of any net revenues which may arise out of customs duties to be collected at that port within the next four years.

Mr. FLORENCE. I submit that that amendment is not germane to the proposition under consideration. I submit that it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not in order.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I had supposed that amendment would not be decided as germane to any appropriations in this bill; but, sir, I have seen various amendments offered and received, making appropriations for the establishment of custom-houses, both in this House and in the Senate. I would now be glad if the committee would indulge me in a short statement in reference to this amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I rise to a question of order. I want to know whether the amendment offered by the gentleman is in order? If it is, I have an amendment to offer to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is not in order, upon the ground that it is not germane to the subject under consideration.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Not germane to the bill itself, or not germane to the particular item under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. To the item under consideration.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I suppose the amendment is still open to amendment. I move to strike out from the twelve hundred and ninety-sixth line to the thirteen hundred and first, inclusive, as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury, at his discretion, is hereby further authorized to purchase, for the use of the United States, such property adjoining thereto, situated on Pine street, on which the United States now hold a mortgage, as may be sold to satisfy the same, at a price not exceeding the amount of said lien.

I desire to strike out this provision, because I have yet heard no reason advanced to show why we should make this appropriation for the purchase of this additional lot. As well satisfied as I have been from the beginning, that the lease and contingent purchase of the first lot was improvident, I am still more satisfied that this is so. I have heard no reason assigned for the purchase of this second lot, except that there are two liens upon the property; first, to a private individual, and, secondly, to the United States; and it has been said here in debate, that unless there is some provision made to enable us to purchase it at the price of the first lien, it may be bid off for a less price to some private individual, and the Government will not only not get the lot, but will not get anything.

Now, sir, has it come to this, that in the great city of New York lots cannot bring their value, especially in Wall street, until the Government, by appropriation, is made one of the bidders. Without questioning the accuracy of the information of the gentleman from New York and others, it strikes me that there is no necessity for creating a bidder for a lot so near the assay office as this will be by appropriation, in order to make it bring its value under the lien which is on it.

Mr. HAVEN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that is a portion of the business for which I never asked. I have no particular fancy for one way or the other. If the gentleman and the committee think that the interests of the country may be better protected by letting it go as it is, I am willing the amendment shall be stricken out.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not think that the Government wants the lot at any price; and I do not think there is any occasion for this Government being made a bidder at vendue in order that we may make a little money by running the property up. I do not think that it is a proper business for this Government to go into speculation in town lots.

Mr. PECKHAM. Where a party has a lien on property, is it not the general practice to give directions that at the sale it shall not be sacrificed to the injury of that lien? Is not that the universal practice all over the country?

Mr. BAYLY. That is a question it would take long to go into. There may be some question about the legality of it, and I could argue the question with the gentleman, if the proper occasion arose. But whether that be proper in the case of individuals or not, there is no occasion for the Government going there with authority to run up the price of a lot in such a city as New York. But I doubt the propriety, or the legality, even, among individuals, of the thing to which my friend refers.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Virginia says that there has been no reason given for the purchase of this additional strip of land. I do not care much about it. If the committee wish to strike it out, very well; but let us get along with the bill. I think that there are reasons why this amendment should not be stricken out. That property is immediately adjoining the New York custom-house. It also adjoins the property for which we have a lease, and the purchase of which we have authorized by this bill. Gentlemen who have looked into the subject, I presume that I may venture to say, are compelled to admit that the accommodations of the custom-house at New York city are not enough for the business there by one third. You have your custom-house officers crowded, three and half a dozen in one room not large enough to accommodate one half the number. I saw these things myself. Even, Mr. Chairman, if this lot be not necessary to us now, how long will it be before the growing business of that great city will make it necessary? How long will it be before you will not only need that, but other lots? Now you have an opportunity of securing this lot under favorable circumstances. You have a lien on the property, a second lien to be sure; but the property is worth some $45,000. The first lien is only for $8,000 or $10,000. If the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to become a bidder at the sale, he cannot only protect the interests of the Government in the collection of the debt, but he may purchase under favorable circumstances the property for which he may some day or other, if you do not purchase it now, be compelled to pay ten times what we may not get it for.

The question was taken upon Mr. BAYLY's amendment; and it was rejected.

The Senate amendment was then concurred in.

One hundred and tenth amendment:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to appoint some suitable person to act as inspector of drugs and medicines for the port of San Francisco, in the State of California, at an annual compensation of $3,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and eleventh amendment:

For prosecuting operations on the marine hospital at Portland, in the State of Maine, $50,000.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. MACDONALD. I propose to increase the amount $1,000.

I simply desire to call the attention of the committee to what appears to me to be a very strange thing in this bill, although I do not know that I am correct in my opinion. It will be noticed in this bill that marine hospitals at various points are provided for, commencing at Cleveland; and in House document No. 2 you will find that the Secretary of the Treasury recommends appropriations for the completion of marine hospitals at Cleveland, at St. Louis, at Chicago, &c., all of which are included in this bill. In the same document, on page 46, the Secretary recommends appropriations for the completion of the marine hospitals at Vicksburg, at Portland, and at Cincinnati.

What strikes me as most singular in the bill is, that the proposition to continue the work at Vicksburg is authorized and provided for, or, in other words, they have complied with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury in each particular case, excepting in the city of Portland. I suppose the Committee of Ways and Means can explain it, but I can hardly understand why it is so. There are no hospital accommodations east of Boston. At Portland we are exposed to the hardships of a severe winter, and if there is any place upon the Atlantic coast where the sailor needs protection, and where he is exposed to hardship and disease, it is at this very city of Portland: In commercial importance Portland is the seventh or eighth port in the whole country. I hope that the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means will be disregarded. The Government already own a site there. Shall it be occupied or not? If it is to be occupied, we must have some money to put up a building. If it is not to be occupied, you had better direct the site to be sold.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 1, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 129.

Mr. LETCHER. I am opposed to this amendment, and I am opposed to all other amendments that may be offered to this bill. We have but a few days more of this session left to dispose of this and other bills. It is perfectly manifest, I think, from what has occurred in this House, and from the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury, and from what has occurred in the other wing of the Capitol, that the thirty millions surplus is to be spent, and I think we can get along just as well, and probably as profitably, if we vote in all these propositions, and be done with them, and let the money go.

Mr. MACDONALD, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the sum fifty dollars. I desire to say that we appropriated, during the last Congress, $30,000 or $40,000 for the purpose of purchasing a site for the marine hospital in the city of Portland. That site, I believe, has been purchased, and now it is proposed to appropriate something for erecting the hospital thereon; that is, to carry out the original object which Congress had in view in making an appropriation for the site. And it was, by the slightest accident, occasioned by the absence of the gentleman who had the matter in charge at the time the bill was originally in the House, that the appropriation was not made when the other appropriations were made. If he had been here this appropriation would undoubtedly have gone through as a matter of course; as it would have passed easily on its merits.

There is now no marine hospital in the country east of Boston. It is known that there is a vast number of sailors in that region of country. A large proportion of these sailors come from the Provinces, and from the State of Maine. The hospital in Boston is at this time crowded and over crowded. It is more than full, and the question arose in the Committee of Ways and Means at the last Congress, whether we should make the hospital of Boston larger than it was, and make an additional appropriation for increasing and repairing it, or whether we should build a new one in the State of Maine. And it was decided, I believe, upon the recommendation of the honorable member from Boston, that it would be better, instead of having a hospital too large and overgrown, to have more of them, and among them one in Maine; that it would be better to have one in Maine than to have a large single one in Boston. Upon his recommendation, a gentleman who knew, perhaps, better than any other man in this House, what the wants of the country require, the appropriation of last year was made. It was made for the purpose of having another hospital on the northeast coast, for the reason that it would be a saving to the Government, and a saving to the sailor. The sailor would then have a hospital near to the place where he is disabled, and where such accommodations are required. Then he would not have to beset the long distance from the Bay of Fundy or the coast of Halifax to Boston. It was for that reason that the Committee of Ways and Means last year recommended an appropriation in favor of that object, and an appropriation was made. All we ask for now is simply an appropriation to carry on the operations, and that would have been granted when this bill was under consideration before the House on a former occasion, if the gentlemen who had charge of this matter had been in the House at the time to offer the proposition. I understand that the only reason why the Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a non-concurrence in this Senate amendment is, that they came to the conclusion to have no more hospitals if they could prevent it.

Mr. HIBBARD. In the year 1852 Congress appropriated $30,000 for this marine hospital. The site was purchased for $11,000, as appears from the finance report of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary, however, says:

"This selection not being considered judicious, a second commission has been appointed to select another site. Their recommendation has not yet been acted upon."

Here, then, is an appropriation of $30,000, of which $11,000 has been paid for a site, which has been pronounced an injudicious one, and a recommendation has been made to change it. Nineteen thousand dollars remains in the Treasury in no-wise expended for any purpose. It seems to me, admitting for the sake of the argument—which I do not admit in fact—that it is desirable to have an appropriation, that there is money enough appropriated for present purposes, for we have the original amount of $30,000 which was appropriated, and nothing really done which is proposed to be done, for it must be remembered that it is recommended to give up the site already purchased. Nothing appears to show what the new site, proposed to be purchased, will cost. There is no report upon the subject. The recommendations have been too liberal, in our opinion, and though they have been most liberal, we still are asked for this appropriation of $50,000. Now, in the city of New York, the center of all the commercial transactions of our country, there is no marine hospital, and the people do not want one there. They have entered into a better system, which is to support the patients at private boarding houses.

Mr. WALSH. In the city of New York the Government pays for such sick sailors as may be there, the sum of three dollars per week for board at the city hospital.

Mr. HIBBARD. We have made appropriations for hospitals where there were no patients, and where there never will be. I admit that I, for one, am against this whole system; at least to the enlargement of the system, as is now proposed to be done. I do not say that there should be no marine hospitals, but I say it is worse than folly to scatter them about in places where there are patients ranging in number only from one up to ten and twelve a year, as the report before me shows. I hope the committee will make no appropriation for this point. I do not think there is any need for it at all.

Mr. WASHBURN's amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move to increase the appropriation ten dollars, for the purpose of saying a word in reference to this subject.

I find, from Senate document No. 2, that there are marine hospitals at Chelsea, near Boston; Norfolk, Virginia; Ocracoke, North Carolina; Cleveland, Ohio; Chicago, Illinois; Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Louisville, Kentucky; Paducah, Kentucky; Natchez, Mississippi; New Orleans, Louisiana; Mobile, Alabama; and Key West, Florida. Appropriations have been made for such establishments at Napoleon, Arkansas; Vicksburg, Mississippi; Evansville, Indiana; Portland, Maine; San Francisco, California.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and at one half of these places a sailor would be regarded as great a curiosity as a native of Kamschatka.

Mr. WASHBURN. That may all be true. I believe there are a good many of the locations of these marine hospitals which were badly selected. But, sir, such is not the case with reference to Portland. I venture to say there are no ports in the United States, with the exception of Boston, New York, New Orleans, and San Francisco, where there are so many sick and disabled seamen who need to be taken care of as at Portland. And whatever necessity there may be or may not be at other locations, whether marine hospitals have been injudiciously erected or not, I say, that if they are to exist anywhere, there should be one at Portland.

Mr. HIBBARD. If the gentleman will allow me, there is a marine hospital at Pittsburg, and there are no patients there at all.

Mr. WASHBURN. That may all be; and if it is so, a marine hospital should not have been placed there. But, sir, I repeat, that because some of these hospitals have been placed in improper locations, is no reason why such institutions should not be established where they are necessary. I say that one is very much needed at Portland, and the fact is well known to this committee.

Now, in reference to the argument of the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD,] that a site has already been purchased, I will state that a site was purchased for $11,000; but it was afterwards ascertained that it was an improper one, and a part of this appropriation is to be applied for the purchase of a new site.

Mr. MACDONALD. If my colleague will allow me, I will state that he is under a misapprehension in reference to this site for a marine hospital in Portland. He states correctly that a site was originally purchased for the construction of a marine hospital. An objection was made to it, and the Secretary of the Treasury ordered the operations to be suspended on that account. But, upon further examination, the objection has been since removed. The site is regarded as a good one, and there is no purpose to obtain any other.

Mr. WASHBURN. Well, sir, then there is no reason why they should not go on and complete the hospital. I think if the committee will look at the facts as they exist in reference to this case, they will not fail to agree to this amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am opposed to this amendment, and ask that a vote may be taken upon it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will withdraw my amendment, if there be no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question then recurred upon concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HENDRICKS and WALKER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in, the tellers having reported—ayes 77, noes 47.

One hundred and twelfth amendment:

To provide a suitable building as a marine hospital at St. Marks, Florida, $5,000.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. MAXWELL. I move to increase the appropriation five dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee simply to the necessity for an appropriation for a hospital at St. Marks. I thought that the modesty of the request, if nothing else, would have commended it to the favor of the Committee of Ways and Means. We only ask $5,000 for a suitable building as a marine hospital at this place; and if there be a necessity for a marine hospital anywhere in the United States, we can claim that it is necessary at St. Marks. It is exposed to all the epidemics which rage on the southern coast during the summer and fall. Trade between that point and New York, Boston, and other northern cities, commences before these diseases have worn away.

We have no interest of our own in this matter. We have no seamen to provide for in these hospitals. The seamen to be provided for come from your northern ports, and thus become exposed and subject to diseases which carry them off, as many were carried off during the past season; for at this little place the loss by death was greater in proportion to the population than in the city of New Orleans, where the epidemic raged to such a fearful extent during the last season. With these facts before the committee, I am sure that they will not refuse this modest appropriation of $5,000 to build a hospital for seamen at that port.

I hope, therefore, that the committee will concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The question was taken on Mr. MAXWELL's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to amend the amendment, by inserting after the word "Florida" the words "Darien, Georgia," and at the end of the word "dollars," adding the word "each."

The amendment, if so amended, would read:

To provide a suitable building as a marine hospital at St. Marks, Florida, and Darien, Georgia, $5,000 each.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I ask the Chair whether that amendment is in order or not? There is no law authorizing the erection of a marine hospital at Darien.

The CHAIRMAN. The same reason which applied to the gentleman's amendment for the marine hospital at Savannah, applies also to this. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. SEWARD. I should like to know the reason why it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. SEWARD. Yes, sir; I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SEWARD] offers an amendment to the amendment providing for the erection of a suitable building for a marine hospital at Darien, Georgia, and increasing the appropriation. The Chair rules the amendment out of order, because there is no law authorizing the erection of any such building. The gentleman from Georgia appeals from the decision of the Chair ruling his amendment out of order. The question will be: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. SEWARD. I would like to state my reason for appealing from the decision of the Chair. I understand that there is no law providing for a marine hospital at St. Marks, Florida, any more than at Darien. I think, therefore, that my amendment is germane to the amendment of the Senate.

The question being on the appeal taken by the gentleman from Georgia,

Mr. SEWARD asked for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The question recurred on the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. COBB demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KERR and BOGOCOCK were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 50.

So the Senate's amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirteenth amendment:

Page fifty-five, line thirteen hundred and thirty, under the head of "marine hospital," insert the following:

To provide accommodations for sick and disabled seamen at Cincinnati, Ohio, $50,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to use such part of said sum for the purchase of a site for a marine hospital at said place as he may deem expedient.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to offer an amendment to the Senate amendment. I move to strike out all after the word "seamen," and insert in lieu thereof the following words: "upon the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, $50,000;" so as to make the clause read:

To provide accommodations for sick and disabled seamen upon the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, $50,000.

The part of the clause which I propose to strike out provides for the erection of a marine hospital in the city of Cincinnati. Of all the places upon our western waters I consider a marine hospital at that point unnecessary, on account of the facts which were presented in debate here this morning, that in private hospitals disabled seamen can be accommodated much more easily and cheaply to the Government than they can be by the construction of a public hospital. If there is any place upon the Mississippi river, or in the whole western country, where it is desirable that a public hospital should be erected, it is at Memphis; for that is the highest point upon the Mississippi where the fevers of the southern gulf coast do not reach, and at that point all sick seamen would naturally disembark. You find, in fact, that hardly one of them is willing to stop at Napoleon, where the Government of the United States went to a heavy expense in the erection of a hospital. The result is, that a number of these men are thrown upon Memphis at a great expense to them, though I am happy to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has been in the habit of furnishing accommodations to those seamen by an expenditure of a part of the fund at his command at the private and public hospitals at that place. It is of more importance that this money should be expended there than at any other point lower upon the Mississippi river, and it is nothing more than right that a portion of these expenditures should be appropriated to that part of the river.

The committee will perceive that this amendment is not for boatmen upon the river, but for sick and disabled seamen. But whether it relates to boatmen or not, it is right and proper that this sum should be expended, not at Cincinnati alone, but that it should be distributed at all the important points of the river, and especially below the city of Cincinnati, where the largest number of men engaged on the ocean and river are always to be found in a disabled and sick condition.

Mr. DISNEY. I feel very certain, that if the members of this committee were aware precisely of the state of facts in regard to the sick and disabled boatmen, or seamen—for that is the term used in this amendment, and that is the phraseology always used in reference to our river boatmen, as well as to seamen proper—I repeat, if the members of this committee were familiar with the state of these boatmen at Cincinnati, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee would not have been offered by him. Now, one word in regard to the gentleman's argument. There is force in it, if it were applicable to the city of Cincinnati. Heretofore, the private hospitals of that city have taken care of these men, and the Government has been enabled to avoid the expense, responsibility, and cost of the erection of a public building for that specific purpose.

The directors of these local hospitals have given the Government notice that they cannot longer take care of this class of persons. At the commencement of the present session of Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury recommended the appropriation which the amendment of the Senate calls for. This appropriation is necessary, because, as I have said, there are no public accommodations for taking care of the sick and disabled seamen who arrive there. Sir, there is not a port in the whole country where a marine hospital is more needed than one there.

Any one who is at all acquainted with the facts knows that these buildings have been constructed up and down the Mississippi river without regard to the wants of the localities which were selected. The number of sick and disabled boatmen who land at Cincinnati exceeds four times that at any marine hospital upon the Mississippi river, with the exception, perhaps, of New Orleans alone. You have located your hospitals at the wrong places. But because they have been located at the wrong places, where there are no patients to accommodate, is that any argument why you should not establish one at a point where the boatmen do come, and where they need to be accommodated?

The Government is now actually reduced to the necessity of letting out the taking care of these sick and disabled boatmen to the lowest bidder. At this time a party has contracted to take care of these boatmen, and no hospital can be obtained for their accommodation. They are placed in mere ordinary buildings—in common residences. There is no alternative left but to adopt this course, or turn them into the streets. The Government has no other means of protecting them. Such is the condition of affairs in that city at this time. I have no personal interest in the matter, except to see proper provision made for those boatmen. It is not an appropriation which is asked for specially by the city of Cincinnati; but it is needed by the boatmen; and if the facts were properly understood, there would be no objection to this amendment.

Sir, this is a proper provision for a general appropriation bill. Appropriations have been made for this work under existing laws. Such appropriations have been inserted in other appropriation bills which have passed this House.

So stands the case, and the committee must judge for itself whether they will allow the appropriation to be made. As I remarked, the taking care of those sick and disabled seamen is now done by contract by parties who occupy ordinary residences, and take the patients as a matter of speculation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STANTON's amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to increase the amount contained in the Senate's amendment $1,000.

Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment for the purpose of saying, that if gentlemen will look in House miscellaneous document, page eleven, they will see that the Secretary of the Treasury recommends this appropriation for the reason that the sick and disabled seamen, who land at Cincinnati, cannot be properly taken care of, unless further provisions be made for their accommodation. I simply ask that gentlemen will look to the miscellaneous document, to which I have referred, and see the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the reasons for making them, in reference to this appropriation. I think the House will concur in the amendment of the Senate, if they will look for a moment at the important position of that great city. Sir, Cincinnati does not ask for this appropriation. The State of Ohio does not ask it. But the Secretary of the Treasury, under the best advice he can get, says it is absolutely necessary, in order properly to take care of the sick and disabled seamen at that point. Sir, the Ohio river has thousands of miles of navigation, and, with the Mississippi river, it has five thousand miles navigation.

And here I take occasion to say that the State of Ohio asks for nothing of the General Government except what its officers deem necessary for the best interests of the United States. She is an interior State, having a population of two million inhabitants, and paying one twelfth of the $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 revenue of the Government. She does not ask for a dollar beyond what is asked as necessary. Cincinnati is a city of two hundred and fifty thousand or three hundred thousand inhabitants, and deals with five million of people. Ohio is a State having $300,000,000 of taxable property, and notwithstanding she pays one twelfth of the revenue of the Government; men are found to oppose a small appropriation of $50,000 to take care of sick and disabled seamen there. Having appropriated for Vicksburg, St. Louis, Chicago, and other places in the West, I say that this committee will do itself injustice in withholding this small appropriation of $50,000 to take care of sick and disabled boatmen who navigate the five thousand miles of your western waters. Give this sum for the benefit of the boatmen of the United States who manage the steamers, flat-boats, and rafts of your western waters. What is $50,000 to a State which contributes one twelfth of your revenue?

We do not ask it for ourselves. We ask it for the western boatmen. We ask it because the Secretary of the Treasury has said that it is necessary. We ask it because he says there will be no accommodation there after the 1st day of July, 1854, for the sick and disabled seamen. They are now quartered in the medical college at so much per head. This amendment is recommended by the Department as one eminently entitled to the favor of the Government.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, not because I do not think that an appropriation is necessary for sick and disabled seamen at Cincinnati; but I think that these appropriations should be made for places all along the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. I know that a large proportion of these men are to be found in a sick and disabled condition at Cincinnati; but that is not the only place, and there is no reason why appropriation should be solely confined to it. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY,] that the western marine hospitals are placed on wrong sites. I think there is nothing more certain than the correctness of that position. You cannot get a seaman to disembark at Napoleon, if he happens to fall sick at that point. He knows that the hospital may be three or ten feet under water. At least the adjoining ground may be submerged, and he cannot expect anything but death. And, in my judgment, that hospital ought not to be at that point.

I have no doubt that at Cincinnati, Memphis, and other places, private accommodations of a proper character may be found. Nevertheless, I should be perfectly willing to see an hospital built at Cincinnati, for I believe that to be one of the proper places. At the same time I am bound to say that it is equally right and equally indispensable that one should be located at Memphis, or at least that an appropriation should be made to accommodate the sick and disabled seamen there. It is as necessary to have an hospital there as at Cincinnati.

Mr. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. DISNEY. I move to increase the amount of appropriation five dollars. I do it in order that I may make a simple statement of facts which I had intended to present to the committee, when my time so suddenly expired. Gentlemen will find, in turning over the reports of these institutions, that while at some of the marine hospitals in these western waters, the number of patients is sometimes five, ten, or fifteen, and in others, sometimes forty a year; there has been, upon an average, in the hospital at Cincinnati, something like four hundred. Gentlemen talk about the necessity of hospitals at Memphis, and other places. But when boatmen get sick they go to a great commercial city like Cincinnati, where they can find employment when they get convalescent. You will find them there every year, and they far outnumber the patients at all the other hospitals put together. The Secretary of the Treasury has made a specific recommendation that you should make this allowance. As to these seamen being provided for in the hospitals conducted by private enterprise, they go into the business as a matter of speculation, and if they find it unprofitable, then these poor sick invalids will be cast out. The local institutions are not capable of accommodating them, and they have refused to do so.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am opposed to the amendment. The appropriations for new marine hospitals and custom-houses will amount to something over $3,000,000 at a fair calculation.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would inquire what the amount of the appropriation in the whole bill is?

Mr. HOUSTON. It is more than $16,000,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. What a petty amount is appropriated for marine hospitals upon the western waters!

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not intend to discuss the propriety of making the particular appropriation under consideration. The appropriations made for new marine hospitals, and new custom-houses in this bill, over and above the amount in the bill when it went from the House, will amount to more than $3,000,000. I presume from the votes given here this morning, that these amendments are all going into the bill. If gentlemen are going to put them in, let them do it at once and speedily.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred upon concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. DISNEY demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KERR and WESTBROOK were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes not counted.

So the Senate's amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and fourteenth amendment:

For life-boats, and other means of rendering assistance to shipwrecked mariners and others, on the coast of the United States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000. For the purchase of metallic surf-boats to rescue lives and property, and to be located at each of the following ports, $12,500, viz: On the east side of Lake Michigan, at Michigan city, one; New Buffalo, one; St. Joseph, one; Kalamazoo, one; Manistee, one; Grand River, one; Muskegon, one; Pier Marquette, one; and South Black River, one. And on the west side of Lake Michigan, at Chicago, two; Kenosha, one; Milwaukee, one; Sheboygan, one; Death's Door, one; Two Rivers, one; Manitowoc, one; Waukegan, one; Racine, one; Port Washington, one; Washington Harbor, one; South Manitou Island, one; Kalley's Harbor, one; and at Calumet, one; or at such other points as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury; who shall also adopt such measures as shall be necessary for the preservation of such boats.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means propose an amendment to that section, the main point of which is to strike out part of the appropriation, inasmuch as it is duplicated in the bill. The amendment strikes out that portion which proposes to locate the boats at certain points, and leaves that to the Secretary of the Treasury. On application to the Secretary of the Treasury, the gentleman who give security for these boats can have them at any points they desire.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words in lines thirteen hundred and sixty-eight, sixty-nine and seventy, and to the word "dollars" in line thirteen hundred and seventy-one, "For life-boats and other means of rendering assistance to shipwrecked mariners and others, on the coast of the United States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000."

After the word "at" in line thirteen hundred and seventy-three, strike out the words "each of the following ports, $12,500, viz: On the east side of Lake Michigan, at Michigan City, one; New Buffalo, one; St. Joseph, one; Kalamazoo, one; Manistee, one; Grand River, one; Muskegon, one; White River, one; Pier Marquette, one; and South Black River, one. And on the west side of Lake Michigan, at Chicago, two; Kenosha, one; Milwaukee, one; Sheboygan, one; Death's Door, one; Two Rivers, one; Manitowoc, one; Waukegan, one; Racine, one; Port Washington, one; Washington Harbor, one; South Manitou Island, one; Kalley's Harbor, one; and at Calumet, one; or,"

And in line one thousand three hundred and eighty-four, strike out the word "other;" and after the word "boats," in line one thousand three hundred and eighty-seven, insert: "but no part of the money shall be paid to persons having care or charge of any of said boats, but the same shall be kept by the person or persons in whose care they shall be placed by the Secretary of the Treasury, without expense to the United States;" so that the amendment shall read:

For life-boats, and other means of rendering assistance to shipwrecked mariners and others, on the coast of the United States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000. For the purchase of metallic surf-boats, to rescue lives and property, and to be located at such points as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall also adopt such measures as shall be necessary for the preservation of such boats; but no part of the money shall be paid, &c.

Mr. HAVEN. That leaves the appropriations substantially as it finds them now. It proposes to strike out the specific localities, and leaves the Secretary of the Treasury to distribute these boats as, in his judgment, he deems best. But it further provides that no part of this money shall be paid to compensate any persons who keep these boats. The way that thing is done now, or the way in which it ought to be done, is, that commercial men, at points upon the lakes, and upon the sea-coast, make application, by letter, to the Secretary of the Treasury, for boats. The Secretary says to them: Give me a bond for $1,000, and I will send you a boat, and you shall take care of it, and use it for the benefit of commerce, and pay the expenses attending the keeping of it up. Business men, interested in navigation, do not ask to make this a charge upon the Government. If the Government will give them a boat, it is all they ask.

Mr. WALLEY. I agree entirely with the argument of my friend from New York, but not in the latter part of his amendment; and I agree in his statements, so far as they are correct; but it is my misfortune to have to correct his statement in part, so far as it relates to the first part of the amendment contained between lines thirteen hundred and sixty-eight and thirteen hundred and seventy-one, which he says is a reduplication of the previous clause which was passed in the bill as it went from the House originally.

I am in the possession of facts in reference to this matter, which I will state for the consideration of the committee. The truth of the matter is, that I was requested to have an appropriation made in behalf of an association in the city, which I have the honor, in part, to represent, to be applied for this very purpose stated in the Senate amendment. I so stated to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in this House. He advised me to have the amendment put on in the Senate. I went to see the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, and he assured me that he would attend to it. The Committee on Commerce, however, objected to making the appropriation in the form I proposed, because they did not want to admit the name of an association in the bill. They said that a general appropriation had been made, but that they would add to the appropriation which the House had recommended to the Senate, to be expended under the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. HAVEN. How much was it?

Mr. WALLEY. Ten thousand dollars. It was so stated to the committee, and the committee recommended it, and I have the authority of one of the members of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate—I refer to Mr. STUART, of Michigan—for saying that the committee intended it as an appropriation in addition to that which the House had placed in the bill. They did it in consideration of the facts urged in the memorial to which I have referred, and which one of my colleagues in the Senate presented to the Senate from the association of merchants in Boston.

Mr. HAVEN. The original amount in the bill is $10,000 for this purpose. Then follows the Senate substitute, substantially the same as that contained in the original bill, except adding thereto the words "to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury." That the Committee of Ways and Means propose to strike out.

Then there is a further appropriation, placed in the bill by the Senate, of $12,500, which the Committee of Ways and Means propose to leave in the bill. So that, in addition to the usual appropriation of $10,000—striking out the duplicate $10,000—we have $12,500 more than has heretofore been appropriated.

Mr. WALLEY. Exactly, as I stated to the committee. There was an appropriation of $10,000 put into the bill by the House for light-boats, as a means of rendering assistance to wrecked mariners, and which had no reference to the association of merchants. The committee put in $10,000 more; and it was founded upon the fact, that upon our coast last fall there was an immense destruction of property and life. Hundreds of lives were lost last December. Heretofore an association of merchants have had charge of this matter.

The provision has been made several times by the State Legislature of Massachusetts. But, sir, I ask gentlemen to remember that the proposition made here for life-boats will not touch the coast of Massachusetts. That provision has reference to the wants of the lake coast exclusively, and will not touch our coast. There is a provision for the coast of New Jersey and that of Long Island; and that is all. It was but a short time since that a ship was cast away upon our coast, and many lives lost, that could have been saved if these life-boats had been there.

Mr. HAVEN. I will simply say, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that we put $10,000 into another bill for this purpose. The committee did not want to duplicate the provision, and, therefore, they recommended that it should be stricken out.

Mr. WALLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman in what other bill the provision of which he speaks has been inserted?

Mr. HAVEN. In the light-house bill.

Mr. WALLEY. That was not in reference to the Massachusetts coast at all.

Mr. HAVEN. Yes, sir; it applied to the whole coast, from Maine to California.

Mr. WALLEY. I desire to ask a division of the question before the entire amendment of the Senate is disposed of. I have no objection to the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means being adopted in reference to the last portion of the amendment; but I hope the first portion will be retained. I ask the Chair whether the question is divisible?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the question may be divided.

Mr. WALLEY. Then I ask that the question may be first taken upon concurring in the following clause:

For life-boats, and other means of rendering assistance to shipwrecked mariners and others, on the coast of the United States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000.

Mr. SKELTON. Is that amendment debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The first portion of the Senate amendment was then non-concurred in.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I do not know that the committee fully understand the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question has been decided.

Mr. STUART. Do I understand that the $10,000 is to be stricken out, and that the $12,500 is to be distributed over the whole coast of the United States?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

Mr. SKELTON. Would it be in order to move to amend that portion of the amendment proposed to be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SKELTON. I move to increase the appropriation to $11,000.

Mr. Chairman, I have moved the amendment with a view of presenting some facts to the committee which I have learned in my examination of the subject. There is an appropriation in the light-house appropriation bill for the coasts of New Jersey and Long Island; but it does not meet the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury by some $30,000. The life-boats located on the coasts of New Jersey and Long Island have been in use for six years, and the number of lives saved by them during the last year was more than two thousand seven hundred. The many shipwrecks and disasters which have occurred on our coasts of late loudly call for an extension of the life-boat system which has been so successfully begun. By it many lives and a large amount of property have been saved. As I have said, the appropriations do not meet the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury by some $30,000. I think, since protection has been so successfully afforded on the New Jersey and Long Island coasts, that it should be extended to all the other coasts of the country.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. Is it in order to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. But the gentleman may oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SKELTON, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. STUART. I move to amend by increasing the appropriation to $12,000. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the amendment of the gentleman from New York, it is to strike out the item of $10,000 in the first clause of the Senate's amendment, which will leave the $12,500, now provided for Lake Michigan, to be distributed at his discretion over the entire coast of the United States.

Mr. SKELTON. Except the coast of New Jersey and Long Island?

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir. It will then give only $12,500 for the Atlantic, Gulf, Pacific and Lake coasts of the United States. The Senate's amendment provides $10,000 for the New England, Gulf and Pacific coasts, and then adds $12,500 for the coast of Lake Michigan. Now I cannot speak with the certainty of statistical information, which gentlemen do, who reside on the Atlantic coast, as to the necessity of the appropriation there, but I do know the urgent necessity which exists for this appropriation for life-boats for the coast of Lake Michigan. Every year, sir, closes with a record of the loss of thousands upon thousands of property destroyed on the coasts of that lake. A large amount of this property might be saved by these surf-boats, which could reach and remove from stranded vessels, at least the money and valuables, before they have gone to pieces.

But, sir, that is comparatively of trifling consequence. Assuredly, the bills of mortality are swelled with the names of scores of our best and bravest seamen, who meet an untimely fate upon that perilous sea. Sympathy and tears for their misfortunes, sir, are the impulses of humanity; but to provide such measures of safety as will best protect them against a recurrence of such misfortunes, is the duty of legislation; this is the substantial aid and comfort they demand—this they are entitled to—to do less is but to mock at their calamity. Sir, a great proportion of these valuable lives may be saved by this appropriation. It is upon the coasts of this lake that the danger is most imminent; and these life-boats properly distributed, cannot but prove useful in rescuing many a shipwrecked mariner from a watery grave. Where is the man with the sensibilities of humanity, who would not even himself, from his private fortune, cheerfully pay the value of any of these boats, if, in a moment of peril, he could thus save a fellow man; and, sir, will this committee, will the Congress of the United States, withhold this trifling appropriation, pitiful and small as it is, in the list of fifty odd millions of dollars, which are to be expended by this Government for other purposes? And yet, more especially, shall it be withheld from the northwest, an important region of the country, which, as yet, has no share, even to the value of a single dime, in this schedule of appropriations.

Sir, we have paid into the Treasury our full proportion of the money and surplus which now swells its coffers. It has been drawn from the hard earnings of an industrious, virtuous, frugal, and patriotic people; it has been paid without grudge and without complaint; it has resulted in fertilizing the barren hills of New England and the eastern States, and we now claim only a small share of what is our own, in common with other portions of the Republic, not as mendicants at the door of the Treasury, but as a right.

Mr. Chairman, there are few appropriations proposed to Congress which are less exceptionable, or which promise greater good than this, and I believe the generous emotions of the committee will combine with their sense of justice and right, and that the amendments of the Senate will be agreed to.

[The committee here rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate by Mr. DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that they insisted upon their disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 388) entitled "An act authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia," and agreed to the conference asked by the House, upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the same, and have appointed Mr. BRIGHT, Mr. TOUCHEY, and Mr. FISH, the managers at the said conference on their part.]

Mr. HAVEN. I am desirous of bringing this matter to a vote as soon as possible, but I am fearful that the committee do not understand the precise action of the Committee of Ways and Means. I sympathize with my friend from Michigan [Mr. STUART] in reference to all he says about the Northwest, so far as that matter is concerned. He concedes that an appropriation of $12,500 for that section of the country is made. There is no complaint in reference to that, but the only complaint is in reference to striking out the first portion of the amendment.

The text of the bill was as follows:

"For life-boats and other means of rendering assistance to wrecked mariners and others on the coast of the United States, $10,000."

That is the usual appropriation which has been made in all previous bills.

The amendment of the Senate reads as follows:

"For life boats and other means of rendering assistance to shipwrecked mariners and others on the coast of the United States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000."

I suppose that appropriation would apply to the Northwest coast as much as it would apply to the Atlantic.

Mr. STUART. But, if that Senate clause is stricken out, the $12,500 now appropriated for the lake coast will have to be divided between the lake coast and the Atlantic sea-board.

Mr. HAVEN. Very well, sir. I see that, so far as the gentleman from Michigan is concerned, I am understood so far. Now, let me finish, and I will answer him. Here is the life-boat appropriation in the text, which has always been in previous bills of this character. We have appropriated $10,000 in the light-house bill, which has gone to the other House, and which relieves the Treasury of any application for the New Jersey coast, and leaves the rest to be applied to Massachusetts and elsewhere.

I now come to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan. We have already, as I said, passed an appropriation of $10,000 for the New Jersey coast. Now, the proposition is, to add to the sum already appropriated $12,500, and to limit the expenditure in the way I have pointed out. The amendment says nothing about any particular coast at which the boats are to be located, but it is simply for the purpose of rescuing lives in danger from shipwreck. For this purpose, it proposes to appropriate $12,500 for boats, to be located at such points as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, in lieu of designating any particular points, my amendment proposes to strike out these places that have been mentioned in the Senate's amendment, and leave it all to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Why should we not do that? Why should we go into particular details? How do we know that there are men at the places pointed out here, who are ready to obtain and take care of the boats? If we wanted to go into particularities in legislation, why do we not say to the Secretary of the Treasury that the boats are to be so many feet long, and so many feet wide, and have so many oars? But no. We furnish these boats, and then let the Secretary of the Treasury, on the application of proper men, and without additional expense to the Treasury, locate them at certain places and points, when proper application has been made for them.

If the committee understand me, I am done, and cannot be drawn into saying another word about this matter, unless it becomes necessary.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I have one word to say—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. STUART. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York one single question. That is: whether he proposes to keep this appropriation of $12,500 to Lake Michigan?

Mr. HAVEN. I understand that it is proposed to be appropriated by the Secretary of the Treasury to the western and northwestern lakes; and, therefore, the term "coast" is not used.

Mr. STUART. This restricts it to Lake Michigan—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) Further debate is not in order.

Mr. STUART, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. WALLEY. I propose to amend the amendment by adding $100 to the amount.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that if the committee understood this matter, they would agree with me in opposing this amendment—that is, they would retain and concur in all this first branch of the Senate's amendment. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] says that heretofore there has been a general appropriation for this purpose, and that now we ask for specific appropriations. Oh, yes, sir; and the committee have granted it. They have granted a specific appropriation at the instance of my friend from New Jersey, [Mr. SKELTON.] They granted a specific appropriation of $10,000 in respect to the claims of New Jersey and Long Island. The gentleman from New York supported it, and the committee of the House granted the appropriation; and they were right, for the New Jersey coast was entitled to it.

Now, Massachusetts comes forward and makes out a case for a similar appropriation, not for Boston or for her coast, but for the whole coast. We do not want it for Bostonians merely, or for the people of Massachusetts merely, but we want it for the benefit of the mercantile service. We want it because it is needed by the Navy, and because we have no means to meet the demands made upon us for protection along our rocky coast. Why, sir, the $10,000 have been appropriated heretofore, and this year we have added to it. Added how? Added to it because we have made a like appropriation for the West, and another for New Jersey. And now, when a case is made out in Massachusetts, my friend from New York shuts his eyes and ears, and says do no more. This action does not contrast well with the action of England upon the subject. The Northumberland life-boat report states:

"In England and Wales, with a sea-board of five thousand miles, there are seventy-five life-boats, forty-five of which are on the east coast, from five to ten miles apart. The life-boats of Liverpool alone have landed, during the last eleven years, one thousand one hundred and twenty-eight persons. There are seventy-three stations furnished with rockets; thirty of which have mortars, and forty-one of which have rockets and mortars, at the expense of the Government. At twenty-two stations two hundred and fourteen lives have been saved by mortars and rockets, besides several crews near Yarmouth, and many lives at eight other stations, where no account has been kept of the number. Fifty-five persons on the coast of Yorkshire have been saved by Cartes's rocket apparatus, and by means of the 'life-belt' and buoy four hundred and sixty persons in twelve years."

Now, what I ask is, not that this appropriation be given to Massachusetts, or to any Massachusetts merchant or any association of Massachusetts, but I say it is pennywise and poundfoolish, when, as the gentleman from Michigan says, you spend millions upon millions, and will not trust your own Secretary with $10,000 when a case is made out where life can be saved and suffering prevented upon the Atlantic coast. It is not for Massachusetts alone. We do not ask for it. You have given $10,000 for New Jersey and the Long Island coast, and why will you not give $20,000 for general purposes along the coast?

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Massachusetts use a very singular mode of argument, I think, in their advocacy of this proposition. They say we are spending large amounts of money. That is true, and it is just what I have been trying to prevent. But whenever these propositions come up for a vote, the gentleman from Massachusetts is found passing through the tellers in favor of them; and my friend from Michigan [Mr. STUART] has been very deep in that kind of work himself. And when they are themselves assisting to force those large amendments through the House and the committee, with what sort of grace can they come and chide us for our efforts to restrain them in particular cases? If gentlemen would only keep their own skirts clear, I would receive a lecture from them upon the expenditures of the Government; but as they continue to vote for these large, and, as I think, unnecessary appropriations, it does not become them to say that we are appropriating large amounts.

Mr. WALLEY. I wish to say that I give every vote here conscientiously and discriminatingly. At the same time that the gentleman votes for $10,000,000, I vote against it, and then I ask him to vote for $10,000, and he refuses because of its extravagance.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman is welcome to refer to the $10,000,000 vote; but I do not think it is more to his credit to have voted against it, than to mine to have voted the other way. I am satisfied with that vote, if the gentleman is, and I leave that matter to his own conscience and to his sense of responsibility to the country. But the gentleman says he votes upon his conscience. That that is true I have no doubt, and if he does vote upon his conscience, why does he come here and throw it in the face of this House that these appropriations are extravagantly made, when he himself is one of the leading members of this House who make these appropriations.

Now, in reference to this particular appropriation, the case is this: heretofore we have been in the habit of appropriating $10,000 for this purpose. That is the usual appropriation, but in some cases a specific amount has been given for the protection of the New Jersey coast. Now, after we have made the usual appropriation of $10,000, and have given also $10,000 to the New Jersey coast, we propose to add $12,500 for the lake coast. And I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts why, when the sum of $10,000 which has heretofore been appropriated has proved sufficient for the whole of the United States, it is necessary now to appropriate $10,000 for the New Jersey coast, $12,500 for the lake coast, and $25,000 for the balance of the coast.

Mr. WALLEY, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I move to increase the appropriation $5,000.

Mr. Chairman, the impression seems to have been created upon the minds of some of the members of the committee, that in the remarks I before made upon this amendment, I reflected upon the action of the House for voting the large appropriations which have been made by this Congress. Sir, if I have voted erroneously upon any questions which have been up for our action heretofore, the record will convict me. I shall not seek to evade any share of responsibility which attaches to those votes. I must, however, respectfully remind the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, that, whether I have voted right or wrong, I have followed his lead, upon nearly every question which has been submitted to the House, from the opening of the session to this day—including the Nebraska-Kansas bill. I have been willing to support him, sir, in some of (what I regarded, and still regard) his abstract and immaterial views upon subjects in which I conceive nobody, and nobody's interest, is very seriously involved, (unless it be a class of politicians whose sole stock in trade is agitation,) in the hope, vain though it has proved, that when sober, serious, and substantial interests, in which my constituents and State had a stake, and were concerned, might come up for consideration, he, too, would take the mark, and "render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's."

Now, the gentleman complains that to-day I have been falling from grace, and that I am voting "all wrong." Sir, I plead guilty to the charge of deserting the gentleman, much as I esteem him, and regret the necessity which makes me part company with so agreeable an associate and so reliable a voter, but when I found to-day the same parsimonious course which has heretofore characterized the Committee of Ways and Means, in reference to appropriations for my section of the country persisted in, I was compelled to abandon his lead, and follow that of my friends, who are seeking to secure appropriations for works which the Ways and Means stigmatize as "works of internal improvement," but which I believe to be both constitutional and necessary, and which are intimately connected with the material interests of the constituency I am honored with representing. I admit, sir, that I have been laboring and voting with these friends (some of them new ones, it is true, so far as voting and political associations go) for the appropriations for rivers and harbors, custom-houses, and marine hospitals. To be specially obnoxious to censure by the enemies of these works is, indirectly, to be complimented for some supposed efficient service in their favor.

And now, sir, let me say to my friend from Buffalo, [Mr. HAVEN,] that this appropriation, though it purports to be for the peculiar benefit of my State, and the other States bordering on Lake Michigan, in point of fact is of far more value and importance to the city of Buffalo, which the gentleman represents, than it is to my State. Sir, a large proportion (how large I cannot estimate, but I should judge one third) of the commerce and the vessels on Lake Michigan is owned in that wealthy and flourishing city, which the gentleman represents so ably. The seamen, shipped aboard these vessels, many of whom, with each returning season, are recorded among the host who have been swallowed in the surging billows of Lake Michigan, are of the gentleman's own constituency. It is for the protection of the lives of the men of his own city, and of the property of his merchants, that this appropriation of $12,500 has been proposed and adopted by the Senate. The gentleman says "the intention was"—"the understanding was"—"that this appropriation of $12,500 was to go for the benefit of the lake coast." Ay, sir; but that "understanding" does not appear upon the record in the amendment as offered by the gentleman from New York. Sir, it is Jesuitism—it is just of a piece with the Jesuitism which I think I have seen at work to deprive the northwest of its due share of interest in this Government. The amendment of the gentleman from New York amounts to this, precisely, and no more. All I ask is that it may be properly understood and heeded by gentlemen whose interests, and the interests of whose constituents, are at stake in this matter—it is to strike out the $10,000, and to leave the $12,500 for the Atlantic, Gulf, Pacific, and Lake coasts.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire that the committee will now vote on the question. I feel as strongly for the interests of northern commerce as any gentleman here.

The question was taken; and the amendment was voted down.

The question then recurred on the first branch of the Senate's amendment.

Mr. WALLEY. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs WASHBURN, of Maine, and MAXWELL, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the first portion of the Senate amendment was concurred in, the tellers having reported—ayes 68, noes not counted.

The question then recurred on Mr. HAVEN's amendment to the latter portion of the Senate amendment.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and Mr. HAVEN's amendment was rejected.

The latter portion of the Senate amendment was then concurred in:

One hundred and fifteenth amendment:

Strike out in line one thousand four hundred and eight, "$600 per annum, $16,200," and insert in lieu thereof, "$800 per annum each, $21,600;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of fifteen keepers and twelve assistants, at an average not exceeding $800 per annum each, $21,600.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and sixteenth amendment:

For completing the light-houses on the coast of California and Oregon, the sum of $59,434: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the contractors for building the light-house on Point Lema, near San Diego, what the same is reasonably worth.

Mr. STEPHENS. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and seventeenth amendment:

Provided, That the salaries of the Ministers to Great Britain and France shall be hereafter at the rate of $15,000 per annum; and that hereafter outfits of Ministers to Great Britain and France shall not be allowed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighteenth amendment:

For salary of a clerk to the United States legation at Paris, $500.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of this clause:

And the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the late acting chargé d'affaires of the United States at Paris, the sum of $6,223 82, it being the amount of the difference between the salary received by him as secretary of legation at Paris, from the 14th day of May, 1853, to the 23d day of January, 1854, and the salary of a chargé d'affaires for the same period; together with the usual outfit of a chargé d'affaires. And for necessary clerk hire during four years, paid by him while secretary of legation at Paris, the further sum of $1,170 63.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. There is no law authorizing that amendment. If there is any claim, it is a private claim, and it has no place in an appropriation bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. If the Chair decides this question out of order, I shall feel bound to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I hope gentlemen of the committee will hear me while I offer a word of explanation in regard to this matter. If this amendment is ruled out of order, it will be the first time, since I have been a member here, that an appropriation of this kind has been refused. It comes from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. There has been a report made upon it in the Senate. Appropriations of this kind were submitted as amendments last year, and I hope that the amendment I have offered now will be considered in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I feel bound to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was taken on the appeal; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Senate amendment was then non-concurred in.

One hundred and nineteenth amendment:

For outfit of the Commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, $2,500.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and twentieth amendment:

Page sixty-one, line one thousand four hundred and seventy-seven, after the word "seamen," add the words "and seamen belonging to American vessels."

The clause, as amended, reads:

For the relief and protection of American seamen, and seamen belonging to American vessels in foreign countries, $125,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and twenty-first amendment:

Add to the foregoing clause the following words: And to enable the diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States, in foreign countries, to afford relief to, and provide the means of returning home, to such citizens of the United States, in foreign countries, as may have been reduced to a state of destitution of the necessities of life, by shipwreck or the necessary abandonment of the vessel in which they embarked; and also to such citizens of the United States as being on their way from one part of the United States to another, have become destitute in foreign countries, in consequence of shipwreck, disease, or any other casualty, $20,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and twenty-second amendment:

Page sixty-one, line one thousand four hundred and ninety-four, strike out the words "for salary of the consul at Beirut, $500," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the consul at Beirut, Syria, is hereby created a consul general, with a salary of $2,000 per annum, from the 1st of July, 1853; said consulate shall comprehend both Syria and Palestine, and $4,000 is hereby appropriated for the salary of said consul.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment, with the following amendment:

In line one thousand four hundred and ninety-seven, after the word "annum," strike out the words "from the 1st of July, 1853," and in the one thousand four hundred and ninety-ninth line, strike out the word "four," and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

The amendment, if amended, would read:

That the consul at Beirut, Syria, is hereby created a consul general, with a salary of $2,000 per annum; said consulate shall comprehend both Syria and Palestine, and $2,000 is hereby appropriated for the salary of said consul.

Mr. PERKINS. I propose to modify that amendment. Strike out the word "general," after consul, and leave the office still a simple consulate, with the salary proposed. This will be in agreement with the report made this morning by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, fixing the salary of that consulate at $2,000, and abolishing the consul generalship.

Mr. HAVEN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana, that as the bill proposed by him this morning is not yet a law, we had better keep this amendment till it passes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I agree to modify the amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken on Mr. Houston's amendment, as modified, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the Senate amendment, as amended; and it was concurred in.

One hundred and twenty-third amendment:

For payment to Blythe and Company, of Port Louis, in the island of Mauritius, the sum of $7,854 50, it being the amount of two bills of exchange drawn upon the Department of State by George M. Farnum, commercial agent, in payment of expenses incurred in relieving destitute American citizens, which drafts were cashed by said Blythe and Company.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and twenty-fourth amendment:

That the Secretary of the Treasury audit and settle the accounts of Robert C. Schenck, late Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Brazil, and John S. Pendleton, late Chargé d'Affaires of the United States to the Argentine Confederation, for additional compensation, and for expenses incurred by them in the performance of special services not pertaining to their respective missions, and at points distant from those to which they were originally accredited, in compliance with instructions from the Department of State. In settling which accounts the certificate of the parties shall be regarded as sufficient evidence as to the amount of expense incurred, where no regular voucher can be produced. And a compensation at the rate of twenty-five dollars per diem shall be allowed to each of them for the time they were so employed, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HIBBARD. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment of the Senate, with an amendment:

After the words, "Argentine Confederation," in the fifteen hundred and fourteenth line, strike out the words "for additional compensation and," and after the word "produced," in line fifteen hundred and twenty-two, strike out the words "and a compensation at the rate of twenty-five dollars per diem shall be allowed to each of them for the time they were so employed," so as to make the Senate amendment, if so amended, read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury audit and settle the accounts of Robert C. Schenck, late Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Brazil, and John S. Pendleton, late Chargé d'Affaires of the United States to the Argentine Confederation, for expenses incurred by them in the performance of special services not pertaining to their respective missions, and at points distant from those to which they were originally accredited, in compliance with instructions from the Department of State. In settling which accounts the certificate of the parties shall be regarded as sufficient evidence as to the amount of expense incurred, where no regular voucher can be produced. To be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SOLLERS. I desire to hear from some member of the Committee of Ways and Means an explanation of the reasons of that amendment.

Mr. HIBBARD. The explanation is brief, I suppose. An additional compensation for Mr. Schenck is asked for upon the ground that he performed other duties than those which originally devolved upon him by the terms of his original commission. The Senate propose to give him double pay for his services—the same pay, if I recollect right, that he would have received had he, during that time, been acting as a regular minister. It was the opinion of a majority of the Committee of Ways and Means that an amendment which should leave to this officer, so acting, his original pay for the whole time, and then for the duties which he was subsequently called upon to perform at another place, should pay him for his time and expenses, would be a fair provision. And that is the amendment.

Mr. SOLLERS. Do I understand the gentleman from New Hampshire to say that the only compensation he asks for, is pay for the time and expenses he incurred in the performance of the additional duties, and that all the committee propose to allow him is his expenses?

Mr. HIBBARD. That is our amendment.

Mr. SOLLERS. Then I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. HIBBARD. The amendment of the Senate will show what the gentleman asked for. By looking at it, the gentleman from Maryland will understand its provisions. Our amendment proposes to pay him for the whole time at the rate allowed by law for the commission; and it further provides for paying him for his expenses. Under the amendment he would have pay for full time and all his expenses.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I well understand this amendment; and, perhaps, gentlemen will better understand it after hearing me. The amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means is to allow these gentlemen their expenses and nothing else. That is what the amendment is. They so amend the Senate amendment as to allow them their simple expenses and nothing else.

While Mr. Schenck was at Rio, a proposition was made by the French Government and the English Government to make joint treaties with two distant governments—far distant. The proposition was accepted by our Government, and these gentlemen were appointed as its agents to go to these distant countries. They went and negotiated two important treaties which have since been confirmed by the President and by the Senate. They rendered not only an important service, but a very acceptable service to the United States. They asked as compensation for their services, the outfit of a minister; and they asked what I assert, it has been the universal practice of this Government to grant for similar services. I state to this committee that no gentleman here can point me to an instance of the kind, where a minister has been detached from his post and detailed to perform a service similar to that performed by these gentlemen, where that compensation has not been allowed.

Mr. KERR. I would suggest that during the present session, we have made the same allowance to William Bosman Kerr, for the performance of similar services.

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly it has been made during the present session. But for the performance of this service the Senate agreed to allow to Mr. Schenck and Mr. Pendleton a compensation of twenty-five dollars per day, which is a pro rata allowance upon the salary of a minister. That amendment has come to this House, and our Committee of Ways and Means propose to strike out even that allowance. Sir, it seems to me the least we can do, to concur with the Senate amendment, and, in my opinion, that would come far short of doing justice to those gentlemen.

The action of the Senate is in opposition to the heretofore universal practice of the Government; but at this late period of the session, rather than to disagree to their action, I am willing to accede to their proposal, and grant these gentlemen this pro rata allowance.

But the Committee of Ways and Means propose to strike out the proposition of the Senate, and simply allow these gentlemen for their actual expenses. Sir, I appeal to the committee—I appeal to every American—is it honorable? Is it right that your foreign ministers, men of position, men appointed to carry the ensign of the Republic to foreign nations, should be dismissed under circumstances like these with their expenses? I repeat, sir, that I should have preferred to have followed the practice of the Government from the beginning, which has been as I have stated. But inasmuch as the Senate have deviated from that practice, and have agreed to give them a reasonable compensation, I shall vote to concur in their proposition, and give these gentlemen a per diem compensation equal pro rata to the salary of a minister, and I hope the House will concur in that proposition, and not dismiss these gentlemen with merely their expenses, as is proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia whether, if the amendment of the Senate be adopted, these gentlemen will not be paid not only for the performance of this additional service, but at the same time, receive their salaries under the original missions to which they were appointed?

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly.

Mr. HIBBARD. And will they not thus receive pay for the performance of duties which they could not perform? The Committee of Ways and Means proposed to pay them the salary of minister, the same they would have received as ministers if they had not been detached, and in addition, to pay all their expenses consequent upon the performance of their additional duties.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask the gentleman whether it is not true that Mr. Adams, when he was Minister to Russia, and was invited to become one of the commissioners to negotiate the treaty of Ghent, did not receive his outfit as minister? I ask whether Mr. Clay as another of the commissioners to negotiate the same treaty, did not receive the outfit of a minister? I ask whether Mr. Pinckney did not receive the same outfit for the performance of a similar service?

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means was rejected, there being, on a division—ayes 53, noes 68.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in, there being, on a division—ayes 79, noes 52.

One hundred and twenty-fifth amendment:

For expenses which may be incurred in acknowledging the services of the masters and crews of foreign vessels in rescuing citizens and vessels of the United States from shipwreck, $5,000: Provided, That the same shall be expended under the direction of the President of the United States.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and twenty-sixth amendment:

For the purchase of blank books, stationery, arms of the United States, presses, and flags, and for the payment of postages for the consuls of the United States, $10,000.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and twenty-seventh amendment:

To enable the Secretary of State to defray the expense of releasing from captivity among the Indians of Queen Charlotte's Island the crew and passengers of the American sloop Georgiana, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment, with an amendment to strike out "$2,500," and in lieu thereof to insert "$15,000." The object is to cover all the expenses incurred in rescuing twenty-seven American citizens from captivity in Queen Charlotte's Island.

The question was taken, and the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means was agreed to; and then the Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

One hundred and twenty-eighth amendment:

To enable the Secretary of State to reimburse to Edward Riddle such sums as shall be satisfactorily shown to have been expended by him, or which said Riddle may have obligated himself to pay, on account of his official position at the Industrial Exhibition at London, England, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, $25,000: Provided, That no portion of the payments made, pro rata, by contributors at said exhibition shall be regarded as within this appropriation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to strike out that amendment. I make this motion because I know of no authority that any person had to confer upon Edward Riddle, "official position" as commissioner to the Industrial Exhibition at London. I do not wish to argue the merits of the case, but I desire to say this, if he was sent there as commissioner, I know of no authority by which the thing was done. I am not, therefore, prepared to vote for the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. He was sent there under the authority of a private association of this city, called the Central Association, I believe. The Government had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BAYLY. If that is the case, then the point I made—

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. If I understood the gentleman from Virginia, he moved to strike out the Senate amendment. I ask if that motion is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is tantamount to a non-concurrence. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia perhaps is not strictly in order. The gentleman would be in order in making remarks, if he moved to amend by reducing the amount of appropriation one dollar.

Mr. BAYLY. As my friend from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] is disposed to be so critical, I beg leave to say to him that the word "non-concurrence" is not an English word. [A laugh.]

Mr. STANTON. I did not use it.

Mr. BAYLY. The proper form of expression would be to say that the House do not concur in the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to say a word? The Government of the United States invited artists, mechanics, and inventors to contribute articles for the industrial exhibition, and ordered a Government vessel to take them; but when they got to Southampton, the means had not been raised for transporting them to the exhibition. Our Minister informed us that it would have disgraced the nation if they had been left in that condition. Mr. Peabody then advanced the necessary funds out of his own private means to forward them to their destination. It was to save the honor of the country that he took this step, and through his instrumentality the articles were delivered.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I desire to say a few words. I think that this amendment of the Senate ought to be adopted by this House; and the best argument to show that it ought to be adopted is a letter from Mr. Abbott Lawrence, then our Minister to England, written to a gentleman in this city on the 14th of July of the present year, which letter I send to the Clerk's desk to be read. I would like to say further that this letter was introduced in the Senate by Mr. PEARCE, and it proved to the Senate the necessity of this appropriation. I ask that the Clerk may read it, as it will at once show the committee the merits of the question.

The letter was read, as follows:

Boston, July 14, 1854.

DEAR SIR: I have before me your letter of the 10th instant, and should have given an earlier reply, had I been at home. Every circumstance respecting the noble conduct of Mr. George Peabody in coming forward with a loan to pay the carriage upon the merchandise brought to Southampton, in the frigate St. Lawrence, and for fitting up the place allotted to the United States for the reception of the various articles, is fresh in my memory.

The Government of the United States promoted the exhibition, and did as much as could have been expected, with one exception, which was of more importance than anything else, viz: an appropriation of money to carry out the objects recommended. The commissioner came to me, and asked what he should do. I told him unless he would borrow the money to pay the expenses upon the American articles which had arrived, and were on their way to London, they must all be sent back to the United States, which would have proved a lasting source of mortification to every true American citizen, whether at home or abroad. Mr. Peabody called upon me to consult upon the matter, as did many of our countrymen who were then in London, all of whom, as far as I conversed with them, entertained the opinion that Congress would reimburse any one who should come forward and furnish the means to carry forward the great national object. Mr. Peabody, with that promptness for which he is distinguished, in his honorable and high purposes of action, offered to advance the money, which was accepted, to the great relief of every American citizen in Europe. It was deemed a matter of national honor that the United States should be represented in the Crystal Palace, after all that had been said and printed here upon the subject. Mr. Peabody assumed these responsibilities from the highest principles of patriotism. It was pure devotion to the honor and interest of his native land, that he proffered his money for her uses. I am free to say that I had no doubt, under the circumstances attending the exhibition, that Congress would meet the expenses incurred in London, and I cannot but hope that the committee, or whoever has charge of the claim, will make a unanimous report in favor of its payment. I advised to the course that was adopted in London, as you, perhaps, may remember.

I am, dear sir, very faithfully yours,

ABBOTT LAWRENCE.

EDWARD G. TUCKERMAN, Esq.,
National Hotel, Washington.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I propose to amend the amendment by reducing the sum to one dollar.

I offer this amendment for the purpose of saying that there seems to me to be involved in this question a principle which cannot be decided as a mere pecuniary matter. This is an appropriation to meet obligations resulting from a position which, it has been properly stated on this floor, was in no sense national. The person who incurred the pecuniary obligation which we are called upon to discharge, was the agent, not of the United States Government, but of an association in this city. The Government refused to recognize him as its agent. It refused to recognize the Crystal Palace, or the exhibition as one in which it could, as a Government, cooperate.

It is said that the honor of the country was involved, and that it was to sustain this that the money was advanced! Sir, I do not admit this to have been in any sense true. The national honor was not intrusted to the keeping of this gentleman. I deny that, because Congress chose to assist particular individuals by the use of a national vessel to carry them and their property over to Great Britain free of expense, that any one could be justified in the inference of an intention to pay the expenses of their agent while there. This would be to tax us for our liberality; and it is precisely against inferences of this kind that I wish the legislation of this House to operate. When it is once understood that Congress means only what it says, and nothing more, we will have fewer applications of this kind. There is too great a disposition already, and I fear it is increasing, to forget that calls of this kind do not address themselves to the discretion, but to the power of Congress.

In this particular case Congress not only refused to appoint an agent when asked to do so, but refused to acknowledge the right of any one to represent us in any way as nationally present at the exhibition; and yet we are expected, after it is all over, to pay the obligations of the person, on the express ground of his having been our official representative, where we protested we had no right to and would not be represented. I regret to be compelled to oppose the appropriation of money for a purpose which in itself I approve, but there is a principle in this thing which should be checked. These exhibitions are to occur again. Next year there is to be one in France, and the year after there may be another in England. This precedent, if admitted, will result in far more injury than can possibly result from the failure to pay this small amount of money.

Mr. GROW. If there is a moment of the gentleman's time left, I wish simply to say, that it seems the Government furnished the means of transporting these articles to England; and we are now called upon to pay for our liberality. We are called upon to pay the agent for services rendered to private individuals—an agent who was not authorized by the Government, and not requested by the Government to perform the services. The services were not performed by the Government, but by an individual citizen.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I call the gentleman to order. He is speaking upon the same side as the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. GROW. I am speaking in the gentleman's time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the gentleman is not in order. I want to speak in opposition to the amendment. I refrained from occupying the few minutes to which I was entitled, when I rose before, thinking that the mere reading of the letter of Mr. Lawrence, our Minister in England at the time the expenses were incurred, would satisfy every gentleman of the propriety of making this allowance. As stated by my honorable friend from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] when the United States furnished a vessel to transport the articles furnished by our mechanics to the British exhibition, they were landed on the coast at a distance from their point of destination, and something was necessary to be done to bring them to the place of exhibition. There was no money to do it. An American merchant, Mr. Peabody, one of the most upright men in the mercantile profession, an honor to the profession everywhere, always ready to do a liberal action to his countrymen, advised with the American Minister as to whether, if he should advance this money, the Congress of the United States would reimburse him. Mr. Lawrence thought Congress would reimburse him. He did advance the money, which aided our American mechanics to exhibit their inventions which did them honor the world over. This is nothing to Mr. Peabody, personally, he having advanced the money to Mr. Riddle, but Mr. Riddle desires us to reimburse him, that he may be able to reimburse Mr. Peabody. The necessity and propriety of making this appropriation is made plain by the letter of Mr. Lawrence, which has just been read, and there ought not to be a dissenting opinion. When our American mechanics were in trouble, and unable to lay the proud trophies of their genius before the world, an American merchant, proud of his country, stepped in to their aid, for the honor of his native country, and enabled them to exhibit the fruits of their skill and ingenuity, and it seems to me that we ought not to withhold this appropriation for reimbursing those advances.

Mr. PERKINS, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to strike out in the fifteen hundred and forty-fourth line, the words "on account of his official position at the Industrial Exhibition at London, England," and insert what I send up to the Clerk's desk. I want to show what his position really was. Insert the following:

To Mr. Edward Riddle:

SIR: You are appointed an agent to proceed to the Industrial Exhibition to be held in London during the present year. The following instructions are for your government:

1. You are specially charged with the care and display of the goods transmitted to the exhibition, under the direction of the central authority of the United States.
2. You will at all times pay the utmost respect to the rules and regulations of the Royal commissioners for the arrangement of the exhibition.
3. You will aid and advise American contributors or their agents, when called upon to do so, in the display and arrangement of their goods.
4. At the close of the exhibition you will make a report of your proceedings under this appointment.

Done at the city of Washington, January 24, 1851, by order of the Executive Committee of the Central Authority of the United States. PETER FORCE, Chairman.

JOS. C. G. KENNEDY, Secretary.

Now, it appears to me, that if we are going to pay this man for his services in an official capacity, we ought to know from what source his official capacity was derived. It was not derived from this Government at all. It was derived from Mr. Peter Force and Mr. Kennedy; and those gentlemen, however respectable they may be as private individuals, certainly have no right to confer an official character upon anybody who is to be recognized as such in a general appropriation bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I should be sorry if the gentleman's amendment should prevail. It did not require the reading of that paper to show that Mr. Riddle was not appointed to any official position by the President of the country. But it is well known that a national vessel, at the expense of the Government, was furnished to convey these articles to the World's Fair, in London; and this gentleman, I well recollect, and I think the gentleman from Virginia will also recollect, together with another gentleman of this city—Mr. Stansbury, I think was his name—were appointed for the purpose of facilitating the arrangement, in the Crystal Palace, of the articles which were carried out in that national vessel. Now, sir, suppose that national vessel had landed these articles upon the shores of England—

Mr. BAYLY. The gentleman speaks of my recollection. Sir, I do recollect these circumstances well; and I recollect, also, that I thought at the time that the whole thing was wrong. I thought so then, and I still think that it was wrong. It was setting a very bad precedent; and for that reason, and for that alone, I am opposing this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman from Virginia thinks this was a bad precedent. Sir, I think it was a glorious precedent, to send a ship from this country—a national ship—to convey the products of the ingenuity of the mechanics of the country to the World's Fair in London. I trust it is a precedent that will be followed in all time to come, whenever a like occasion presents itself. I recollect well the pride with which I looked upon the display of American enterprise and American ingenuity which I saw in that exhibition. And shall it be said that when the Executive of the country thought the matter of sufficient importance to send a national vessel to carry these articles, that we will refuse the amount necessary to pay the expenses of carrying them from the shore where they were landed to the Crystal Palace? Sir, when these articles were landed in England, Mr. Riddle found himself without the necessary funds to carry them up to the exhibition, when an American merchant, a wealthy merchant in London, went to the American Minister and said, "I will advance the money for the exhibitors of the United States, believing that the Congress of the United States will generously reimburse me." The American Minister said: "I see no difficulty in the way. If you advance the money, Congress will reimburse you." He promptly paid the money; the inventions were exhibited, and the character of the United States was upheld, yea, glorified throughout the world by the praiseworthy exertions of Messrs. Peabody and Riddle. The amendment of the Senate is to reimburse them, and I hope it may be concurred in.

Mr. PECKHAM. Had not Mr. Peabody the right to assume that the Government authorized it by sending out a national vessel?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly. He felt himself authorized by that circumstance to advance the money.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. BAYLY. I withdraw my amendment. I only submitted it for the purpose of exhibiting the character of the amendment, so that it might be rejected.

Mr. SOLLERS. I move to reduce the appropriation to twelve and a half cents.

Mr. Chairman, if I thought it would be in order I would move to reduce the appropriation to a sufficient amount for a bronze medal. [Laughter.] I have witnessed, during the progress of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill through Congress, many extraordinary things. It was to be hoped that a purely Democratic Congress would have been a little economical in the administration of the Government. But now we are called on to give a gentleman—a Mr. Riddle—who he is God only knows; I assure the committee I do not—[laughter]—who has thrust himself into this business unasked, uncalled for, and without commission. He derived the whole of his duties and authority from an obscure agricultural society within the limits of the District of Columbia. He went for the honor and the credit of the thing to the city of London. He put himself at the head of the commission, and assumed to discharge the duties of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, so far at least as the industrial exhibition was concerned; and because he occupied what he as well as the Senate complacently calls an official position, he is to have $26,000 for his services.

By what authority did this man undertake to borrow money on the credit of the United States? Who authorized him to go to Mr. Peabody and make a loan, predicated on the faith and credit of this Government? He was qualified with no such authority. He derived no such authority from any appointment by the United States. He went there with the high commission under the seal of this agricultural society, of which Mr. Force was president, and Mr. somebody else (a Mr. Kennedy, I believe) was secretary. Under the broad seal of this magnificent society he went to London, and undertook to borrow money on the faith and credit of the United States. Then with superlative impudence he asks this Democratic Congress to sanction what he has done. Gentlemen, the thing is ridiculous. There is not a man, woman, or child in the country that will not regard it as such. The truth of the matter is, that this Mr. Riddle entered into this matter upon his own responsibility, unasked and unsought. Then, in order to keep up his high character as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary, he negotiated a loan of $26,000 from Mr. Peabody, who gives dinners in a room with the portraits of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert on one side, and that of our President on the other, and commences his patriotic festivities by drinking the healths of Her Majesty and her consort first, and of George Washington afterwards.

Now, I am a Whig, and of course occupy a hostile position to the Democratic party; but if an enemy, I claim to be a generous one. Gentlemen of the Democratic party, take care how you appropriate money from the Treasury. I, for one, hold you to a strict accountability before the people of the United States for all your extravagance. [Cries of "Good!"] To be forewarned is to be forearmed. You have already done enough to forfeit the confidence which a generous people reposed in you. Take care that you do not put weights around your necks which will sink you so low that the hand of resurrection cannot reach you.

Mr. HAVEN. It is now quarter past three o'clock, and we have only two days remaining of this session. I hope that we will proceed to voting. I do not propose to discuss this question. I shall merely say that my Democratic and Whig friends had all the glorification of this thing when it took place. The country burst out into a magnificent blaze upon the subject; and now, if these gentlemen are willing to back down when it comes to paying the man who advanced money to sustain the glory and honor of the country, let the country know who they are.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand that the proposition is to pay Mr. Riddle for money advanced by Mr. Peabody. I propose, in this connection, an amendment to strike out the name of "Edward Riddle," and insert that of "Peabody" wherever the name Riddle occurs.

I suppose it is perfectly plain that if Mr. Peabody advanced money, he is the man to receive it, and nobody else. Mr. Riddle, I understand, is a horse dealer and auctioneer in the city of Boston. That is what I understand to be his employment. I do not pretend to question his honesty, but there is no account rendered of these expenses. Upon what principle should we pay a gentleman for expenditures made by him, of which we have no account, when it is avowed upon the face of the amendment that another individual advanced the money.

I say this to the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] that it is a great reflection upon American mechanics to suppose that they would carry their inventions to England without having money. I do not believe a word of it. I do not believe that an American who got his freight for nothing in an American ship, went to England without having money to pay his expenses. This amendment is contrived, I have no sort of question, for the purpose of getting money out of the Treasury of the United States. But look at the principle of the thing. It is gravely maintained that a gentleman here, without authority from the official powers of this Government, has a right to go on and incur expenses to any extent that he may please, and then make an appeal to Congress to relieve him.

I was rejoiced to hear the Whig gentleman from the State of Maryland [Mr. SOLLERS] rebuke Democrats. To what a condition have we come, when a Whig here upon this floor, in this presence, feels it to be his duty to rebuke the Democratic party for a want of economy, and for fostering and sustaining enormous expenditures. Yet such is the fact; and, therefore, I submit this amendment. It is so plain and palpable that gentlemen can hardly resist it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to oppose the introduction of the name of Mr. Peabody in this amendment. I think it discourteous, in the first place, and wrong altogether. A gentleman who, in the hour of extremity to American citizens abroad, advanced to them a large sum of money, so that they might stand erect with citizens of other countries, demands and deserves from us not merely a return of the small pittance loaned, but the hearty thanks of every man who has an American heart within his bosom. Sir, I have no sympathy with the man who, here or elsewhere, would so underrate American character as to suppose that it was not concerned in all the transactions of trade. A man may indeed sink down into the business of buying and selling, and thereby lose the good regard of those who live upon the labor of others. But, in my opinion, no American citizen loses his character or his claims on the respect of others, because he earns his living by the sweat of his brow.

Sir, on the shores of England a ship of the United States arrived, stored with the productions of American artisans. They were without means to convey them thence [Southampton] to London, a distance of seventy odd miles. There were, besides, more than three miles for the goods to be conveyed by horse carriage to the place where they were to be exhibited.

Sir, France had assisted her mechanics to place their productions in the Crystal Palace. Austria came to the help of her own people. Turkey was careful that the Musselman should not lack credit with the Christian; and even little Switzerland assisted her ingenious artisans to take a place in the World's Fair; the great exhibition by nations—and while these and the people of other nations were placing their productions on shelves, or in the divisions respectively assigned to them in the beautiful structure, the evidences of American skill lay on the wharves at Southampton, more than seventy miles from London. Most of the owners were here, in this country. Their half dozen agents were there, indeed, with means barely sufficient to pay their own board and traveling expenses—and the exhibition was opening without a single article in the location bearing the sign of the United States.

The Government had agreed to convey these goods to the exhibition. The owners did not consider that they might be landed seventy miles from the palace. They were so landed, and were exposing the representatives of the industry of this country to the sneers of those of the other parts of the world, because they had nothing in the hall of the exhibition, and to the contempt of the British for their inability to pay the cost of carrying these goods from Southampton to London. Let this statement be understood. Let any one figure to himself the mortification of the American delegates, and the ridicule which that state of things naturally drew upon them, upon us, upon every American.

In that hour of extremity, I repeat it, an American citizen, whose heart throbs with American feeling, who scorned, when they invited him to British citizenship, to give up his right to American citizenship, this man stepped forward and redeemed the character and credit of his fellow-citizens. At that moment of trouble he enabled them to win for themselves, and, while winning for themselves, to reflect it upon us and upon every man in the country, who has earned, or who does earn his bread by the sweat of his brow—to win honor at that exhibition where the whole world stood emulous, every part of it for its own share.

Sir, to introduce the name of that man into this clause, as if he were a petitioner, for this petty amount, for this sum of $26,000, not half or quarter the sum which he expends every year in extending hospitality to his fellow-citizens, bearing testimony not only to his love of his own home, but his regard for American citizenship, would be unworthy of us. I trust that this House will never so demean itself as to truckle in this matter, and throw responsibility on that man who stepped forward and helped our citizens at that time. Let us not only be honest, but let us be delicate, and let us be just. While we vote fairly to pay this money, we recognize no official position in that gentleman who has the misfortune of earning his living by trading in Boston; we simply carry out the views of the country in putting in this bill an appropriation to pay the money which was supplied to our fellow-citizens.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he wants the man who is entitled to this money to have the appropriation in his name, or in that of another?

Mr. CHANDLER. I want the amendment to pass now, so that the money shall be paid to the borrower, to be refunded by him to the man who advanced it with such generous liberality.

The question was taken; and Mr. SMITH's amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move to amend by adding $500 to the $26,000. I certainly should not have mingled in this discussion, but for the fact that it was my fortune to have been present in London during the period when this transaction occurred. It is proper to observe that every nation in Europe was represented at that Crystal Palace, in their official capacity. The Government of the United States was not. Our Government presented itself there under these circumstances: A vessel of a national character, in the service of the country, was placed at the disposal of the exhibitors. Their goods were landed at a distance from the Palace, and they were without the means of placing them in a proper position in the Palace. Under these circumstances, the American commissioner, unable himself to furnish the funds, and unable to procure them through his friends, called upon an eminent American banker, whose name has so often been mentioned here in connection with this matter. That gentleman, as a precautionary measure, called upon the Minister of the United States, and asked his opinion in reference to the transaction. Predicated upon what was stated to him by our Minister, Mr. Peabody came forward in this time of need to uphold and support the character of the United States, and without the aid he thus afforded them, all the efforts which had been made upon this side of the water to place American skill and invention before the European world, would have been entirely lost; and notwithstanding American skill had solicited a place in the Crystal Palace for the exhibition of their goods, it would not have been assigned them, and the United States would have been still further disgraced, but for this advance which was made to them.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would ask the gentleman from New York this question: Does he know of a single man who carried articles to that exhibition who was without the means of getting his goods to the Crystal Palace?

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I do not know in reference to that particularly; but gentlemen who devote themselves, and sacrifice themselves for the good of their country, are generally poor, and have not means.

Mr. SMITH. Do you know of such a man?

Mr. WALBRIDGE. In response to that inquiry, I will say, that I have this day received several letters soliciting aid, under the same circumstances; and I do not think they were very able; for if they were, they would not now be soliciting aid of the Government.

I desire to reiterate the fact that Mr. Peabody came forward and made this advance—I do not say at the solicitation of the American minister, but under strong representations from him, that since the Government had placed at the disposal of these American contributors a national vessel, his assistance might be considered legitimately necessary to carry out that aid, so far as the exhibitors were concerned, and that the Congress of the United States would refund to him the advances which he should make. It is for the American people, and for this Congress, to determine whether, under these circumstances, they will suffer an appropriation to be made to cover advances which added materially to their honor.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. With Mr. Peabody I have very little acquaintance. I have no doubt he is worthy of all the commendation which has been bestowed upon him. As to Mr. Riddle, I know nothing of him; and the only interest I take in this appropriation arises out of the fact that it will create a mischievous precedent. It refers to a matter which I wish to be well understood by this House, so that, if they mean to set a precedent, they may do so knowingly.

Now, in the first place, this bill assumes that Mr. Riddle was there in an official capacity. Who conferred it upon him? Where did his commission come from? It came from two respectable private gentlemen of this city; but he had no authority from the Government. The provision, therefore, is false upon its face.

But, sir, I go beyond that. I have no idea that where a private individual from patriotic motives—to place it upon the highest grounds—or from mercenary motives, to place it upon the lowest grounds, takes upon himself to go to the World's Fair, that he has any right to come here and ask this Government to defray his expenses. They have no claim upon us. I opposed this thing when it occurred. I saw then that the seed was sown which would grow up as I have seen it grow up.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask the gentleman to allow me to interrupt him for a moment. My object is this: I want to know if it was not then generally understood that the Government of the United States undertook to transport these articles to the exhibition? It was then supposed that the vessel could land near the exhibition; but it turned out that it was compelled to land seventy miles off. Now, I want to know if it was not the understanding that the Government was to transport these articles to the exhibition, and whether it was not the duty of the Government, with that understanding, to transport them there?

Mr. BAYLY. Why, Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that a gentleman with the clearness of intellect which the gentleman from North Carolina possesses should ask me such a question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Who furnished the ship to transport them?

[The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed the river and harbor bill with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.]

Mr. BAYLY. The gentleman from North Carolina asks me if there was not an understanding that the Government should pay this expense?

Mr. CLINGMAN. No, sir; that was not my question. I asked if the United States Government, did not—I think by an act of Congress—furnish a ship to transport the articles for exhibition by American exhibitors, and whether it was not the understanding then that they were to carry them to the Crystal Palace?

Mr. BAYLY. No, sir; I am quite sure the Government of the United States, as a Government, have done nothing of the kind. The only instance of which I recollect when the Government has undertaken to transport goods free of cost was during the famine in Ireland, when gentlemen came here and asked for a ship to carry supplies to that country. The ship was granted, and it turned out just as I predicted at the time, that these gentlemen afterwards came in here with a bill of expenses.

Sir, I am opposed to this whole thing, and have been from the beginning. It is wrong in principle. If the thing is carried out, anybody may get up an industrial exhibition in London, or anywhere else, and then come here with protestations of patriotism, and make us pay the expenses. That is the principle, and I say again that I am opposed to it.

When General La Fayette came to this country his passage was offered to him free by the captain of a certain vessel. That captain brought him here, and then came to the Government to ask for indemnity for his hospitality to La Fayette.

But as far as these exhibitors are concerned, they have no claim upon anybody. The English Government remitted the duties upon all these articles. They were received free of duty, and were mostly sold by the exhibitors. Our Government had no participation in the transaction. The whole thing amounts to just this: These men want the United States Government to pay for carrying their fabrics abroad. Why, I should like anybody to tell me the difference between sending them to New York and London. I have a very fine horse that I should be glad to exhibit at the world's fair—at any world's fair, in New York or London—but I should be very loth to ask this Government to pay the expense of taking him there.

The question was taken on Mr. WALBRIDGE's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I move to reduce the appropriation to $6,000. Mr. Chairman, I propose to call the attention of the committee to what is to follow the adoption of the Senate amendment. In a letter addressed to a member of this body, I find it stated that if it be deemed a matter of national credit that this debt should be paid to Mr. Peabody, it follows that it is but just that the exhibitors should be reimbursed for the unexpected and heavy expenses incurred by them. So, then, the committee will see that if we adopt this amendment, we have got to pay the expenses of every man who went to the World's Fair of London. Look at this communication, and you will observe that their name is legion. Here is the communication in print, and a copy has, I understand, been sent to each member from New York. A whole host of claimants will arise from this source, to be paid from the public Treasury. Look at the items. Here is the account of one of them. What do you really think it is? For cartage from store, sixty-two cents; ferryage to Brooklyn, one dollar; postage, fifty cents; sundry charges in Southampton, and so on. The very charge for freight, cartage, and ferryage from the start from New York, and everywhere where these expenses originally commenced, are to be brought here as items which we are to pay. Are we going to do this thing?

Are we to allow men to sport their patriotic feelings, and, just so soon as the emotion has subsided, to turn around and get up a question of dollars and cents? Are we to pay the expenses of all who choose to go to New York to exhibit their inventions? Mr. Chairman, we have to stop this thing here. The principle of the amendment is a dangerous one, and once adopted, we shall have before us thousands of similar cases. It recognizes the right of taxing the Government without authority of law.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, it is with surprise and regret that I have witnessed opposition to this amendment which has come to us from the Senate. In my judgment, it is right and proper that the provision should be inserted in this bill. Indeed, it will be an evil day when we shall sit here to deliberate and to strike out appropriations of this kind—appropriations so eminently national. I am aware that the time has elapsed when the necessity for the expenditure of this money existed; but let us roll back the tide of time for a little while. Let us look at the period when the American heart beat with short pulsations at the position our country was to assume among the nations of the earth at this great industrial exhibition at London. We all know that it was a dark period; but, in the glad sequel, we know, too, that while some palms were taken by other nations, that our happy Republic stood proudly preëminent in all the utilitarian inventions of the day. When the Crystal Palace was constructed—that proud pile of iron and glass—what accommodations were afforded to our citizens, in order to display their inventions? None, sir! There, amid the radiance of the Kohinoor diamond, the fine fabrics and manufactures of France, and the brilliant display of other nations, a small place was allotted the United States. What was to be done—as yet it was naked, and was to be filled up? The goods of our inventors, which had been sent, at the public expense, in the United States frigate St. Lawrence to Southampton, were to be conveyed to London, and placed in proper order for exhibition. How much we should have been mortified and chagrined, had not Mr. Peabody stepped forward as he did, and stood, as it were, godfather to the country on that occasion, by advancing the means on which this appropriation is based? As I understand, sir, Mr. Riddle gave his obligations to Mr. Peabody, which Mr. Peabody holds to this day. Mr. Riddle was then appointed by the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of whom the President of the United States is ex-officio President. Mr. Force, as secretary of the Regents, signed the commission.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? The Smithsonian Institution or the President had nothing to do with it. Peter Force, as chairman of the society, and J. C. Kennedy, as secretary, commissioned Mr. Riddle.

Mr. HUGHES. The facts may be as stated by the gentleman. I heard the argument in the Senate upon this subject. It was there asserted, that this whole thing was recognized by the then Secretary of State, Mr. Webster. It was a national undertaking. Money has been paid; and it now remains to be seen whether the news shall go abroad that an American Congress will repudiate the acts of those who represented us at the great Industrial Exhibition. It was said, by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] that Mr. Riddle—a gentleman whom I know very well—was a horse-dealer and auctioneer in Massachusetts. I ask if it is worse to be a horse-dealer in Massachusetts than to run a line of stage-coaches in Virginia, or any other State, whether it be a regular or extra line of coaches.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I want the gentleman to remember that I expressly stated that I made no reflection upon Mr. Riddle.

Mr. HUGHES. It was stated as a matter of reflection upon Mr. Riddle, as I thought. I know him well; and he is as high-minded and honorable a gentleman as lives in Massachusetts—pursuing his business in a laudable way. If he sells anything, he sells quadrupeds, not bipeds; and I am glad that his vocation is of that description—his auctioneering of that sort. [Laughter.]

The question was taken upon Mr. SMITH's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. If the friends of this bill want it killed, they had better talk it to death. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH, of New York, I move to increase the sum one dollar.

The honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] spoke of a mischievous precedent in this case. There is such a precedent. But it is not to be found where that gentleman finds it. It will not be found in our adoption of the Senate amendment. That mischievous precedent came into being when the Government embarked in this affair; and put one of its vessels at the service of its citizens. Had the Government kept clear of this affair, and confined itself to its sole legitimate office of protecting persons and property, we should not have been annoyed by this amendment of the Senate. But the Government mixed itself up with the proper business of its citizens. Therein was the mischievous precedent; and in that precedent lies our obligation to meet the consequences which we are now called on to meet; and to repay the money which was advanced, because we gave a governmental aspect and character to the enterprise.

When our ingenious citizens were tempted by the liberality of the Government to put their inventions on board this vessel, they did not foresee, that a great expense must be incurred between the arrival of their fabrics on the English coast and the getting of them upon exhibition. This expense they were not able to meet. Indeed, they were not there to meet it. The question now was what to do with the fabrics. Should they be left at Southampton, where they were, or be returned to America? Either would have been deeply disgraceful to our Government and nation; for either of them would have been attributed to niggardly conduct, on the part of the Government. The representatives of the various nations of the earth, assembled at the Crystal Palace, would have thus attributed it. They would have held our Government responsible for the failure of these inventions of our citizens to reach the Palace—for they would, of course, have held the importation of these inventions to be a governmental enterprise. Surely, if the appearances in the case led both Mr. Peabody and Mr. Lawrence to regard the importation of the inventions as an enterprise of the Government, these strangers and the whole British public, would have been justified in so regarding it. In the eyes of all these, then, our Government and nation would have been disgraced, if the fabrics had not reached the Palace. Honor, therefore, great honor, is due to Mr. Peabody for having come forward so generously to shield his native land and her Government from impending disgrace; and dishonor, deep dishonor, will follow the refusal to enable Mr. Riddle to repay the $26,000, which Mr. Peabody's strong American feelings prompted him to lend Mr. Riddle.

I cannot believe, that we are willing to let Mr. Peabody, or Mr. Riddle, lose this money. Sure I am, that our country will not be found willing to have either of them lose it.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. SMITH, of New York; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurring upon the Senate amendment,

Mr. SOLLERS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WESTBROOK and SOLLERS were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 80.

So the Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I now propose that the committee take a recess until six o'clock.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am opposed to that. I do not want to sit here at night. Let us go on with the business until night-fall. I object.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Why, sir, the majority have the right to take a recess.

Mr. STANTON. That was my understanding. I make the motion that the committee take a recess until six o'clock. I think it is competent for me to submit that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the motion cannot be entertained in committee, except by unanimous consent. He recollects to have declined to receive such a motion some time last year, and his decision was sustained.

Mr. STANTON. I must very respectfully take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I do not see upon what principle it requires unanimous consent to entertain this motion. I think the Chair is confounding the action of the committee with that of the House, where it does require unanimous consent, or a suspension of the rules; because the order of the House is, that when it adjourns it shall adjourn to meet at a fixed hour. But in committee, if we can do that at all without the permission of the House, we can do it as well by a majority vote as by unanimous consent. Whatever the committee can do at all it can do as well by a vote of the majority as by unanimous consent.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I hope the committee will not take a recess. There are plenty of refreshments up stairs. There are refreshments down stairs; and there is no necessity of gentlemen going home to dinner.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is not in order to move to take a recess. If it were so, the committee might take a recess beyond the next adjournment, and within three days. The gentleman from Tennessee appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Will the Chair hear me one moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. PURYEAR. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. TAYLOR, of New York, and PURYEAR, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained; the tellers having reported—ayes seventy-six, noes not counted.

Mr. ROWE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the committee refused to rise.

One hundred and twenty-ninth amendment:

Strike out "$97,200," and insert "$160,000," so that the paragraph will read:

For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys, $160,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that the committee do now rise. We have been sitting here for six hours and upwards.

Mr. WALKER demanded tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. PRINGLE, and STUART, of Michigan, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 63.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the Senate amendments to House bill (No. 48) "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June," 1855, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I offer a resolution suspending the five-minute debate on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

[Cries of "Yes!" "That is right!"]

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move to suspend the rules, for the purpose of introducing the resolution indicated.

Mr. ORR. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that a motion be first submitted to take a recess.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

If this motion be carried, and if, after we meet again in the evening, this five-minute debate becomes at all tiresome, the committee can rise and close debate.

[Cries of "Oh! no!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let us close debate and adjourn.

Mr. PECKHAM. I would inquire of the Chair, if the five-minute debate be entirely suspended, on what can we vote except on the mere report of the committee?

Mr. McNAIR. On nothing at all.

Mr. PECKHAM. We can have no information except the ipse dixit of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is not debatable.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet again this evening at seven o'clock. I mean that the House take a recess to that time.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, except by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

Mr. ORR. Then I move to suspend the rules, for the purpose of admitting the gentleman's motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] has already moved to suspend the rules for a different purpose.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to stand in the way of the gentleman's proposition to take a recess. For the present, therefore, I withdraw my motion to suspend the rules, to allow that question to be taken.

Mr. ORR. Then I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose of taking the question on the motion to have a recess till seven o'clock.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object; there is another motion pending.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend the rules. An objection does not defeat it.

Mr. JONES. Then I hope that the House will vote it down.

The question was taken; and, on a count, there were—ayes 78, noes 49.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now make my motion to suspend all further five-minute debate upon the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. SAGE. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. SOLLERS. I wish to ask one question of the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to hear the gentleman's question?

[Cries of "Hear him!" "Go on!"]

Mr. SOLLERS. I only want to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether his motion, if adopted, would exclude a member from asking the Committee of Ways and Means for an explanation of an amendment?

Mr. HOUSTON. That would depend entirely upon the construction which the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union should give to the motion.

Mr. SOLLERS. Then I hope the motion will not be adopted.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama if his motion is to suspend five-minute debate upon the civil and diplomatic bill only?

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. That is all.

Mr. PECKHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurring upon Mr. HOUSTON's motion,

Mr. SAGE withdrew his demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ORR. I think it is likely that we can get along faster by pursuing a different course. With the permission of the gentleman from Alabama, I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

[Cries of "That's it!" and "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I withdraw my motion, for the purpose of enabling the gentleman from South Carolina to submit his motion.

[Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles, which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act to constitute Madison, in the State of Indiana, a port of delivery.

An act to create a collection district for Texas and New Mexico.

An act establishing a port of delivery upon Lake Pontchartrain, and for other purposes.]

Mr. CHASTAIN. I ask leave to withdraw certain papers from the files of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the subject matter of them having been disposed of in the Indian appropriation bill.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that he withdraw his motion, and allow the gentleman from Alabama to renew his. Then let us adjourn, and come here in the morning and dispose of this bill.

Mr. ORR. I will state to the gentleman from Maine—

The SPEAKER. The Chair must arrest the gentleman from South Carolina, and declare that debate is out of order.

Mr. WALSH. I demand tellers upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. JONES, of Louisiana, and GREY, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 53.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic bill.

One hundred and twenty-ninth amendment:

Strike out "$97,200," and insert in lieu thereof "$160,000," so that the paragraph will read: For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys, $160,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

Mr. MILLSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by adding the words:

"—but no part of the increased salaries herein provided for shall take effect until after the termination of the present Congress."

The Chair will perceive that I have offered this amendment for the purpose of enabling me to submit a word or two in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no increase of salary provided for by the amendment.

Mr. MILLSON. Well, then, let the amendment read, "no part of the sum herein provided for," &c. If the amendment be adopted, it will give us, at the next session of Congress, the opportunity of revising and repealing this appropriation. Now, sir, I have very little confidence in appropriations which shall be made from now to the close of the session. There are but three days of the session remaining, unless there be an extension. Whenever a question comes up, there is an evident impatience in the committee. There is a call for "Question!" "Question!" Gentlemen are forced to vote without due reflection or deliberation; and many gentlemen are prevented from engaging in debate, which I think, so far, has been a very profitable one, and not at all abused, by the evident impatience of the committee. The very gentlemen who, in the face of the protest of many of us, determined to close the session on the 4th of August—

Mr. HOUSTON. I call the gentleman to order. I ask that he be confined to a discussion of his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes that the gentleman will confine his remarks strictly to his amendment.

Mr. MILLSON. I have confined my remarks to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees in one way how the remarks of the gentleman may be made applicable to his amendment.

Mr. MILLSON. My amendment was worded with a view to enable me to make a few remarks in order. When interrupted, I was going on to say that the gentlemen who insisted on closing the session on the 4th of August, ought not to expect that those who objected to so early an adjournment on the ground that there was not sufficient time left for a mature consideration of these questions, should abstain from that discussion which is necessary to their being properly understood. I have but little fear of the votes of the House, when these votes are the result of proper discussion, but I do very much apprehend danger in what will take place when there is no deliberation. I have offered the amendment for the purpose of making these remarks, and now withdraw it.

The question was taken, and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

One hundred and thirtieth amendment:

In line one thousand five hundred and seventy-seven strike out "$14,600," and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of depositing public moneys, by receivers of public moneys, $50,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirty-first amendment:

In lines one thousand five hundred and seventy-nine and one thousand five hundred and eighty strike out "$18,100" and insert the words "including new officers not heretofore provided for, $40,000;" so that the clause as amended, would read:

For incidental expenses of the several land offices, including new officers not heretofore provided for, $40,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirty-second amendment:

For salaries of registers and receivers in Oregon and Washington Territories, or so much thereof as may be necessary, per act of 17th July, 1854, $9,000.

For office rent, fuel, and labor for said offices, $4,000.

For iron safes for receivers, and for books, stationery, and furniture, $3,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirty-third amendment:

For surveying the public lands and private land claims in California, including office expenses incident to the survey of claims, and to be disbursed at the rates prescribed by law for the different kinds of work, $300,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirty-fourth amendment:

For rent of surveyor general's office in California, purchase of instruments, records, drawing materials, furniture, fuel, pay of messengers, $18,300.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirty-fifth amendment:

For compensation of draftsmen and clerks, in addition to the amount heretofore estimated, the same being required in consequence of the increased amount of field-work proposed to be executed, $21,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirty-sixth amendment:

For surveying standard parallel and meridian lines in Washington Territory, (an estimated distance of five hundred miles,) $10,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I move that the committee rise. We have been sitting here six hours and a half.

The question was taken upon Mr. TAYLOR's motion; and it was decided in the negative.

So the committee refused to rise.

The question then recurring upon concurring with the Senate amendment,

Mr. HOUSTON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. MATTESON, and JONES, of Louisiana, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes, 84, noes 12.

A quorum not voting, the Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following gentlemen failed to answer to their names.

Messrs. Abercrombie, Ashe, Ball, Banks, Barry, Bell, Benton, Bissell, Bliss, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Clarke, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cruze, Cullom, Cumming, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dent, DeWitt, Dickinson, Disney, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Edwards, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Fenton, Franklin, Gamble, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Hiestler, Hillyer, Howe, Ingersoll, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lindley, Lyon, McDougall, McMullin, Mace, Maurice, May, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morrison, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Packer, Parker, Peck, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Ready, Reese, Richardson, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchie, Rowe, Russell, Sage, Seymour, Shannon, Showers, Simmons, Samuel A. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, Tracy, Tweed, Walley, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Wheeler, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Yates.

The committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had, according to order, the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Senate's amendments to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill; and, finding itself without a quorum, had directed the roll to be called, and the names of the absentees to be reported to the House.

One hundred and twenty-eight gentlemen having answered to their names, being a quorum, the committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the pending Senate's amendment, number one hundred and thirty-six, in which the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The question was taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirty-seventh amendment:

For office rent for the surveyor general of Washington Territory, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, $5,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirty-eighth amendment:

Strike out the following clause:

For two additional clerks in the office of the Superintendent of the Public Printing, authorized by the joint resolution approved February 6, 1854, at $1,500 each, $3,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and thirty-ninth amendment:

Page seventy-one, line one thousand seven hundred and twenty, after the word "resolution," add the words "of the House of Representatives."

The amendment, as amended, reads:

For the compensation to draughtsmen and clerks employed upon the maps of the public lands, under the resolution of the House of Representatives of 4th of May, 1848, $7,500.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and fortieth amendment:

For running the northwestern boundary line between the United States and Great Britain, from the Lake of the Woods to the Pacific ocean, for marking the forty-ninth parallel, and for such survey as may be necessary to fix said boundary between the main and Vancouver's Island, and including the compensation of the officers and others employed in the work, $242,170.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I would not be performing my duty as a Delegate from the Territory of Washington, were I to sit here without saying something on this question. I propose to amend the amendment of the Senate by increasing the sum one dollar. I have no doubt in my own mind of the correctness of the motives of the Committee of Ways and Means of this House. But I will say, that if that boundary line is ever intended to be run by the Government of the United States, now is the time that it should be run. And I will state, for the information of the committee, that the inhabitants who are American citizens, are now contending with the British authorities for the possession of three islands, which lie in the channel, between Vancouver's Island and the main land. Forcible possession has been taken of one of these islands by the citizens of Great Britain, and forcible possession has been taken by the United States authorities of the same island. I learn by my last advices from Washington, that the flags of both nations have been raised on the same island, and that the subjects of Great Britain have recently transported large numbers of cattle and sheep on to this island. The Americans are contending, with arms in their hands, for this island, and as strictly resisted by the subjects of Great Britain.

The Indians who reside in that Territory, and near the division line, do not know where the line is. They believe all the country around that part belongs to the British. They see no flag in those waters carried by steamers, except the British flag. They observe no warlike demonstrations there, except British. They see and hear British subjects claiming and contending for these islands. They observe the British flag placed there, and hence they conclude that they are British waters and British lands. They have long known the flag of England, and they have been in her service for the past forty years. They have been well armed by her for the purpose of taking furs and killing wild animals; and the white men in the employment of England have been, for the last forty years, encouraged, as a matter of policy, to take wives from among the Indians, and a numerous race of half-breeds is the result, whose sympathies are with the natives. Many of these half-breeds are in possession of the soil. They have selected their homes. They have placed the lands in cultivation; and by the donation law of Congress, they are excluded, and a division is made by that law separating the American half-breed from the foreign half-breed; and by the operation of that law Indian families are divided, a part of the children can hold land, while others of the same families are excluded.

A powerful tribe to the North of the line of 49° of whom I made mention in my remarks to-day upon another subject, regard the whole of Puget's Sound as belonging to England. It is that tribe who made prisoners of twenty-seven American citizens who were wrecked on Queen Charlotte's Island. They have recently made a descent upon the inhabitants of Puget's Sound, and have forced them from their homes into fortifications, and their houses are now deserted and empty. Their stock and property are all liable to be burned and destroyed by these Indians. Some of the inhabitants have been murdered and butchered in cold blood, and it becomes exceedingly necessary that the boundary line should be established, that the Indians at least may know where the boundary line between Great Britain and the United States is; and that Great Britain and her subjects may know how far they may go, and what land belongs to them, and what to the United States.

This territory, of which I have been speaking, does belong to the United States, by the terms of the treaty. You will see by the treaty that the boundary line comes down the parallel of 49° of north latitude to the middle of the channel which separates the continent from Vancouver's Island, and thence southerly through the middle of the said channel, and of Fuca's Straits to the Pacific ocean. You see that the line through these channels conforms to no parallel of latitude. It cannot be known except by a survey. The Puget Sound Company and the Hudson Bay Company claim that these islands all lie on the west side of the line, and therefore belong to England; and the Americans claim that these islands, all of them, lie on the east side of the line, and therefore are the rightful property of the United States. And unless the line is established, it will lead to a war. It is an inducement to trouble, vexation, and the shedding of blood; and every day that the establishment of the line is put off prolongs the evil day. If it was necessary to establish the boundary line between Maine and the British possessions, it is equally necessary to establish the boundary line between us and the British in Washington. I speak the sentiments of those I represent, when I appeal to Congress not to delay this matter, to make the survey immediately, and settle the rights of the contending interests in that quarter.

I hope the Congress of the United States will order the line to be run, that this pillage may be stopped, and this incentive to war be removed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am in favor of striking out this amendment, and agree with the committee in recommending a non-concurrence in the Senate amendment. I wish now to put in a five-minute speech by way of notice of what I wish to say in an hour's speech, which it would not be proper to make so near the close of the session. I am opposed to paying any money out of the National Treasury at this time for running any line in the northern part of this continent between the possessions of Great Britain, or of any other Power, and the United States. I offer now the simple reason, that the day is not far distant when all the British possessions upon this continent will be annexed to the United States of America.

It will be recollected, Mr. Chairman, that some months ago I submitted to the House a resolution, proposing that the Executive be authorized to open negotiations with the Government of Great Britain, with the view of ascertaining the terms upon which she would consent to such annexation, with the assent of the people of the Provinces. Sir, since that time, as gentlemen in this committee have observed, that resolution and other causes have given rise to a debate in the British Parliament on this subject, in which the ground was assumed by British statesmen that the day was fast approaching when the connection of the British colonies in North America with the mother country must be abandoned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to call the gentleman to order. The gentleman must confine himself in opposition of the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very well. I am opposed to the amendment, because I am opposed to making any appropriation for running the boundary line between the United States and the British possessions as a useless expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is to increase the appropriation one dollar; and the gentleman must confine himself to showing why it should not be increased that amount.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will, sir. I am against increasing the appropriation one dollar; and I am endeavoring to show that no appropriation at all should be made. Sir, no man of progress—no man who looks at the condition of things as they exist at the present day—can doubt that the period is not far distant when all that part of the North American continent will become parts of one Federal Government, and recognize as their national flag our "stars and stripes."

I referred to the fact, that in the British Parliament the position has been assumed that the Government must look to no very distant period when their colonial possessions in North America must be abandoned. And, sir, it was then frankly, but truly, avowed, that if, in an unfortunate hour, there should be a conflict between the two nations, it would be impossible for that Government to hold her possessions upon this continent. I am no "fillibuster," and look fearfully upon every proposition to extend our territory by the power of arms; but I desire to give notice that I intend, before this Congress closes, to offer a resolution to open negotiations looking to the honest and peaceful extension of our territory in the North.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must again arrest the gentleman in his remarks, and remind him that he must confine his remarks to opposing the amendment. The course of remark the gentleman is pursuing is certainly not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I will move to strike out the whole appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order for the reason that there is an amendment already pending.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment to the Senate amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I now move to amend by—

Mr. FLORENCE. I will move an amendment if the gentleman will allow me. I move to strike out "forty-ninth," and to insert "fifty-four forty."

A MEMBER. Or fight. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. No sir, I do not accept that modification.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Now, sir, I am opposed to that amendment. I am opposed to reviving a line between the United States and the British possessions at 54° 40', or any other parallel on this continent, because looking to the present condition of things—

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I rise to a question of order. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is certainly not in order. He proposes to run a line in the British possessions. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes the line of 54° 40' or fight. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. No, sir, I did not accept the modification.

Mr. STUART. Well, sir, there is no such line in the American possessions.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call the gentleman from Michigan to order. He is discussing his point of order, not stating it.

Mr. STUART. Well, I raise the question of order, and I ask the Chair to decide it. The Senate's amendment is to run the line of 49°, which is the one recognised by the law and treaty. There is no such line as that proposed in the gentleman's amendment on the American possessions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may move to strike out 49°, and insert in lieu thereof 54° 40'.

Mr. FLORENCE. I never believed that the line ought to have been 49° of latitude.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In relation to the line of 54° 40', I very much regret that on a certain occasion the gentleman's party "jimmied," (to use a western expression.) [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to an explanation of his amendment.

A MEMBER. The gentleman should confine himself to an opposition of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLORENCE. And not to the party to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio understands the rules, and the Chair trusts that in his remarks he will confine himself to them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I certainly shall. If the rule is to be rigidly enforced on me, I have simply to say, that the further north we have to expend money in surveying a line, the better.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman had been in the committee all day he would have found that the Chair has pretty strictly enforced the rule on all gentlemen.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not doubt it, but as I have been out on a committee of investigation, I hope the Chair will indulge me a moment longer. I propose to give notice to members that if I can get the ear of the Speaker, I will, at a proper time, introduce a resolution looking to a correspondence with the Government of Great Britain, with a view to the peaceful annexation of all the British possessions in North America. Believing that such a destiny awaits these possessions, I am opposed to these appropriations for running lines. For this opinion, I have reasons which I am prepared to give now, but I cannot expect to do that so near the close of the session. I expect to give them next session, should I live to return. My only desire now is to call attention to the fact that I shall introduce and urge my resolution in good faith; not that I now expect to carry it at this time, but intending to follow it up at the next session as an important national measure. Then I will give the reasons in full, which I now refrain from doing in order that the legitimate business of the House may progress.

The question was taken; and Mr. FLORENCE's amendment was rejected.

The Senate's amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and forty-first amendment:

For arrearages of necessary traveling and personal expenses due employees on the northeastern boundary survey during the years 1844, 1845, 1846, and 1847, $2,016.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and forty-second amendment:

Strike out the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to replace the moneys already paid for rents, and to pay the semi-annual payment of rent falling due on the 1st day of January, 1855, on the two leases each bearing date the 19th day of August, 1853, one thereof with the Bank of the State of New York, and the other thereof from the Bank of Commerce, both being for property on Wall street in the city of New York, leased for the uses of the assay office in the city of New York, $68,458 33."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and forty-third amendment:

For repair and renewal of the gas-pipes through the Capitol, and fixtures necessary for the lighting of such committee-rooms therein as need it, and lighting East Capitol street from the Capitol to Third street, $7,000.

For painting and repairs inside of the Capitol, new furnaces under the Senate Chamber and Supreme Court room, &c., $5,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means propose the following amendment:

Strike out "for repair and renewal of the gas pipes through the Capitol, and fixtures necessary for the lighting of such committee-rooms therein as need it, and lighting East Capitol street from the Capitol to Third street, $7,000."

Also, in line eighteen hundred and fifteen, strike out the words "and so forth," and at the end of the line insert the following: "For furnishing and putting up new furnaces, repairing old furnaces, rebuilding and ventilating air chambers of the House of Representatives, $4,500;" so that the amendment, as amended, will read:

For painting and repairs inside of the Capitol, new furnaces under the Senate Chamber and Supreme Court room, $5,000.

For furnishing and putting up new furnaces, repairing old furnaces, rebuilding, and ventilating air chambers of the House of Representatives, $4,500.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was then concurred in.

One hundred and forty-fourth amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay for two hundred and twenty feet and five inches of granite coping, used in the improvement of the triangular square at the corner of Thirteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, $515 47.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is a mistake, as I understand, in the printing of the next amendment. There are two amendments instead of one, and the Senate have omitted numbering the first amendment which is to strike out all from line eighteen hundred and sixty-one to line eighteen hundred and seventy-one inclusive. That will be amendment number one hundred and forty-four and one half.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I hope the Clerk will read what is proposed to be stricken out, and that the committee will not agree to strike it out.

One hundred and forty-four and a half amendment:

Strike out the following proviso: "Provided, That each and all persons who have been, or may be, appointed hereafter to disburse the money which is now, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the building or repair of any of the edifices or structures for which appropriations are made in this act, and are not now required by law to give bond and security, shall give bond, with good securities, in sufficient penalty, to be approved of by the head of the Department under which such disbursement may be made, or the President of the United States, when the work shall be specifically under his direction."

The clause, as amended by the Senate amendment, would read:

For the Capitol extension, $750,000.

Mr. FULLER. Would it be in order for me to move an amendment by striking out and inserting?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that such an amendment would be in order.

Mr. FULLER. I then offer the following amendment, which I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to offer:

To make a report and synopsis, to be furnished to Congress at the first of the next session, showing the changes and alterations made in compiling and codifying the revenue laws, explanatory of the same, to be prepared by the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $5,000, and—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not germane to the Senate amendment.

Mr. FULLER. I suggested to the Chair whether striking out and inserting in the amendment would not be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The words proposed to be inserted would have to be germane to the Senate amendment.

Mr. FULLER. My amendment is germane to the subject of the Senate's amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. But not germane to the pending amendment of the Senate.

The question was then taken; and the Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and forty-fifth amendment:

For continuing the work for a supply of water to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $500,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the corporations of Washington and Georgetown, or either of them, shall appropriate and pay an amount equal to one fourth of said sum for the same purpose, and shall agree to pay in like manner the same proportion of all future appropriations; and full power and authority are hereby given to said corporations, respectively, to raise, by loan or otherwise, any sum of money that may be necessary to enable them, or either of them, to make the appropriation herein required; and the said corporations of Washington and Georgetown, and the inhabitants of the said cities respectively, or the corporation making the appropriation, and the inhabitants of such city, shall be authorized to use the surplus water which may be brought by the Washington aqueduct, after supplying the Government establishments in Washington, under such general rules and regulations as may hereafter be prescribed by Congress; and each of said corporations shall have the right to charge and collect of the inhabitants of such city such reasonable tax or rent for the use of the water as will provide for the regular payment of the interest, and the gradual payment of the principal, of any money which may be raised under the authority hereby given.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and forty-sixth amendment:

For completing the bridge over the Potomac river, near the Little Falls, $75,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair, for information. If the committee do not concur in the Senate's amendment, will it then be in order to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment be non-concurred in, it will have been disposed of.

Mr. SMITH. Then, as the amendment is to go over, I will not raise a question now. Let us vote on the Senate's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Virginia as offering an amendment?

Mr. SMITH. I have sent an amendment to the Clerk's desk, but the suggestion has been made that we shall concur in the Senate's amendment, and then have a vote by the yeas and nays in the House. I have no objection to that.

[Cries of "Question! Question!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the Senate, in which the Committee of Ways and Means recommend non-concurrence.

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and forty-seventh amendment:

For permanent repair of the roof of the Capitol with copper, $2,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and forty-eighth amendment:

Page seventy-eight, line one thousand nine hundred and twelve, strike out the word "on," and insert in lieu thereof the word "and," so as to make the clause read:

For lighting the President's house and Capitol, the public grounds around them, and around the Executive offices, and Pennsylvania avenue, $22,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and forty-ninth amendment:

Page seventy-nine, line one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, among the appropriations for public buildings and grounds, insert the following:

For furnishing lamps and lamp-posts from Sixteenth to Seventeenth streets on Pennsylvania avenue, in front of Lafayette square, $500.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and fiftieth amendment:

Insert after the preceding amendment, the following: For completing the improvement of Pennsylvania avenue west of Seventeenth street, $9,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence:

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I desire to offer the following amendment to that Senate amendment. It is to add after the words "dollars," the following:

And for a culvert across Judiciary square, $5,500.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That amendment is not in order, and I would say to the gentleman from Kentucky that there is not a drop of water in Judiciary square, or within a whole street of it.

Mr. STANTON. The Commissioner of Public Buildings says there is.

Mr. JONES. E street is between Judiciary square and that drain to which the Commissioner refers.

Mr. STANTON. I think the amendment is in order. There have been general laws for the last forty years for making improvements in the city of Washington, and this amendment is part of the system.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the question of order well taken, and rules the amendment out of order. We are now considering a Senate amendment, and no amendment is in order to that, except one which is germane to that amendment. The Chair cannot see that an amendment to provide for the construction of a culvert across Judiciary square is germane to the improvement of Pennsylvania avenue, which is the object of the Senate amendment.

The question was then taken upon agreeing to the Senate's amendment; and it was decided in the negative.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and fifty-first amendment:

After the last amendment insert the following:

To reimburse the expenditure made by the Commissioner of Public Buildings for the repair of the Potomac bridge, when injured by fire, $4,500.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and fifty-second amendment:

Page seventy-nine, line one thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven, after the appropriation for completing the Patent Office Building, insert:

For altering the streets, and repairing in front of the east wing of the Patent Office, putting up iron railings, flagging footway, putting in order yards, painting new saloon of the Patent Office in fresco, $14,250.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have just received a note from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, asking for an appropriation—which the Committee of Ways and Means recommended at one time—for additional repairs to the Patent Office. It is for fitting up a portion of the basement of that building, in order to locate some of the clerks in it. The Commissioner of the General Land Office assures me that the Commissioner of Patents and the Secretary of the Interior concur in the recommendation.

The amendment was read, as follows:

For iron railing and flagging in front of the old portion of the Patent Office Building, for altering the windows in the rear, and dressing off the granite to conform to the front, and for private stairway in the building, $5,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate, as amended; and being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and fifty-third amendment:

For fuel for President's House, $1,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a concurrence in that amendment, but I hope it will be non-concurred in.

The question was put; and the Chair announced the vote in the negative.

Mr. PECKHAM. I rise to a question of order. I rose and addressed the Chair before the question was put upon concurring in the amendment. I desire to speak in reference to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman, nor did he hear him until after the vote had been announced.

Mr. PECKHAM. Well, sir, I desire to speak upon this item. It is true the amount involved is very small, very contemptible; but the principle involved is a very important one. It is quite unusual in the history of the Government.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is not unusual. The same item has heretofore been allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The Chair will, however, inform the gentleman, that he had announced that the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then I have nothing to say. I thought the question was decided differently.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I submit that the amendment has not been decided. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and fifty-fourth amendment:

For a furnace keeper for the President's House, $365.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence, but I think the amendment ought to be non-concurred in.

Mr. PECKHAM. I move to reduce the amount specified in the amendment five dollars.

As in the last amendment, the amount involv is a very contemptible one, but the principle is of very great importance as connected with the salary of the President of the United States. The Constitution of the United States provides:

"The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected; and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States, or any of them."

Now, Congress might just as well attempt to pay the President's butcher's bill, or his tailor's bill, as such items as this.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. The gentleman from New York states that the President of the United States is entitled to $25,000 a year for his services, and nothing more. Sir, I should like to know whether he pays for house rent? I should like to know whether he pays for a good many other things connected with his expenses? Sir, the President not only does not pay for house rent, but he does not pay for any of the curtains in the east room of the White House, nor does he pay for any of the furniture there. Appropriations have been made for those things from the beginning of the Government down to the present time. Sir, the object of this opposition is manifest. I call upon the Democratic party to stand by the President when he is attacked in this insignificant manner. It seems to me extraordinary that this little attack should be made, at this time, on the President, and when the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means says that these appropriations are usual, and ought to be made.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is not one of the planks of the Democratic platform. [Laughter.]

Mr. PECKHAM. Has an appropriation like this been made since the organization of the Government?

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. Yes, sir; one was made at the last session.

The question was taken; and Mr. PECKHAM's amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I demand tellers on the Senate amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BENSON and KITTREDGE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in, the tellers having reported—ayes 64, noes 59.

One hundred and fifty-fifth amendment:

For grading done by order of Ignatius Mudd, late Commissioner of Public Buildings, in reservation No. 17, between Third street east and New Jersey avenue, §484 89.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The amendments are numbered wrong. There are no numbers from one hundred and fifty-five to one hundred and fifty-nine.

One hundred and fifty-ninth amendment:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed the following buildings: At Ells worth, Maine, for the accommodation of the custom house and post office, a building of brick, with fire proof floors, constructed of iron beams and brick work, iron roof, shutters, sills, &c., twenty-five feet by thirty, and twenty-five feet in height from the foundation, to cost not more than $10,000. At Belfast, Maine, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of like materials, forty-five feet by thirty-two, and thirty-two feet high, and to cost not more than $20,000. At Gloucester, Massachusetts, Toledo, Ohio, Burlington, Vermont, and Sandusky, Ohio, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of like materials, sixty feet by forty-five feet, and thirty-two feet from the foundation, and to cost not more than $40,000 for each building. At Milwaukee, Wisconsin, for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, and United States courts, a building of like material, sixty feet by forty-five feet, forty-eight feet in height from the foundation, to cost not more than $50,000. At New Haven, Connecticut, Newark, New Jersey, Buffalo, New York, Oswego, New York, Wheeling, Virginia, Chicago, Illinois, and Detroit, Michigan, each for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, United States courts, and steamboat inspectors, a building of stone, of like floors, beams, roofs, shutters, &c., eighty-five feet by sixty feet, sixty feet in height from the foundation, to cost not more than $8,000 for each building; the building at Detroit to be erected upon a water lot belonging to the United States. At Galveston, Texas, for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, and United States courts, a building of brick, of like floors, beams, roof, shutters, &c., forty-five feet by seventy feet, forty-eight feet high from the foundation, with a portico on two sides, and to cost not more than $100,000. At Petersburg, Virginia, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of stone, of like floors, beams, roof, shutters, &c., sixty feet by forty-five feet, thirty-two feet high from the foundation, to cost not more than $62,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. At the request of the member from the Knoxville district, I offer the following amendment. If it is adopted, I shall offer one of the same kind for Memphis:

At the end of the section, insert the following: "And the customs to be collected at the port of delivery at Knoxville, Tennessee, for the next five years, are hereby appropriated for the construction of a custom-house at that port."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. There is no law authorizing the construction of such a building.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to second the views of the gentleman from Tennessee, and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I call for tellers on the original proposition.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I move to add one dollar to each sum mentioned in the Senate's amendment. In making this motion I signify that I am in favor of building these custom-houses. On what ground it is that the building of them is objected to, I do not know. Is it on the ground that the tariff system should be abandoned; and that, therefore, all custom-houses, both existing and prospective, must fall with it? If on that ground, then I welcome the objection, for I am an absolute free-trade man, would have Government supported by direct taxes, and do not expect to see Government right until it is so supported. But it is not on that ground that the building of these custom-houses is objected to. None of the objectors propose free trade. All are in favor of continuing to defray the expenses of Government by duties. Hence all of them are to be regarded as in favor of safe and suitable buildings for custom-house business, wherever there is enough of such business to make such buildings necessary. I take it for granted that the only question in the case, which these objectors allow to be pertinent and influential with them, is, whether there is business to warrant the erection of the proposed custom-houses. Others must speak for the custom-houses recommended in other States. I will confine myself to the advocacy of the two recommended to be built in my own. Both are needed, by the fact that, in each of the towns, (Buffalo and Oswego,) there is a vast amount of custom-house business. That of Oswego, I feel safe in saying, exceeds that of any town in the nation above tide-water. Indeed, there are scarcely more than half a dozen towns in the whole nation that exceed Oswego in custom-house business. The duties payable on bonded and unbonded property passing through Oswego in the year 1853, exceeded $696,000. This year they will probably exceed $1,000,000. I learn from the collector of that port that they amounted, up to the 30th June, to $518,276.

To enforce my claim for a custom-house in Oswego, I will read to the committee an extract from a letter which I received a fortnight since from the collector:

"You will see that our business is constantly and largely increasing. The bonded property received here from Canada this year to the end of June, is nearly equal to the total of last year; and the last year showed a very large increase on any former year."

Speaking of the contracted and unfit building which Government leases, the collector says:

"The custom-house building here is eighteen feet by fifty feet, and contains no vault or place of deposit for the public moneys collected here except a common iron safe. My clerks and assistants when fully employed, as is the case the greater part of the business season, are about as closely stowed as children at the desks of a well filled country school-house."

I would add that the collector has also informed me, as a further illustration of the large amount of business in his office, that the number of persons employed in it is thirty-five.

I have, now, ended my plea for a custom-house in Oswego. Confident I am that the facts in this plea cannot be resisted. But if, by possibility, they shall be resisted, and Government shall refuse to build a custom-house in Oswego, what shall I say to reconcile my constituents to such refusal? What pacifying explanations will you enable me to make to them? What shall I be able to say to them in vindication of the justice, impartiality, consistency of Government?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am opposed to the amendment, and call for a vote.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. SMITH, of New York; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I propose to reduce the amount proposed to be appropriated in this section to $100,000.

I offer this amendment for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the amount of money proposed to be appropriated in this section. Sixteen custom-houses are estimated for, and provided for in this amendment of the Senate. The gross amount of money proposed in this section is $1,018,000, and it embraces merely the expense of the erection of the buildings; but the next section provides that there shall be an additional sum appropriated not to exceed ten per cent. upon the sum appropriated by the section now under consideration, for the purpose of covering the compensation of architects, superintendents, advertising, and other contingent expenses in the erection of these various buildings. And not only that, but in addition thereto, the section also provides that so much money shall be appropriated from the Treasury as may be necessary to purchase suitable sites for these various buildings specified in the clause under consideration.

I am opposed to the erection of these buildings in the manner proposed in this bill. Here is a system of log rolling, a system of packing together measures so as to gain the support of members from different parts of the Union to the whole, to unite together a sufficient number of members of this House who are interested in some of these buildings, in order to carry them all through. On the contrary, each building should be left to stand upon its own merits; and the committee should be permitted to decide upon the merits of each proposed building in this amendment; and that is the only way that the advocates of this measure can bring the matter forward in a fair, proper, and legitimate manner. I know that the rules of the House and of the Senate permit these combinations; but still I say it is not proper to be done. If a gentleman desires to have a custom-house erected at any particular place in the Union, let him be prepared to give the House reasons for it; and let the committee be called to vote upon it standing by itself.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri, if he does not know that the Committee on Commerce have been ready for two sessions of Congress to make a report upon the custom-houses; but that they have not had an opportunity to get their report before this body?

Mr. PHELPS. I have been informed, by rumor, that the Committee on Commerce have been prepared to report in favor of some custom-houses.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I did not mean to be understood as saying that they were prepared to report in favor of all these custom-houses.

Mr. PHELPS. Some of them. The gentleman from Connecticut, then, admits, that the Committee on Commerce have been ready to report in favor of some custom-houses, but he does not claim that the committee were ready to report in favor of all the custom-houses proposed in this section.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WENTWORTH. I think this matter had better go to the House for its decision without further discussion. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, and ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. PHELPS, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. LILLY. I move to amend, in line two thousand and thirty-three, after the word "Newark," by inserting the words "and Perth Amboy."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise a question of order upon that amendment. There is no law authorizing it.

Mr. LILLY. There is a custom-house there already, one of the oldest in the country.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then you do not want another.

Mr. LILLY. But it is not adequate to the wants of the business of the place, and there is no accommodations for the post office. I hope Congress will authorize the erection of a building that will accommodate the post office as well as the inspectors and employees of the custom-house.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call the gentleman to order. The question of order is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment not to be in order, upon the ground that there is no law authorizing it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move to amend, in the two thousand and twenty-fourth line, by inserting after the word "Vermont," the words "Plattsburg, New York."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise the same question of order in reference to that amendment, that it is not authorized by any existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon that ground the Chair decides the amendment not to be in order.

Mr. FULLER. I move to increase the appropriation five dollars for each custom-house.

It is due perhaps, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, that I should say a word in reference to this Senate amendment. Our committee have had twenty-five applications for the establishment of new custom-houses in different portions of the Union, accompanied with memorials, references, and statistics, relative to the places for which they were asked. The committee, after careful consideration of all these memorials and papers, have agreed to report in favor of nine custom-houses.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Maine is not explaining his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the gentleman from Maine had proceeded in his remarks, the Chair does not think they were in order. The gentleman will confine himself to the amendment under consideration.

Mr. FULLER. I will do so. If the gentleman from Virginia had waited for a moment, he would have been able to see the pertinency of my remarks to the amendment under consideration.

Mr. LETCHER. If I had waited, the gentleman's five minutes would have been out, and it would have been too late.

Mr. FULLER. Well, sir, I was proceeding to say that the Committee on Commerce had recommended the erection of nine new custom-houses. The Senate have incorporated all those in this amendment, and seven in addition, which is very moderate for the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the Chair enforce the rule, and that the gentleman shall confine himself to the explanation of his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to do so. But the Chair, in the confusion, has not been able to hear enough of the gentleman's remarks to tell whether he was in order or not.

Mr. FULLER. It is very hard speaking at this late hour of the day. I suppose it is in order to advocate the nine custom-houses which the Committee on Commerce in the House have agreed to report in favor of.

Mr. JONES. I must call the gentleman to order. It is not in order for the gentleman from Maine to make a report from the Committee on Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentleman as submitting a report.

Mr. FULLER. I do not know but what the reasons which operated on the minds of the committee in favor of the nine, will apply with equal force to the remaining seven. A prudent man, with abundant means, would erect a suitable building in which his business might be transacted; and it is right and proper that the Government should have suitable buildings for its employees. In order to secure that object, the committee procured plans and estimates for the different places for which buildings were asked. The expense was placed at $10,000, $30,000, $40,000, and $88,000. In many instances it was found that the buildings furnished convenient court-rooms and post offices, as well as custom-houses.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I oppose the amendment, and ask for the vote.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MACY. I demand tellers on the amendment of the Senate.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. RIDDLE and MAXWELL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in, the tellers having reported—ayes 70, noes 52.

One hundred and sixtieth amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the several sums mentioned in the preceding section of this act, as the cost of the buildings therein authorized to be constructed, together with ten per cent. thereon to cover the compensation of architects, superintendents, advertising, and other contingent expenses, and so much as may be required to purchase suitable sites for said buildings, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned until a valid title to the land for the sites of such buildings in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until the State shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax, or in any way assess said site, or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the said United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan, demanded tellers upon the amendment; which were ordered; and Messrs. HENDRICKS and ELLISON were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 53.

So the amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and sixty-first amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed the following buildings:

At New Orleans, Louisiana, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $248,000; and when said hospital shall have been completed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the old hospital at New Orleans to be sold, and the proceeds thereof to be placed in the Treasury of the United States.

At Detroit, Michigan, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $75,000.

At Pensacola, Florida, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $30,000.

At Burlington, in the State of Iowa, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $15,000.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the several sums mentioned in the preceding section as the cost of the buildings therein authorized to be constructed, together with ten per cent. thereon, to cover the compensation of architects, superintendents, advertising, and other contingent expenses, and so much as may be required to purchase suitable sites for said buildings, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned, until a valid title to the land for the site of such buildings, in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until each State shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States, the right to tax or in any way assess said site, or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I move to amend the Senate amendment, as follows:

At the end of line two thousand and seventy-seven, insert the following:

At Shreveport, Louisiana, a marine hospital, to cost, with the site on which it shall be built, not less than $25,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The amendment is not in order. There is no law for the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order, and therefore decides the question of order well taken.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I would inquire of the Chair if the Senate has the power of putting into a bill of the House an amendment which is not in order to the bill, while we in the House are excluded from making any such amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will see how that can very well be done. The Senate rules of order are very different from our rules of order.

Mr. HENN. I move to strike out the word "fifteen" in the two thousand and eighty-third line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty," so that the appropriation for the marine hospital at Burlington, Iowa, shall be $20,000 instead of $15,000. I move the amendment for the purpose of enabling me to say a word or two in behalf of that appropriation. Burlington is situated between the two rapids of the Mississippi river, and is the most important point above St. Louis, and the most suitable for a marine hospital. In the winter time it is impossible for seamen and mariners to get either up or down the river, if caught in the rapids when winter overtakes them. There are no less than six hundred and fifty-eight boats trading at that point, and there has been paid into the hospital fund at that point, by the mariners engaged in the trade, up to this time, $20,000, and

I merely propose to increase the amount in the bill to such a sum as will make it equal to what has been actually paid to that fund by mariners who have been engaged on the boats trading at this very point.

There has been appropriated for the lower Mississippi the sum of $239,000 for marine hospitals. There has been appropriated for marine hospitals, outside of this Congress, $186,000 for the Ohio river, but there has never been appropriated anything for the upper Mississippi, except $41,000 for a marine hospital at St. Louis; and it is important that we should have a hospital at some point above that. This is the only one in the bill for that part of the country, and I hope the committee will increase the amount to $20,000, and that the amendment of the Senate will be adopted.

Mr. HIBBARD. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. This Senate amendment proposes to appropriate, for the construction of the buildings alone, the large sum of $358,000, and the next section adds ten per cent. for the payment of architects, superintendents, and incidental expenses connected with their construction, which will amount to $35,800 more; making in all $393,800, and beyond that, there is in the section this remarkable provision:

"And so much as may be required to purchase suitable sites for said buildings be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

This Senate amendment then goes on to appropriate money for the sites of these buildings without specifying the sum, thereby giving an unlimited discretion as to the sum to be expended for such purposes, and the expense will hardly be less than $100,000.

Mr. HENN. I would ask the gentleman if this committee have not adopted, in the section immediately preceding the one under consideration, a provision exactly similar to this one?

Mr. HIBBARD. Well, I think the committee did wrong. I did not vote for it. I think we are going to very great extremes by voting such a provision as this into the appropriation bill. It is a kind of legislation which, if not actually unprecedented, is almost so, and I trust this committee will not pursue it any further.

These sites cannot cost less than $100,000, making in all $493,000. That sum will not begin to erect those buildings. Next year we shall be asked for a sum as large as this, and for years to come we shall be called upon to continue the appropriations; and I say that the amount of millions of dollars will not pay the expense of erecting these buildings, if we once lay the foundations by this appropriation.

I submit to the committee whether there is one of these marine hospitals which would obtain fifty votes if it stood alone. No one, if considered upon its own merits, could receive fifty votes in this House. Sir, we are now asked to vote an appropriation of more than half a million of dollars in this single clause to the bill; and that, I ask gentlemen to remember, to a bill which already appropriates between seventy and eighty millions.

[Loud cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I raise a question of order in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. The 81st rule provides that no amendment shall be in order to an appropriation bill making an appropriation which is not provided for by law. I submit that the amendment of the gentleman is not provided for by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. The proposition of the gentleman is to increase the Senate amendment from $20,000 to $25,000. In other words, he proposes to make an appropriation of $5,000 which is not authorized by law. Other amendments have been ruled out of order upon precisely the same grounds; and I must submit, that if they were out of order under the 81st rule, this is also out of order under the same rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is in order. It simply proposes to strike out the sum named, and to insert a different one. The principle of the rule is disregarded, it is true, but the language of the amendment is such that it cannot be ruled out of order. It is in order to move to increase the appropriation, and that is what the amendment proposes to do.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Amendments have been offered by other gentlemen to-day, and have been ruled out of order, upon the same rule. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. HENN's amendment was then disagreed to.

The question then recurred upon concurring in the Senate's amendment.

Mr. HUNT. For the purpose of saying a word in reference to the item for New Orleans, I move to increase the appropriation $20,000.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is based upon the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, which I hold in my hand, accompanied by documents supporting the recommendation. I am not informed, from my own observation, as to the present condition of the hospital upon the opposite side of the river from the city of New Orleans. I think the site was an injudicious one, in the first instance. But, sir, if the House desires to be informed upon the subject, the report and accompanying documents may be read. I am sure that blindly to non-concur in the amendment would be to do great injustice to the case.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I believe there is already a marine hospital at New Orleans, or rather upon the opposite side of the river, at Algiers, and the proposition now is made to sell that hospital, put the proceeds in the Treasury, and establish one upon the city side of the river.

Mr. HUNT. That is the proposition.

Mr. JONES. I am not very well acquainted with the facts, but it strikes me that the best place for the hospital is upon the opposite side of the river, where it is.

Mr. HUNT. The doctors disagree with you. [Laughter.] The doctor is a better judge of diseases than the honorable member. It is said that patients, in crossing the river, are exposed to the elements, to the sun and the rain; that it takes a long time to carry them to the hospital, and that death frequently occurs in consequence.

Now, it is urged that the hospital should be on the side where the vessels lie, and to which the patients can be carried without exposure and resort to the river, which is sometimes contrary in its eddies, and will not always allow crossing with safety. In this report, too, it is said that the building is in a dilapidated condition, and is not sufficiently commodious for the purpose for which it was erected. I derive my information from the documents. And it is further said that it has not those adjacent grounds which are fit for a hospital. It is recommended by the doctor who has charge of the hospital, that they should have the use of the hospital for soldiers, which is on the same side of the river with the city, and which may be made convenient for about $7,000. The grounds adjacent to the hospital there amount to twenty acres, while there are but three hundred feet, or yards, in the grounds of the hospital on the other side of the river. The hospital in the city is accessible at all times, and can more easily be reached than the one across the river. Twenty-eight thousand dollars will repair the present hospital on the side of the river on which it stands; but it is said that it ought not to be repaired, in consequence of its not serving the purpose for which it was built.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. In this, as in almost every other case during this session, the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury is appealed to. If the Secretary gains notoriety for anything while at the head of his Department, it will surely be for his recommendations of custom-houses and marine hospitals. [Laughter.] These recommendations will mark the era of his administration. In after times it will be referred to as the administration of the Treasury Department for recommending custom-houses and marine hospitals. So far has the Secretary gone, that he even recommends the selling of one hospital that another may be built. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I move to increase the appropriation one dollar.

Mr. Chairman, I move the amendment for the purpose of stating one or two facts which it is important the committee should know to come to a proper conclusion on this subject. The New Orleans marine hospital is not on the same side of the river as the city, but is on the opposite side, at a considerable town called Algiers. That is a low, swampy place, and the building there is now in a dilapidated condition. The committee has heard what my colleague has said on the subject.

This is the fact to which I would call the attention of the committee. The Opelousas railroad is now being constructed from Algiers to the West. When constructed, these hospital grounds will be greatly enhanced in value. The amount for which they might be sold would go far to construct a new marine hospital in New Orleans, where the hospital ought to be; for there the steamboats stop and the hands land. Then, inasmuch as the Government will be able, in consequence of the construction of this Opelousas railroad, to sell the property in Algiers for a largely increased value, and inasmuch as what will result from the sale will enable the Government of the United States to build a new hospital in New Orleans, I do not see what objection there can be to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not exactly see the force of the argument of my friend here. He says that this marine hospital is now in Algiers. He says that is a bad location. Well, was it considered such when the building was constructed there? I imagine when the hospital was first located there that it was taken to be a preferable location over New Orleans. But the object now is to get rid of this point at the termination of the railroad for the purpose of building another house in the city of New Orleans, to add, in connection with the custom-house, which cost three or four millions of dollars, to the value of real estate there.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] has said that this Administration is likely to be characterized for its skill and efficiency in pulling down and putting up houses, if it is never marked by anything else.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was disagreed to.

The question then recurred upon concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. WESTBROOK. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was disagreed to.

One hundred and sixty-second amendment:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, providing for the classification of the clerks in the Treasury, War, Navy, Interior, and Post Office Departments, as amended by the act of April 22, 1854, shall be, and the same is hereby further amended as follows, to wit: In the office of the First Comptroller there shall be two additional clerks, of class three; and in the office of the First Auditor there shall be one clerk taken from class three and placed in class four, and four additional clerks allowed, of class three; and in the office of the Second Auditor there shall be one additional clerk, of class one; and in the Third Auditor's office five clerks shall be taken from class three and placed in class four, and twenty-seven temporary clerks shall be placed in class one, and one temporary clerk in class four, and four temporary clerks in class two; and in the office of the Fourth Auditor there shall be one additional clerk, of class three; and in the Sixth Auditor's office one clerk shall be taken from class three and placed in class four, and there shall be added to the clerks in this office ten of class one; and in the Register's office two clerks shall be taken from class three and placed in class four, and two additional clerks added of class one; and in the Treasurer's office one clerk shall be taken from class two and one clerk from class three and placed in class four, and two additional clerks allowed to class one; and in the General Land Office the principal draughtsman shall be classed and paid as a clerk of the third class, and the assistant draughtsman as a clerk of the second class; and in the office of the Secretary of War there shall be added one clerk of class four; in the office of the Adjutant General there shall be one additional clerk of class one; and in the office of the Topographical Engineer one scientific draughtsman as a clerk of class four; and for the superintendency of the building on the corner of F and Seventeenth streets, the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint some one clerk of his Department other than the disbursing clerk for that purpose, who shall be allowed, in addition to his salary as clerk, $200 per annum; and in the office of the Postmaster General there shall be seven additional clerks, viz: four of class two, two of class three, and one of class four; and in the office of the Attorney General, in lieu of the clerks now authorized by law, there shall be one chief clerk, at a salary of $2,200, one clerk of class one, two of class two, one of class three, and one of class four. And the President of the United States is hereby authorized, whenever it may, in his judgment, be necessary, to cause counsel to be employed to assist in the prosecution or defense of causes which may be pending in the Supreme Court in which the United States are interested, and to allow to such counsel such compensation as he may deem reasonable. And in the Department of State, instead of the clerks now authorized by law, there shall be four clerks of class one, three of class two, seven of class three, and four of class four, one clerk of class four to be designated to superintend the northeast Executive Building, and to disburse all moneys belonging to the service of said Department, not otherwise provided for, who shall give bonds as required by the independent treasury act, and receive an additional compensation therefor of $200 per annum. There shall be one chief of the diplomatic, and one chief of the consular branch of the public service; and one examiner of demands for indemnity preferred by citizens of the United States against Governments and of the latter against the former, who shall also perform such other duties as the Secretary of State may designate, each of whom shall receive an annual salary of $2,000; and the chief clerk of said Department shall be allowed compensation of $2,200 per annum. No clerk not now employed in the State Department shall hereafter be appointed until he has been examined by a board to consist of three examiners, to be selected by the Secretary of State, and found qualified in certain particulars, to be prescribed by the said Secretary in fixing beforehand a general standard of qualifications for the clerks to be employed in his Department.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following substitute for that whole section:

And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay to the clerks and employees of the Government, for the year ending 30th June, 1855, such additional compensation as they may be entitled to receive under the act of 22d April, 1854, entitled "An act to amend the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1854, and for other purposes," and whose additional compensation is not otherwise provided for: Provided, That all laborers in the employment of the Executive departments of the Government in the city of Washington shall receive an annual salary of $480 each: Provided further, That the Postmaster General be allowed, in addition to his present number, three clerks of class two, and two of class three; that the Attorney General be allowed in addition to his present number, one clerk of class one, two of class two, and one of class three; that the Secretary of the Treasury be allowed in the Sixth Auditor's office, in addition to the present number, seven clerks of class one, one shall be taken from class three and put in class four; and in the Treasurer's office one clerk shall be taken from class two and one from class three and put in class four; and that the money necessary to pay the compensation, and increased compensation under this section be, and the same is hereby, appropriated.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means was agreed to.

Mr. STRATTON. I propose to amend the amendment as follows:

Provided further, That appointments shall hereafter be made to fill vacancies in the several Departments from such States as have the smallest number of employees in proportion to population.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. We cannot limit the appointing power.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order. Its effect would be to change the existing law.

Mr. STRATTON. The amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means, I believe, specifies the manner in which they shall be appointed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offered his amendment as a substitute for the Senate amendment, which is in order. But the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey proposes to prescribe, by a new law, how, and in what manner, the appointments shall be made.

Mr. STRATTON. But the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama also prescribes the manner in which the appointments shall be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey out of order.

One hundred and sixty-third amendment:

Page eighty-nine, line two thousand one hundred and seventy-five, insert the following:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the second section of the act of 22d April, 1854, entitled "An act to amend the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1854, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, repealed. And from and after the 1st day of July, 1854, the annual salary of the stamp and blank agent for the Post Office Department shall be the same as clerks in the departments of the second class; and that of the clerk in the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings the same as clerks of the first class; and the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Interior, War, and

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 2, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 130.

Navy, Postmaster General, and Attorney General, be authorized to employ one principal messenger each, at an annual salary of $900, in lieu of those now so employed, and the salary of all other messengers and assistant messengers, including the packers in the General Land Office, now authorized by law to be employed in the Executive Departments in Washington, the messenger in the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, doorkeeper and assistant doorkeeper at the Executive Mansion, and keeper of the western gate, Capitol square, and the keeper of Lafayette square, shall be $750 per annum; and the annual salary of the watchmen employed at the Capitol, President's House, and the Executive Departments, and the Auxiliary Guards, and the watchmen of the Capitol extension, shall be $750; and the public gardener shall receive $1,400 per annum; and the captain of the police of the Capitol shall receive $1,600, and each of his assistants $1,300 each per annum; and all laborers in the employment of the Executive Departments in the city of Washington shall receive an annual salary of $480 each; and for the payment of the excess of the sums herein required to be paid over and above those elsewhere contained in this act for said payment, there shall be added thereto respectively such further sums as, together, will equal the amounts herein authorized, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Mississippi. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That none of the draughtsmen in the hydrographical and topographical survey shall be allowed less than is now paid to the lowest grade of clerks in the other Departments of Government.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise the point of order that that amendment is not in order. It proposes to change the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken, and rules the amendment out of order.

The question was then taken upon agreeing to the Senate amendment; and it was decided in the negative.

So the Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and sixty-fourth amendment:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of June, 1853, the pay of the librarian of Congress shall be $2,000; the pay of the two principal assistants each, $1,800; and that of the third assistant, $1,200; and that of the messenger, $1,200.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. PECKHAM. I move that the committee do now rise.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and confusion.] *

The motion was not agreed to.

One hundred and sixty-fifth amendment:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the collections of the exploring expedition, now in the Patent Office, be placed under the care and management of the Commissioner of Patents, who is hereby authorized to employ one principal keeper of said collections at an annual salary of $900, one assistant keeper at an annual salary of $750, one night watchman at an annual salary of $600, and two laborers at an annual salary each of $355.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and sixty-sixth amendment:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That all persons claiming any interest in, or portion of, any grant of land derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments in Upper California, where such original grant has heretofore been presented to the board of land commissioners within the time specified in the thirteenth section of the act of the 3d of March, 1851, but who have failed to present to the said board the evidence of their derivative title to said interest or portion from the original grantee, be, and they are hereby, authorized to present the same; and the said commissioners are hereby directed to adjudicate the said interest or portion in the same manner as if it had been presented within the time originally prescribed by the aforesaid act of the 3d of March, 1851, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. McDUGALL. I move to add five dollars to the appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a word or two on this amendment before the committee acts upon it. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a non-concurrence. I must suppose that they have not investigated or considered the amendment proposed by the Senate, or they would have determined otherwise. In my judgment, there is no provision in the bill equally important with this.

By the treaty with Great Britain for the settlement of our northwestern boundary, the possessory rights of the Hudson's Bay Company were confirmed to them. What these possessory rights were, no one then knew; what they now are, no one knows. It appears it is a fact, that, upon some vague and undefined pretense of right, that company now claim a large portion of the best and most available lands in the Territory of Washington—lands needed for settlement, and needed for the development of the resources of the country. This uncertain, undefined, and, at most, temporary claim, is a serious obstacle to the settlement and progress of one of our most valuable possessions on the Pacific. Puget's Sound ranks next to the Bay of San Francisco, and its dependent country is yet to constitute one of the great States of the Confederacy. It would be a wise, just, and most politic act on the part of this Government to open up the whole of that country to settlement, and relieve it from the incubus of a foreign incorporation, in foreign interests, with foreign sympathies, claiming, with uncertain and doubtful right, the fairest portion of the country. I ask why it is not? I insist it is as legitimate to extinguish the title of the Hudson's Bay Company, as to extinguish the Indian titles to lands within our Territories.

The importance of developing the resources of our northwestern coast is, I believe, understood by this committee. I only wish to call its attention to the fact that the extinguishment of this claim is essential to the prosperity and progress of that important portion of our country. In this matter I have no interest; the people of that country are not my constituents; indeed, I have been informed here that the people of Puget's Sound are to be the antagonists and rivals of my own people in the great commerce of the East. And this may be so; and the bare possibility of the fact is alone sufficient reason why their rights of property should be ascertained and settled without delay. I insist, sir, that this amendment is both politic and just, and should be adopted by the committee.

Mr. PHELPS. I have but a few words to say in opposition to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from California. In the first place, this is not the proper bill, nor time, for any general legislation concerning the proceedings in any court of justice, or any of the land courts of California. In 1851 we made provision for the establishment of a board of commissioners to adjudicate land titles in California. At this very session of Congress we have prolonged the time for which that commission was appointed; and if a necessity had existed at the passage of that bill for such a provision as this of the Senate's amendment, I would ask why the Representatives of that State failed to have it then inserted? I am opposed to this hasty legislation—a legislation which may seriously affect the proceedings of the board of commissioners, now sitting in California.

There is this objection to the amendment. Suppose a Mexican or a Spanish citizen presented his claim to the board of commissioners, claiming to derive his title to land from the Mexican, or Spanish Governments, and the board of commissioners decided adversely to it. Then another person, claiming an interest in the same alleged grant, comes forward, and, by the provision of this amendment, files his title papers, and claims that his case shall be adjudicated. His interest all depends on the alleged grant which had previously been decided on adversely by the commissioners. Thus you will have a new case brought up for adjudication, embracing precisely the same subject-matter as the one already decided, viz: the validity of the grant from the Mexican or Spanish Government. It was for these reasons that the Committee of Ways and Means concluded to recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. PECKHAM. There is, as I observe, no limitation in the amendment.

Mr. McDUGALL. The commission expires on the 4th of March next.

Mr. PHELPS. Let me say, in addition, that if this amendment be concurred in, the commission will not expire on the 4th of March next. At the next session we shall be called on to further extend their time for the purpose of allowing an adjudication of these claims.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. HOWE. There appears in the amendment to be no limitation as to the time within which these claims shall be presented; and to remedy the defect, I move to add the following:

Provided, That no such claim shall be adjudicated which shall not be presented on or before the 4th day of March next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is no necessity for that amendment. You have already extended the time of the commission, and you may do it again.

Mr. HOWE. It appears to me that if the amendment of the Senate is to be adopted, it is necessary that we should provide a limitation within which these claims shall be presented. I think such a provision should be added as a matter of safety.

Mr. McDUGALL. I do not object to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is right; but I do insist that there shall be a fair hearing for that class of claims which have been excluded by a misinterpretation of the law. These claimants are almost the entire American population of the Pacific coast.

But the gentleman says that we had a law passed for the examination of these titles, and the time for their examination extended for another year. I desire to say to the gentleman from Missouri, that the whole coast of California is five hundred miles in extent; that it is a very large State, equal to four or five States of the Confederacy; that it has been populated for over one hundred years; that rights and claims have grown up during that period which need investigation. There is a necessity, too, for investigating the rights and claims of our citizens there which grew out of the treaty with Mexico. We have a right to a full investigation of the claims of our citizens, if it should take fifty or one hundred years. What, I ask, is this amendment? That the law may be so amended as that all rights and claims arising under the Spanish grant may be presented for investigation—claims which would have been presented heretofore but for a misunderstanding of the law. I have practiced law there, and I did not understand it to be necessary myself to present claims subordinate to the original grant. I did not understand the law as it has been construed. All I ask now is, that our citizens may have the opportunity of presenting their claims, and have a just and full hearing. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Howe.]

The question was taken upon Mr. McDUGALL's amendment, as modified; and it was rejected.

The question recurring upon the Senate amendment, it was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and sixty-seventh amendment:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the first proviso to the first section of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation to such persons as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to receive and keep the public money, under the fifteenth section of the act of 6th August, 1846, for the additional services required under that act," approved March 2, 1853, shall not be construed to apply to the collector of the district of Buffalo creek, while such collector shall be one of the designated depositors of public moneys.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and sixty-eighth amendment:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the accounts of the public printers, and the certificates of the Superintendent of Public Printing thereon, so far as the same relate to the printing for the Executive Departments, shall be subject to the examination and control of the accounting officers and Secretary of the Treasury, in like manner as other public accounts; and those which relate to the printing for the Senate and House of Representatives shall be subject to the examination and control of the respective Houses in like manner as other expenditures for said Houses.

Mr. PHELPS. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment:

Page ninety-two, after the word "therein," in line two thousand two hundred and fifty-eight, strike out the words "so far as the same relate to the printing of the Executive Departments."

Page ninety three, after the word "accounts," in line two thousand two hundred and sixty-two, strike out the residue of the clause, which reads "and those which relate to the printing for the Senate and House of Representatives shall be subject to the examination and control of the respective Houses in like manner as other expenditures for said Houses;" so that, as amended, the clause will read:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the accounts of the public printers, and the certificates of the Superintendent of Public Printing thereon, shall be subject to the examination and control of the accounting officers and Secretary of the Treasury, in like manner as other public accounts.

The amendment will explain itself. The Secretary of the Treasury will refer to the accounts of the public printing; and the certificates of the Superintendent of the Public Printing shall be subject to the examination and control of the Secretary of the Treasury, in like manner as other public accounts.

The amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means was agreed to.

The question recurred on the Senate's amendment, as amended; and it was concurred in.

One hundred and sixty-ninth amendment:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint or employ in his official household the following officers, to wit: one secretary to the President, at a yearly salary of $2,500, who shall take charge of such official papers as shall be confided to him, and perform such other duties as may be directed by the President; one clerk, at a yearly salary of $1,600; one steward, at a yearly salary of $1,000, who shall, under the direction of the President, have charge of, and be responsible for, the plate and furniture of the President's Mansion, and shall discharge such other duties as the President may assign him; one messenger, at a yearly salary of $900; and one assistant messenger, at a yearly salary of $750. And for the payment of the compensation of the said officers, during the present fiscal year, the sum of $6,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. FLAGLER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out in line two thousand two hundred and seventy, the words "twenty-five," and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifteen;" and in line two thousand two hundred and seventy-three, strike out all after the word "dollars." The clause, if so amended, would read:

And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint or employ in his official household the following officers, to wit: one secretary to the President, at a yearly salary of $1,500, who shall take charge of such official papers as shall be confided to him, and perform such other duties as may be directed by the President; one clerk, at a yearly salary of $1,600.

This section proposes an increase of nearly $7,000 to the expenses of the Executive Department. I suppose it has crept in here in the general increase of expenses of the National Government in almost every conceivable way, and looks like an attempt to implicate the President in that vast enlargement of our national expenditure. I am persuaded he does not desire this increase of officers in or about his household. I think I can prove, not by any express declaration, but by inference, that he is opposed to this increase, and that he will exclaim, if it passes, "An enemy hath done this." On a certain 4th of March, standing in the presence of thousands of his countrymen not far hence, he uttered these memorable words:

"In the administration of domestic affairs, you expect a devoted integrity in the public service, and an observance of rigid economy in all departments, so marked as never justly to be questioned. If this reasonable expectation be not realized, I frankly confess that one of your leading hopes is doomed to disappointment, and that my efforts, in a very important particular, must result in a humiliating failure."

Now, assuming—and I hope it will not be regarded as a violent assumption—that the President meant what he said on that occasion, he will not thank us for swelling the expenses of the White House, as proposed by the Senate. I would be glad to move the extract which I have read from the inaugural as a substitute for this section. Would that be in order, Mr. Chairman? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has an amendment already pending.

Mr. FLAGLER. I would withdraw that if this is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Have it read at the desk for information.

Mr. FLAGLER. I acquiesce in the decision of the Chair. I am satisfied, upon due reflection, that the economical language of the inaugural would not be in harmony with the extravagance everywhere apparent in the plethoric proportions of this bill. I think it a pity, however, that it cannot be embalmed and laid away in so fitting a sepulcher.

The question was taken upon Mr. FLAGLER's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I propose to ask the Chair whether an amendment coming in after the word "dollars," in the two thousand two hundred and eightieth line, after the provision of a salary for a messenger, in these words, "and for one lady of the bedchamber, $500," would be in order? [Laughter.]

Mr. PRATT. Nonsense.

Mr. PECKHAM. I have an amendment to offer to this Senate amendment, and one word to say upon it. I move to strike out all this appropriation except one dollar. What I said in regard to lighting the fires and keeping the furnaces in the President's House applies to this appropriation. Here is a number of new officers originated to form an "official household" for the President. I have no idea, Mr. Chairman, none whatever, of increasing the salary of the President of the United States in a petty, sideways, indirect manner. If his pay is not enough, I am in favor of increasing it in a straightforward, manly, Democratic mode.

Mr. PRATT. The President does not ask for any more.

Mr. PECKHAM. But as long as the Constitution remains unaltered, which prohibits any change of his salary to affect an unexpired term, I do not see how we can aid the President in his present term; but we can raise his salary by the commencement of his next term. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, I do not care to argue this question, and I do not intend to elaborate at all—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let us have a vote then.

Mr. PECKHAM. As soon as I am through I will. But this idea of a sort of kitchen court, a bedchamber court, strikes me as at least a novelty in this land of republican simplicity. But if the President desires them, let him employ them, and give them such titles as he pleases. I have no objection. If he have not the means to pay—if his salary is too small—let us take no diagonal, sinuous way to add to it. A petty mode of doing things, besides being unconstitutional; but let us go openly to the subject, and increase the salary as much as propriety shall require. I shall not go for these things.

Now, the worthy gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. JONES] may advocate this, and think that it is a small matter, and appeal to the Democracy to sustain him. I will not find fault with his taste or his principles. He deems it rather a matter of taste.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to say a word?

Mr. PECKHAM. No, sir. It would be granting what the gentleman denied me; still, I will not forget to be courteous, and I will yield the floor.

Mr. JONES. With that statement, I decline to occupy the floor in the gentleman's time.

Mr. HIBBARD. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. PECKHAM. Not now. As I said, I have no wish to attack the President. I would not act in reference to a matter of this kind, either directly or indirectly, from personal considerations. But, sir, I desire to act as it seems to me the House should act. If the salary of the President of the United States is not sufficient, let it be increased by a direct act of Congress. But let us keep out of the President's kitchen, and not violate the Constitution in this petty way. As to this furnace-tender of the President, I think I understood the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to say that this was the first time the allowance was ever made or proposed. I wish to inquire of him if I am correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York must confine himself to the explanation of his amendment.

Mr. PECKHAM. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether this furnace appropriation has ever been made before?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must call the gentleman to order. The amendment to which the gentleman from New York refers has been disposed of, and it is not in order to refer to it.

Mr. HIBBARD. I do not see what principle is to be settled by the adoption or the rejection of this amendment. I desire it, however, to be understood that this amendment originated in the Senate. It is not an appropriation that the President has asked from the Senate, or from the House. It has not been asked by any Executive Department. But it was put in by the Senate upon their own motion. I do not, therefore, see the pertinency of the remarks of the gentleman from New York. I will state further, that the Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a non-concurrence in the amendment, and I hope the vote will be taken upon it.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I should like to ask the gentleman from New Hampshire whether this amendment was not offered in the Senate by a Whig, and mainly supported by the votes of Whig Senators?

Mr. HIBBARD. I will state, in reply to the gentleman, that I believe this amendment was offered by a very respectable Senator on the Whig side, and that it was carried through under his lead.

Mr. WHEELER. I should like to know whether the Whigs have a majority in the Senate?

Mr. HIBBARD. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. PECKHAM. I call the gentleman from New Hampshire to order. He is not speaking in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HIBBARD. Well, sir, I must say the call to order comes with a very bad grace from the gentleman from New York, who himself opened the way for this discussion.

Mr. PECKHAM. I call the gentleman to order.

When I was upon the floor, and desired to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means a question, I was called to order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman indicated his purpose to ask a question in reference to an amendment which had been disposed of by the committee, and therefore the Chair called the gentleman from New York to order.

Mr. HIBBARD. Well, sir, I will not proceed, if it is objected to; but I must repeat, that this comes with a very bad grace from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PECKHAM's amendment was disagreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was then non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventieth amendment:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That a yearly appropriation be made for the purchase of stationery, binding, public documents, and other contingent expenses of the Executive office, to be expended by the Secretary to the President, under the direction of the President; and for that purpose, during the present fiscal year, $550, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. HAVEN. I will state to the committee that amendments, numbers one hundred and seventy-one, one hundred and seventy-two, one hundred and seventy-three, and one hundred and seventy-four, all of them, relate to the subject of the Mint. They are all connected, and I propose that without reading, the vote be taken upon them in gross. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The CHAIRMAN. If it be the pleasure of the committee, the question will be taken on all the amendments indicated at once.

There was no objection.

The question was taken; and the amendments were non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-fifth amendment:

SEC. 1. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of June, 1854, in lieu of the clerks heretofore authorized by law for the office of the assistant treasurer at New York, he be authorized to appoint, with the approbation of the President of the United States, one chief clerk, at a salary of $2,100, one clerk at $2,000, two clerks at $1,800 each, two clerks at $1,500 each, one clerk at $1,300, one messenger at $900, and two watchmen at $550 each, per annum. In case of the sickness or unavoidable absence from his office of the assistant treasurer, he may authorize the said chief clerk to act in his place, and to discharge all the duties required by law of the assistant treasurer; and in case of the death, resignation, or inability to act of the assistant treasurer, the said chief clerk shall act as such assistant treasurer until the inability be removed, or until a successor be appointed and duly qualified; and all the acts of the said chief clerk in such cases shall be as valid as if performed by the assistant treasurer in person.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment with an amendment, which is to strike out all from the words "and in case of the death, resignation, or inability to act of the assistant treasurer, &c.," to the end of the amendment. Although it may be important to have somebody to act in the place of the assistant treasurer in such a contingency as is stated, still it would be wrong to place in the hands of a person under no bail the sum of $60,000,000. The committee think that portion of the amendment ought to be stricken out, and so recommend.

Mr. HOWE. The amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means does not go far enough.

Mr. HAVEN. The gentleman says that the amendment does not go far enough. If the committee will look to that portion of the Senate's amendment preceding that which is proposed to be stricken out, it will be seen that, in case of the sickness, or unavoidable absence from his office, of the assistant treasurer, he may authorize his chief clerk to discharge its duties. He, then, is responsible for the act. In case of resignation or death, his bail is no longer responsible, for he is then no longer the assistant treasurer.

Mr. HOWE. If the committee be assured there is no doubt in the matter, I have no objection to make.

Mr. PENNINGTON. There is doubt in the matter. The words "may authorize" are construed to mean very frequently "shall authorize;" and, in my opinion, they would relieve the sureties of the assistant treasurer. I would suggest that all that portion of the Senate's amendment from the words "in case of the sickness, or unavoidable absence from his office of the assistant treasurer," &c., to the end, be stricken out.

The question was taken; and Mr. HAVEN's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENNINGTON. Now, I move to strike from the Senate's amendment the words:

"In case of the sickness or unavoidable absence from his office of the assistant treasurer, he may authorize the said chief clerk to act in his place, and to discharge all the duties required by law of the assistant treasurer."

Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me perfectly clear that, in authorizing the assistant treasurer to devolve the discharge of the duties of his office on another person, we virtually relieve him from all responsibility. His sureties will not be responsible in case of the defalcation of his substitute. There cannot be any doubt of this. The term "may," is often construed to mean "shall." Then this may be construed to impose an imperative duty on the assistant treasurer to devolve this duty on his chief clerk. Though we do not make this duty imperative, still, in devolving the duties of his office on his chief clerk, we relieve his sureties.

Mr. WALKER. I apprehend that this substitution is absolutely necessary for carrying on the business of the office, and I have on my table a letter signed by the present and the two preceding assistant treasurers, in which they state that such substitution is absolutely necessary. There have been times when, owing to the illness of the assistant treasurer, important papers in reference to the business of his office have been carried to his bed-side, and even to his death-bed, and he has been compelled to sign them without any more knowledge of their contents than a man would be supposed to have, when suffering pain upon a sick bed. The letter which I have in my possession in reference to this subject, is signed by Mr. Dix, the preceding sub-treasurer, Mr. Bradish, and by the present assistant treasurer, Mr. Cisco, and they say in the letter, that this power of substitution is absolutely necessary.

The question was taken upon Mr. PENNINGTON's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. PRINGLE. I offer the following amendment in line two thousand three hundred and seventy-one, after the words "he may," insert in lieu the words "in his discretion."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the Senate amendment, as amended, it was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-sixth amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act of the 7th of June, 1844, restricting the employment of inspectors, gaugers, weighers, measurers, and markers, in the custom-house to the number then in service, as may be applicable to those employed at the ports of New York and New Orleans, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-seventh amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of June, 1853, the annual salary of the chaplains to Congress shall be $750, and such sum additional to that elsewhere provided as may be required to pay the same to the 30th of June, 1855, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. OLDS. I move to increase the amount of appropriation $500. I offer the amendment for the purpose of saying to the committee that the Senate amendment proposes to give the Chaplains of this Congress precisely what the Chaplains of the preceding Congress received. Under the act of the 22d of July, in which you added twenty per cent. to the compensation of the employees about the Capitol, you would increase the compensation of the Chaplains from $500 to $600, but the extra allowance which you have always given them heretofore would make their salary $750. While you have been thus increasing the salaries of the employees and clerks about the Capitol, I think it but right and proper that we should adopt the amendment of the Senate, and thus increase the compensation of the Chaplains of Congress to $750.

Now, I ask, admitting that we give them $750 per annum, can they live at less than that?

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I oppose the amendment. I do not think that any salaries ought to be increased.

Mr. OLDS, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The Senate amendment was then non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-eighth amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the county of El Paso, in the State of Texas, and the Territory of New Mexico, be, and they are hereby, made a collection district by the name of El Paso del Norte, and Frontera shall be the place or port of entry for said district, and a collector shall be appointed to reside thereat, with such other officers as shall be necessary. The compensation of the collector shall be $2,000 per annum, including the fees of his office.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-ninth amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the "Act making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers," approved the 30th of August, 1852, be, and the same hereby is, amended by striking from the clause in which they occur the following words: "by the construction of a breakwater across Croatan sound."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. SHAW. I think I will be able to satisfy the committee that this amendment ought to be adopted. During the last Congress an appropriation was made for the purpose of constructing a work in North Carolina, by which it was specified that the work should be accomplished in a particular way. The Secretary of War sent a proper officer there for the purpose of examining this work, previous to commencing operations. That officer reported to the Department that, in his opinion, the plan proposed in the act itself would be, to say the least of it, injudicious; and he suggested not only a more feasible, but a cheaper plan for the construction of the work within the amount appropriated. The Secretary of War declined using any of the money that had been appropriated, and has asked Congress, in his report, to modify the act simply by striking out the words in the last line of this amendment, in order that he might use such discretion in expending the money as would enable him to carry out the work efficiently.

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, it would be out of order, were I to refer to anything which occurred in the other end of the Capitol, but I trust the committee will pardon me if I say that, in the early part of the present session, the modification which is contained in this amendment, was passed in the other end of the Capitol even without a reference. The bill containing it came to this House and was referred to the Committee on Commerce, which committee, at least three months ago, reported it back to this House, with a recommendation that it do pass. I have been anxious, from that time to the present moment, to call up that bill, confident as I have been, and confident as I am now, that this House will adopt it, and enable the Secretary to expend this money according to the act of last Congress, save so far only as the mode in which the work shall be accomplished.

I desire further to state to this committee that this modification does not carry in itself the appropriation of a single dollar of the public money. It does not ask for a single cent of additional appropriation, but only asks that such discretionary power shall be vested in the Secretary of the Treasury, as is recommended in the report of the engineer.

The question being upon concurring in the Senate amendment,

Mr. SHAW called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HUGHES and MILLSON were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 53.

So the Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means propose that the one hundred and eightieth and one hundred and eighty-first amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and that, if there be no objection, they be considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition?

There was no objection; and the amendments were read, as follows:

One hundred and eightieth amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint a commissioner, at the compensation of not exceeding $4,000 per annum, to ascertain the nature, character, extent, and value, of all valid claims arising in Washington and Oregon Territories under the treaty with Great Britain of June 15, 1846; and should said claims, or any part thereof, be deemed of sufficient public and political importance to justify or require the measure, the President is hereby authorized to direct said commissioner to agree with the claimants and the Hudson's Bay Company for the relinquishment of their claims on a just and fair valuation, and to pay over the amount so agreed upon, on a full and entire surrender and relinquishment of all right, title, claim, interest, and demand, therein and thereto, to the United States: Provided, That none of the lands acquired under this section shall be subject to donation or preemption, but shall be sold at public auction, unless in cases where, in the opinion of the commissioner, the sum bid for any particular parcel or piece shall be less than a fair price therefor, to be ascertained by the commissioner aforesaid; said sales to be made for cash, at such times and places, and with such postponements, as may be directed by the said commissioner; and for carrying into effect the provisions of this section in case of a purchase, a sum not exceeding $300,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That the amount to be paid for all the said claims, rights, and interest, shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated; and for defraying the expenses of the commissioner, the further sum of $500 is also appropriated, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

One hundred and eighty-first amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That in case it should be deemed inexpedient to sell said lands and improvements immediately, or any part thereof, the President shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, on the extinguishment of the title as aforesaid, to direct the commissioner to take possession of the same, for and in the name of the United States, and to lease the same on such terms and conditions, and for such sum or sums, as he may deem proper and right, subject, however, to sale, when in his opinion it may be proper, after the United States surveys have been extended over the same.

Mr. McDUGALL. I move to strike out the first five words of the amendments.

Mr. Chairman: I wish to submit one or two words on these amendments before the committee acts on them. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a non-concurrence. In my judgment, they are the most important features of this entire bill. By the treaty for the settlement of our controversy with Great Britain in regard to the line separating Oregon from Canada, the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company was, to a certain extent, recognized. They now claim the right to an undefined territory in Washington Territory. It covers the best land there. That company has no determined or ascertained rights; but they have undefined rights by the treaty. The uncertainty of the matter prevents settlement and the development of the resources of the north-western coast.

The claim of that company, unintelligible as it is, should be settled. I say that it is as proper for the Government to extinguish the title of the Hudson's Bay Company as it is for it to extinguish the Indian title. The importance of developing the resources of the northwestern coast of our country is well known to this Congress. I say, without something authorizing us to settle and compromise with the Hudson's Bay Company, that country cannot be speedily settled, and its wealth cannot be fairly developed, for this company has too large an interest to develop it upon that extreme northwest coast. In this matter I know that the interests of Puget's Sound are regarded as antagonistical to the interests of the bay of San Francisco. But I say that they are important interests, and the people of this whole Confederacy are interested in the settlement of the lands there. The passage of this amendment will secure the settlement of that country.

Mr. PHELPS. I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. McDougall.]

This is a proposition to buy the rights of the Hudson's Bay Fur Company in the Territory formerly known as Oregon Territory, but now embraced in two territories, Washington and Oregon. Under the treaty of 1846, the Hudson's Bay Company claim certain rights, and so far as they are recognized by that treaty, I deem it proper to read the third article of that treaty:

"In the future appropriation of the Territory south of the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude, as provided in the first article of this treaty, the possessory rights of the Hudson's Bay Company and all British subjects who may be already in the occupation of the land or other property, lawfully acquired within the said territory, shall be respected."

I now say that the Hudson's Bay Company have the possessory right to continue only during the continuance of the charter of that company. The charter of that company will expire in the year 1863—nine years hence; and that company will have no more right to territory, or land in that Territory, than any other squatter upon the public lands.

But further: I have in my possession a report, submitted at the instance of the Secretary of State, by Governor Stevens, the Governor of the Territory of Washington. He was instructed to inquire into the value of the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company. I find that he values these rights to be worth $300,000. One tract of land claimed by the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company, being fifteen miles by fifty or sixty—I am not particular in relation to the dimensions—Governor Stevens says is almost unexplored, and is only occupied for the grazing of their cattle and flocks of sheep. He estimates that, upon that tract, there are five thousand head of cattle and sixteen thousand head of sheep; and that the value of this tract, with the cattle and sheep, cannot exceed in amount $150,000; which goes to make up a part and parcel of the $300,000 embraced in this appropriation. Do we want to buy these cattle and sheep? I say that the companies have no rights for which the Government of the United States ought to pay them one dollar.

Mr. HAVEN. I do not intend to discuss the merits of this matter at all, for I have not the time to do so. Suffice it to say, that we have two hundred miles in extent upon the Pacific coast, and we give every man who settles there two or three hundred acres of land. It is hardly necessary to acquire more land there by buying out these possessory rights.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. McDougall, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I propose to amend the amendment by increasing the appropriation one dollar; and I do so to say that I do hope the committee will not pass upon this important matter in this great hurry and precipitation. I pledge myself that every single member of this committee who does so, will some day, when he is better informed, regret the vote he has given, if he sustain the action of the Committee of Ways and Means. When the members come to know the facts of the case, they will regret sustaining that committee on this question, if they should do so. [Cries of "Question!"] I have not occupied much time on this floor. Since I came here, I have never, on any occasion, unless it concerned my section of the country, troubled the House, and therefore I claim a few moments on the present occasion. [Cries of "Agreed."] I will read from article four, in this treaty:

"The farms, lands, and other property of every description belonging to the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company, on the north side of Columbia river, shall be confirmed to the said company."

The gentleman from Missouri contemplated the third article of the treaty, and not the fourth article, and all his remarks apply to the third article. The fourth article says nothing in relation to the possessory rights.

"The farms, lands, and other property of every description belonging to the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company shall be confirmed to the said company."

This company claim a large tract of land by virtue of this treaty bordering on Puget's Sound. There is an extensive settlement on that claim formed by American citizens, and they have encroached upon the rights of that company. If the treaty has any meaning in it, then their rights are invaded, and their forbearance is a matter of surprise. There are meeting houses upon it, a county seat laid off, and a large village built up upon it, United States troops fortified upon it, and, as I am informed, are paying rents to that company. United States paying rents! and learned men here say that that company have no rights there by virtue of that treaty. This claim is covered by American citizens, and they are warned off by the company. These settlers and the servants of the company are in constant collision. The rights of neither are defined or set out by metes and bounds. These settlers look to you, and rely upon you, for relief. By a proviso contained in the treaty you are permitted to purchase out the company's interests, and it should be done at some price, and that at once. They were once your constituents, as they have emigrated from every portion of the United States; every city and every county in the whole Union has a representation there; and they have relations and friends here in the States who are now your constituents, and who sympathize with the people of Washington in their troubles.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Do I understand the gentleman from Washington Territory to say that these rights were to be confirmed to the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company?

Mr. LANCASTER. I say so. I will read the article of the treaty again.

Mr. JONES. Why, this is for the Hudson's Bay Fur Company, and not for the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company.

Mr. LANCASTER. If I only had time, I should speak about this appropriation; but I am bound down by the five-minute rule, and the subject is far too weighty to be discussed in five minutes; and my time is about out. I think I may venture to trespass on the committee a short time; and I promise not to disturb the House any more this session.

The article of the treaty reads:

"The farms, lands, and other property of every description, belonging to the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company, shall be confirmed to the said company."

Now, I say that this bill before you, as I look upon it, affects every claimant under the treaty, the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company as well as the Hudson's Bay Company, as also all British subjects. The bill seeks to wipe away from the whole Territory, and from Oregon, every vestige of right, whatever it may be, which is granted by the treaty.

And I say further—as I said before—the settlers are all over the country, upon the best tracts of lands belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company, and to the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company. These companies have been there for some forty years. They have the Indians under their control; they keep the Indians and half-breeds for shepherds and herdsmen. The American citizens who have settled in that country are located in the best sections of it. They are scattered all over the western portion of the Territory, on the streams, in the valleys, and on the prairies. Settlements are far remote, in many instances, from each other, and separated by high mountains and streams, and the thickest and heaviest forests on earth. And now they appear before the American Government, asking it to settle the difficulties now arising between them and the Indians, and half-breeds and British, on the subject of the rights of the Puget's Sound Agricultural and Hudson's Bay Companies. You have had to settle difficulties in that region before. You have had the Cayuse war, and the Rogue River Indian war, and you have had to pay the expenses of those wars. The inhabitants of the country now appeal to you. They ask you, as emigrants from every part of the United States, to give them protection, to extend to them the constitutional aid which is in your power. They have committed no wrong by going there to that remote region. They have been invited by you to go there; and it was not their fault that a foreign company, the stockholders of which reside in London, should, by virtue of a treaty made by the high contracting powers, continue in the very heart of the Territory. The stockholders in London desire to make money by the operations of the companies in Washington; and the persons who are acting as agents—and necessarily by instructions—whatever may be their desire as men, among us, to preserve peace, they have not the power to do it. And I say to you here, that as a matter of prudence, as a principle of saving to the Government, a far larger sum than this bill calls for, that as a matter of humanity, by a desire to save the lives of those who are there, by a desire to remove fear and a well-grounded apprehension of another destructive war with the Indians, agree to the Senate amendment, or issue a commission of appraisal; do something which shall show that, as the guardians of an infant Territory, you have her welfare and prosperity at heart.

The question being upon Mr. LANCASTER's amendment.

Mr. McDougall said: I hope the gentleman from Washington will be allowed to go on [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Washington, and ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. LANCASTER, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. STUART. I now move to reduce the appropriation $1,000; and I yield to allow the gentleman from Washington to finish his remarks.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am thankful for the opportunity to speak again in favor of Washington. I represent that country, and I am here for the purpose of protecting its interests; and I say here before you, that I urge nothing to the consideration of this committee but what I believe to be honestly true and just. I have been a settler there a long time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. It is, that the gentleman must confine himself to opposing the amendment made by the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to an explanation of the reasons why he opposes the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LANCASTER. Well, I am doing so. I was about to state why I knew of the situation of things there, why I knew of the feelings of the citizens, their wants and their fears. Seven years ago this summer I removed across the Rocky Mountains into that Territory, and I have remained there from that time to this, and I intend to be faithful to its interests. I hope this appropriation will not be reduced, and I hope that the amendment will prevail. In the five minutes which were allotted me I spoke mainly of the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company. My friend from Michigan, to whom I am indebted for this act of courtesy—which appears to be a part of his character, and for which he will accept my thanks—feels desirous that something should be said of the operation of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Mr. Chairman, you will perceive, as I read the third article of the treaty, that this company stands on a different ground. It is in these words:

"ART. 3. In the future appropriation of the territory south of the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude, as provided in the first article of this treaty, the possessory rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, and of all British subjects who may be already in the occupation of land, or other property, lawfully acquired within the said territory, shall be respected."

"My time will not permit a construction of this treaty. Five minutes! It would require as many hours. The Hudson's Bay Company are in possession of many tracts of land, which they call forts—both in Washington and Oregon; and this company, like the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company, own large herds of cattle, sheep, and horses. I have no personal knowledge save of the post at Vancouver. The Hudson's Bay Company claim at this place a tract of land, as is said, of thirty-six miles up and down the Columbia river, by about fifteen miles wide. This tract is supposed to be the best land in the Territory. Upon this tract the Fort Vancouver is situated, a strong and well fortified place. This claim of land is all settled by adverse claimants, under the donation law, even up to the cannon's mouth on the fort. Their fields are taken, their fences removed, their houses occupied, and they are defied. They have warned the people away, and from some they receive rents.

The officers in charge are bound to obey the instructions which are furnished from London by the stockholders, and they have manifested a strong desire to prevent collisions between the company's servants and the American settlers. The lands are becoming more and more valuable, and it will not be in the power of the officers in charge, nor of any other force, to prevent destruction of property and loss of life. In the meantime, the settler is without confidence in his title; the improvements of the country are retarded, its prosperity impeded; a belligerent and hostile feeling created, and a public display of settled hatred manifested. These officers are men, and they cannot be blamed for being influenced by the passions common to man. They feel that Britain has solemnly guaranteed, by treaty with our Government, some rights to them; that their rights, whatever they be, shall be respected; and this company, like the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company, has its influence over the Indians and half-breeds. Suppose that some of the members of this House should go there, and use the language we have heard here to-night, the Hudson's Bay Company would be driven out in twenty-four hours, and they would go north into the Cuba of the great Mediterranean of the Pacific—to Vancouver's Island—and they would have it in their power to call for an indemnity, through the home Government, which would sound something like the millions we have heard of this session.

The destruction would not stop at Vancouver. I have been there a long time; I know the spirit of some who were there; and I say here in your presence, that the present state of things cannot continue long. Is it desirable? Is it necessary? Is it called for? By what principle of justice can you desire that these large tracts of land in the very heart and core of the Territory should be possessed and controlled by foreigners who reside six thousand miles from their possessions, and who owe allegiance to a foreign nation where they reside, and who never intend to become Americans? Suffer me most solemnly to inquire of you individually, why you will not yield to the judgment of the Senate? This bill has had the sanction of the Departments. This present Administration, by and through the proper Departments, recommend the passage of this bill. If you are dissatisfied with the bill in its present form, why not amend it? Why not permit a commission to issue? Choose some good man; if you are not satisfied with Governor Stevens's report, authorize another.

Was this case transferred to some other society, I ask if there would not be a change in the sentiments of some of us? Suppose such claims were held by non-residents under the same circumstances in Texas, or in New Mexico, or California, or Ohio, New York, or the District of Columbia, would you hesitate about the propriety of sending out a commissioner? Let the millions which have been appropriated answer this question. Turn over the record; begin at Texas; pass through Mexico with her treaty stipulations, and then through California; and then look at the record—for the record will live when we are dead—and compare the demand of Washington, with her reasons, with the record, and then vote; and, as honest men, I shall have no fears for the result. The day will come when you will feel proud of your possessions on the Pacific. Looking as they do, on China and Japan; rich as they are in minerals, and all that is desirable to make a nation great, powerful, rich, and respected. The day is not far distant.

Mr. STUART, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The question was then taken upon the one hundred and eightieth and one hundred and eighty-first amendments, and they were non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-second amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized and directed to appoint two persons to investigate and collect proof, under the instructions of the Department of the Interior, on the depredations upon private property by the Indians in Florida, subsequent to the 25th December, 1835, the report and testimony to be submitted to Congress at its next session.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. MAXWELL. I have an amendment to offer to that amendment. I move that three commissioners be appointed instead of two.

I should not have said one word in reference to this amendment, but for the great importance I attach to it. It is well known to many of the members of this House, that claims have been constantly coming before Congress from the State of Florida, for indemnity for Indian depredations, committed during the Seminole war. These claims are constantly occupying the time of this House, and the object of this amendment is to facilitate the investigation of these cases, against which there has been heretofore a prejudice, I may say, an improper prejudice, created in this House. Sir, the reason why these claims coming from the State of Florida have created such a feeling in opposition to them is, because, from the circumstances in connection with them, they have run up to a very large amount; and, without reference to their justice or propriety, they are rejected in this House. As I have said, the simple and sole object of this Senate amendment is to facilitate the investigation of these claims. I trust the amendment will be concurred in by the House.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to say five words in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida. The Committee of Ways and Means were opposed to constituting an itinerant board of commissioners to proceed to Florida for the purpose of hunting up claims to be presented to Congress. I recollect some years ago, a Senator from Florida remarked that he had presented claims for horses so often that he had become tired of it, and should in future go for hogs. [Laughter.] I hope the committee will not agree to support this commission, and that we shall come to a vote upon the proposition without further debate.

Mr. MAXWELL's amendment was not agreed to. The Senate amendment was then non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-third amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the seventh section of the act of January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States,'" be so amended as to extend the limit for the annual salary of clerks in the Mint of the United States to $1,800 each, from and after the 1st of July, 1854, at the discretion of the officers authorized by law to appoint, with the approval of the President of the United States, including also one clerk in the office of the assistant treasurer at Philadelphia, and that the salary of the chief clerk of the branch Mint at New Orleans shall be $2,200 from and after the 1st of July, 1854.

Mr. PHELPS. I do not rise to move an amendment, but merely to call the attention of the committee to the message which was sent from the Senate this morning, stating that the Secretary had made some mistakes in the amendments adopted by that body, as communicated to us. One of the mistakes is in the section now under consideration. After the words "Mint of the United States," where they first occur, should be inserted "and branch Mint at New Orleans." I would ask the unanimous consent of the committee to consider the words as part of the amendment. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not think that the correction comes in properly, and I object to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not rise to argue the question. You have given the clerks of the Sub-Treasury at New York $2,200 per annum, and this amendment only gives the clerks of the Sub-Treasury at Philadelphia, and the clerks connected with the United States Mint there, a salary each of $1,800 per annum. We do not ask that they shall have $2,200 per annum, but only $1,800, and I hope that the amendment may be concurred in.

Mr. DAWSON. I concur in every word that my colleague has said. These clerks deserve a salary of $1,800 per annum, and I hope the Senate's amendment will meet with the committee's concurrence.

Mr. CHANDLER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Dawson and Rows were appointed.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in, the tellers having reported—ayes 81, noes 48.

One hundred and eighty-fourth amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the second section of the act of July 3, 1852, entitled "An act to establish a branch of the Mint of the United States in California," be so amended as to allow to the clerks authorized to be employed therein three thousand dollars per annum each, to take effect from and after the 1st day of July, 1854. And such additional sums as, together with those elsewhere provided in this act, will equal the respective salaries authorized by this and the preceding section of this act, are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the payment thereof.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-fifth amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That all appointments of clerks and assistants authorized to be employed in the offices of the assistant treasurers of the United States, and in the offices of the Mint and branches thereof, and the assay office in New York, shall respectively be made, with the approbation of the President, by the assistant treasurer, director, superintendent, and treasurers of the Mint and said branches, and assay office, as the case may be, whose bonds are held at the Treasury Department in trust for the proper and faithful performance of their respective duties.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-sixth amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the district judges for the State of California, while in the discharge of the duties imposed by the act of the 3d of March, 1851, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California," be allowed at the rate of $22,000 per annum each, in addition to their salaries as district judges for the State of California, which shall be in full for their services.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. LATHAM. I move to increase the compensation one dollar.

The compensation intended in this amendment is for services which were rendered by these officers while they were not in the line of their regular and ordinary duties. So far as the settlement of these claims by the judges of the district courts is concerned, their duties are increased. Their duties are different from those performed by other judges in other district courts throughout the Union. As far as the principle itself is concerned, I may be permitted to state what has been the uniform custom whenever commissioners have been appointed for the purpose of settling claims; and when the cases have gone to the district courts, the judges of those courts have had compensation different from that provided for by the act regulating their salary.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman from California tell us what the salaries of these judges are now?

Mr. LATHAM. I will in a moment. In the States of Arkansas, Missouri, Louisiana, Florida, Mississippi, and Alabama, commissioners have been appointed for the purpose of adjudicating similar land titles. And whenever the right to appeal to the district courts was given, increased compensation has been allowed to the judges of such courts. In the State of Missouri, the additional compensation given was $800 per annum. In the State of Alabama, if I recollect right, or have been informed right, $1,500 per annum was given to these judges; and that increased compensation was continued so long as that district courts were employed in adjudicating these claims.

Mr. HOUSTON. Oh! it was a smaller amount than that.

Mr. LATHAM. The gentleman from Alabama says that the sum allowed to the district judges in his State was smaller than that I have mentioned. Whatever the amount was I cannot correctly state, but it is sufficient for my purpose to state that an additional salary was given to them over and above their regular compensation. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] asks me what the salaries of these judges are. I will tell him. The salary of the district judge of the northern district is $3,500 per annum; that of the judge for the southern district is $2,800. These salaries are inadequate to the duties and responsibilities of their office. The district court of San Francisco is in session nine continuous months in the year. Now, then, this law which authorizes the taking of an appeal from the decision of these land commissioners to the district courts imposes an additional labor upon the judges, compelling them to hold their courts from the 1st of January to the 31st of December. The State of California pays to the judges of her supreme court $10,000 a year. She pays to her district judges $7,000 a year. And every gentleman present who knows anything connected with that State—the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] knows it full well—knows that it is absolutely impossible for the judges of the district courts to save any part of their salary. It is as much as they can do, if they can do it at all, to live comfortably on $3,500 a year. The judge of the district court of the northern district of California, a gentleman of great ability, has told me that his salary was not sufficient compensation for him; and he told me that he was excluded by the duties of his office from embarking capital in any of the commercial enterprises of the day.

Mr. LETCHER. I am opposed to the amendment, and I will not occupy five minutes in saying all that I have to say in opposition to it. If I am not mistaken, the gentleman from California is very much mistaken in regard to the salaries of judges in his State. One of them receives $5,000.

Mr. LATHAM. The salary of the judge of the northern district of California was originally $5,000, and he discharged the duties of both districts. But when a judge was appointed for the southern district, the salary of the judge of the northern district reverted to $3,500 per annum. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will bear me out in that statement. The salary of the judge of the southern district was $2,800.

Mr. LETCHER. It is manifest, taking the matter to be as the gentleman from California states, that the judge of the northern district of California is now getting a salary equal to that of a judge in the district of New York, and as high as the salary received by any judge in any State on this side of our country. Now, what is proposed to be done by this amendment? It is proposed to almost double that salary, by the addition of $2,000 to it, while the salary of the other judge is proposed to be increased in the same ratio. Is this fair, when the judge in my district gets only $1,600, and is obliged to travel one thousand one hundred miles a year, at his own cost and charges, and at all seasons of the year? His travel costs him $400, and he then has $1,200 left as his compensation. Is it justice, when such a state of things exists here, to augment the salaries of the judges in California to almost double the present amount? Our judges are compelled to perform as much labor, and receive only one third of the compensation given to the judges in California.

The question was then taken on Mr. LATHAM's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I move to increase the appropriation two dollars. I wish to say one word in reference to this matter. The judge of the northern district of California receives $3,500 per annum, and I am told by the gentleman from Virginia that the judge in his district gets only $1,600 per annum. I tell the gentleman from Virginia that $1,600 in his district is worth more than $5,000 in the northern district of California. It is more valuable to the judge, and will go further.

Now, I wish to state one fact. The judges of California to settle the land contests of that State receive a compensation of $8,000 per annum. Upon what basis was that compensation placed? Upon the California basis of compensation for services there. And the $8,000 paid to the land commissioners is less than we pay our own State judges. We pay to our supreme judge $10,000 a year. We pay to our district judges $6,000 per annum. Now, what is asked here of the United States? These judges discharge not merely the duties of the judges of a Federal tribunal; they determine not merely duties belonging to a district proper, but they determine matters belonging to both a district court and a circuit court. And to this same court are carried, by appeal, all the land contests of that State; and I undertake to say that whoever undertakes to discharge the duties of this office in California, is a slave. He is compelled to perform services both day and night, for month after month. He performs duties, as judge, not only during the spring and fall terms, but for the whole twelve months of the year. And I say that if you pay this additional compensation of $2,000 per annum, you pay only a just and fair compensation for the service he renders.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from California said the judges of California received only $3,500 and $2,800 per annum. Sir, here is the official register, which puts it down at $5,000.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That was formerly.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will say to the gentleman from New York, that after the appointment of judges for the southern district of California, one was discontinued temporarily, and the remaining judge received $5,000; but since that arrangement has been dispensed with, the judges have returned to the old rates of compensation.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I simply ask that this amendment shall be fairly considered.

Mr. BRIDGES. I rise to oppose the amendment, but not to discuss it. I ask for a vote.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will withdraw my amendment, if there be no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The amendment was then disagreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I propose the following amendment:

After the word "each," in the twenty-five hundredth line, insert the words "for three years;" so that it will read:

Be allowed at the rate of $2,000 per annum each for three years, in addition to their salaries as district judges for the State of California, which shall be in full for their services.

Mr. Chairman, the committee will perceive that the object of this amendment is to make provision that this additional compensation shall not be given to these judges for life, or for a very long term of years. The object of this compensation, if we allow it at all, is to remunerate them for present labor in revising the work of these land commissioners. I have proposed to make it continue for a specific period, for the time for which any great amount of labor will be required. The committee will perceive that if it is allowed to run as long as there is any of this business to do, it may linger along for years, while the greater part of the labor may be performed in two or three years.

Mr. WALSH. I am opposed to the amendment, and ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. SMITH's amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate, by providing that this additional compensation shall not continue for more than five years. I understand this will meet the views of the member from California, and I trust it will be adopted. I hope gentlemen will reflect before they refuse to place the Federal judges of California at least on a par with other Federal officers in that State. Is it wise, in a State like California, so remote from the central authority, and where judges are exposed to influences which do not operate in other portions of the country, to place them on salaries less than they can make in almost any other employment? If the State has found it necessary to pay salaries of $6,000 or $8,000, to obtain the proper talent for a State judiciary, do the United States want judicial officers who are less qualified?

But, sir, in making these remarks, I confess I am influenced by feelings that may not operate upon other members of the committee. I know the gentleman who fills the office of judge in North California. He has passed through the early settlement of the country unquestioned in the purity of his character. We have been told by the member from California, [Mr. LATHAM,] that though restricted in his means, he has scrupulously refrained from engaging in speculations which have made the fortunes of others, lest it should reflect upon his administration of justice. This shows him to be the man for his position, and in a country where the force of law depends so much upon the character of the judge, it is policy to seek to retain him.

Mr. WALSH. Who is he?

Mr. PERKINS. He comes from the gentleman's own State. If at the bar, he could make ten times the amount he now receives, and I do not think it just to impose upon him additional duties without additional compensation.

Mr. WALSH. It is very singular that the gentleman should have an indisposition to name so extraordinary a man.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The question was taken; and Mr. PERKINS's amendment was rejected.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-seventh amendment:

Sec.—And be it further enacted, That so much of the act passed 26th February, 1853, being "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, as fixes the compensation to be allowed for expenses while employed in endeavoring to arrest under process any person charged with or convicted of a crime, the sum actually expended, not to exceed two dollars per day in addition to his compensation for service and travel," so as to read "for expenses while employed in endeavoring to arrest under process any person charged with or convicted of a crime, the actual necessary expenses in addition to his compensation for service and travel."

Mr. HAVEN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment. I thought when the bill passed at the last session that it was a bad one; this amendment makes it worse.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-eighth amendment:

Sec.—And be it further enacted, That whenever it shall become necessary for the head of any Department or office to employ special agents, other than officers of the Army or Navy, who may be charged with the disbursement of public moneys, they shall, prior to entering upon duty as such, give bond in such form and with such security as the head of the Department or office employing said agent may approve.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. To make this amendment conform in spirit to a clause which was adopted by a very large majority during the day, I move to strike out the words "other than officers of the Army or Navy."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-ninth amendment:

Amend the title of the bill by adding the words "and for other purposes."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the committee do now rise and report the amendments to the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. In looking over the amendments, I see in several of them the word "&c." occurring, and I now ask the unanimous consent to be permitted to strike it out wherever it occurs.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to say one word before the committee rises. The Senate have sent us a paper indicating that they desired to amend the last section of the bill by striking out these words:

"And further, that all appropriations which are herein made, or may be hereafter made, for repairs or improvements of the public buildings, grounds, and streets within the District of Columbia, and now under the charge of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior; and that all laws, or parts of laws, inconsistent with this section shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

I wish to treat the Senate with all respect, and propose that the amendment be considered as before us. It is an amendment which ought not to be made, and I hope that it may be non-concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. The words proposed to be stricken out are a part of the original text of the bill, and while I am disposed to treat the Senate communication with every degree of respect, yet I am unwilling to set a precedent for invading the original matter of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Is this discussion out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. WALSH. Then I object to it.

The question was taken on Mr. JONES's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the amendments of the Senate to House bill 48, "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855," and had instructed him to report back some of the amendments to which they had agreed, others to which they had agreed with amendments, and others which they had non-concurred in.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With the approbation of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Housron,] I propose that the House sustain the previous question, order the main question to be put, and then adjourn. With that view, I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Is a motion now in order to lay the bill upon the table?

[Cries of "Let the main question be ordered first!"]

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

[Cries of "No, no!"]

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw my motion for the present, but I shall renew it.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I now move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the House, thereupon, at twenty-five minutes of nine o'clock, p. m., adjourned till to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 2, 1854.

The House met at ten o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLIGER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER appointed Messrs. McMULLIN, MAY, and KERR, a committee of conference, to meet a like committee on the part of the Senate, in relation to the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill of the House entitled "An act to authorize the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER announced as the business first in order, the motion made last evening by Mr. BARKSDALE, to lay the civil and diplomatic bill upon the table.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing in order except the motion to lay the civil and diplomatic bill upon the table, unless it be by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. WHEELER. I object to everything, and call for the regular order of business.

CHARLES G. GUNTER.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the Committee on Private Land Claims. It is in relation to a private claim which has been for years before the House. It has already passed the Senate two or three times. There has never been any objection to it. The parties interested are very much aggrieved in consequence of the delay on the part of Congress to pass this bill. I hope the House will consent to take it up now.

Mr. SAGE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama whether this is anything but a simple bill?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. It is simply a Senate bill of a private character, and will require no time to pass the House. I desire to report it back without amendment.

There being no objection, the bill was received and read by its title, as follows:

An act to relinquish the reversionary interest of the United States to a certain reservation therein mentioned, and confirm the title of Charles G. Gunter thereto.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I will now briefly state the facts in this case.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Oh, no; we do not want to hear them.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. If the House be not satisfied, I will explain.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, we are satisfied.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF SENATE BILLS.

Mr. PECKHAM. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back four Senate bills from the Committee on Military Affairs, for the mere purpose of reference.

Assent was expressed.

Mr. PECKHAM. The Committee on Military Affairs report back the following bill, with a recommendation that it do pass:

Senate bill (No. 338) "for the relief of Robert C. Thompson, the legal representative of William H. Thompson, deceased, formerly brigadier general in the revolutionary war." Referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PECKHAM. The Committee on Military Affairs report the following bill back, with a recommendation that it do not pass:

Senate bill (No. 398) "for the relief of the heirs of Captain Joshua Chamberlain, deceased."

The report and bill were ordered to be laid on the table, and the former was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PECKHAM. The Committee on Military Affairs report back the following bill, with a recommendation that it do pass; but with an amendment virtually denying the relief asked for:

Senate bill (No. 353) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry King, deceased." Referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PECKHAM. The Committee on Military Affairs report back the following bill, with a recommendation that it do pass:

Senate bill (No. 375) "relative to the accounts of General Stephen Moyer." Referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to report back the following bill, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

Senate bill (No. 269) "granting the right of way over, and depot grounds on, the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, in the State of Michigan, to the Port Huron and Lake Michigan Railroad Company."

Unanimous consent being given, the report was received.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COURT IN BOSTON, ETC.

Mr. WALLY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table a bill which has come back from the Senate with an amendment. I desire that the House shall concur in that amendment, and it will not take five minutes to do so, as there will be no objection to it. It is a bill to authorize the lease of a building in Boston for the accommodation of the United States court, and the procuring of sites for court-houses in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. The House have passed the bill, and the Senate have amended it so that the purchase shall not be binding unless the sanction of Congress is obtained.

No objection being made, the bill was taken up, and read in extenso.

The Senate amendment, which was read, was to add at the end of the bill the following:

Together with any contract or contracts he may make for any site or sites, which contract or contracts shall be conditional, and made subject to the approval of Congress.

The amendment of the Senate was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. I rise to a question of privilege. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was agreed to, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, for the purpose of taking up the Senate amendments to the homestead bill.

Mr. MATTESON. I object to the motion.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to submit the motion.

The SPEAKER. There is already a motion pending to suspend the rules. There is also a motion pending to lay the civil and diplomatic bill upon the table; both of which take precedence of the motion proposed by the gentleman from Alabama. This motion cannot be received. The rules cannot be suspended at this time at all.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask, in order that I may understand what are my rights, whether, after having made this motion to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, which the Chair says is not of equal privilege with others already pending, it will come up in order when the others are disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table cannot be made while the others are pending. The Chair will explain the precise condition of the business before the House. The amendments to the civil and diplomatic bill were reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union yesterday evening, and the previous question ordered upon them. The motion was then made that the amendments be laid upon the table. That motion is first in order. If it be decided in the negative, the concurrence in the amendments, under the operation of the previous question, will next be in order. When that business is disposed of, there is pending a motion made by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Cobb,] to suspend the rules, which lies over from yesterday. No motion to suspend the rules is, therefore, in order, until this business has been disposed of. Gentlemen upon the right and the left demand the regular order of business, and the proposition is therefore in order.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the amendments to the civil and diplomatic bill upon the table.

Mr. PHELPS. I understand that the gentleman from Mississippi, who made the motion, will withdraw it.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I will withdraw it.

Mr. WHEELER. I renew the motion.

Mr. DISNEY. I rise to a question of order. I understand the Chair has entertained a motion to lay upon the table the civil and diplomatic bill. The point I make is simply this: That it is not competent for this House, having once passed a bill, and, subsequently, amendments having been made by a coördinate branch of the Government to that bill, to lay that bill upon the table. They have no power over the bill except to act upon the specific amendments made by the coördinate body. There has never been, I undertake to say, in the whole history of parliamentary legislation, any other practice allowed.

Mr. WHEELER. Is this debate in order?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. DISNEY. Well, sir, I have risen to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. DISNEY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair; and I desire to state the grounds upon which I take an appeal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already stated the ground of his appeal; but, if he desires to repeat it, the Chair will be happy to hear his explanation, if it is the pleasure of the House that he should proceed.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to state the grounds upon which I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair; for I have not yet stated them. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, because it is laid down by parliamentary writers upon these subjects, that when a bill has once passed a legislative body, passed to another coördinate body, and afterwards returned to the originating body with amendments, that body has no power over the bill, except to act upon the amendments which have been returned to it—either to agree, or to disagree to them. The originating branch has no power over it. It is so expressly laid down by every writer on civil law.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman turn to a single writer who has so laid down? The Chair would like to know to what rule the gentleman refers?

Mr. DISNEY. The Chairman will find the matter stated and settled on page ninety-five of Jefferson's Manual.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is determined in his own mind as to the rule on this subject. It is in order to move to lay the amendments of the Senate upon the table; and if the motion be agreed to, it carries the bill with it. The Chair has no doubt about his decision; and not desiring to make a speech, he calls on the House to decide between him and the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SKELTON. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to lay the amendments of the Senate to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill upon the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

[Cries of "No!"]

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays until we see how the House stands by division.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I withdraw the demand. The question was taken; and the House refused to lay the Senate amendments upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. It will consume nearly the whole day to read the amendments, and I would suggest, if gentlemen are prepared to do so, that they state the amendments on which they desire separate votes, and that the remainder be voted on en masse.

Mr. LETCHER. Will it be in order to move that the House concur in the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. That may be done by unanimous consent, but not otherwise.

Mr. LETCHER. If there be no objection, I would submit that motion.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I desire that the one hundred and seventy-ninth amendment may be excepted, so that a separate vote may be taken on it. I have otherwise no objection to the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. LETCHER. I have no objection to excepting the gentleman's amendment.

Objection was made to Mr. LETCHER's proposition by several members.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read; and if any gentleman desires a separate vote on any amendment, he will rise in his place and indicate it. Then, those on which separate votes are not asked, will be voted on en masse.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. A great deal of time will be consumed by the reading of all the amendments. Let each member who desires a separate vote on any amendment rise now, and specify it, and then let us vote on the others together.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MURRAY. I object; and, if allowed, I would suggest that the amendments be read by their numbers, and gentlemen can then indicate those on which they desire a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the proposition be agreed to?

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]
There was no objection; and the proposition was adopted.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the amendments by their numbers, when those on which separate votes were not demanded were passed over, to be disposed of en masse hereafter.

Mr. HOUSTON. Amendments number two and number eight have a direct relation to each other. They both relate to the Clerks of the Senate and their extra pay. I would like to have the House agree to both of these amendments. One enlarges the appropriation, and the other diminishes another appropriation. I do not desire to have a contest with the Senate about the pay of their officers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama does not seem to understand the order of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I merely desire in this instance to have the amendments voted upon together, with a view to their concurrence.

The SPEAKER. The question then is upon agreeing to amendments number two and number eight, which will be read by the Clerk.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Second amendment:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary, in the service of the Senate, $57,010.

Eighth amendment:

For clerks to committees, pages, police, horses and carriages, $30,000.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

Twenty-second amendment, on which a separate vote was asked by Mr. RUSSELL:

That the act approved 23d April, 1854, entitled "An act to amend the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, and for other purposes," shall be so construed as in regard to increased compensation for the fiscal year ending the 30th June last, to include within its provisions the clerks of the Department of State, and the clerks in the office of the Coast Survey; and that the chief clerk in the State Department shall receive the same compensation as the chief clerks in the other Departments of the Government for the last fiscal year, and that the money necessary to carry these provisions into effect, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union have reported against concurring in this amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the House will allow me, I desire to make a correction in line two hundred and thirty-two. When the deficiency bill was before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, we allowed three $1,600 clerks to the Register of the Treasury; and therefore this appropriation of $36,950 should be $41,750. It will save a deal of trouble, if the correction be made now.

The correction was ordered, and the clause, as corrected, reads:

For compensation of the Register of the Treasury, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messengers in his office, $41,750.

Forty-fourth amendment, on which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. MURRAY:

For compensation of the Superintendent of the Public Printing, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $9,595: Provided, That the joint resolution, approved the 30th July, 1854, shall be so construed as to embrace the Superintendent of Public Printing, and the clerks and messenger in his office.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union have concurred in this amendment, with an amendment, which is to strike out the proviso.

The SPEAKER. The question is first upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. I believe the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union struck out the proviso.

The SPEAKER. That is the amendment which the House will now vote upon.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the Chair put the question in the shape of agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is perfectly willing to put it in that form.

Mr. MURRAY. I have no objection to that. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered. The question was then put; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was agreed to.

Fifty-seventh amendment:

Mr. CHASTAIN. I call for a separate vote upon that amendment, and upon it I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommended a concurrence in that amendment, with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Senate amendment was to strike out from the following clause the part in brackets:

For rent of house on northwest corner of F and Seventeenth streets, or such other building as the Secretary of War may select, and warming all the rooms in it, [$21,875;

For compensation of superintendent and four watchmen of the building corner of F and seventeenth streets, $2,250:] and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Thirty-two thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to lease said building, or some other, for a term not exceeding five years, at the rent herein authorized, if, in his judgment, the same shall be for the public interest.

The Committee of the Whole amended the Senate amendment by striking out all after the words "warming all the rooms in it," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Twenty-one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars: Provided, The Secretary of War be authorized to purchase the said building at a sum not exceeding $200,000; so as to make the clause read:

For rent of house on northwest corner of F and Seventeenth streets, or such other building as the Secretary of War may select, and warming all the rooms in it, $21,875: Provided, That the Secretary of War be authorized to purchase said building at a sum not exceeding $200,000.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. The seventy-third and seventy-fourth amendments are rendered necessary by the adoption of a subsequent amendment of the Senate, authorizing the compensation for these officers, which these amendments were inserted to provide for. If the House concur in that amendment, they should also concur in these. I ask for a separate vote upon them. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendments are to insert, in the seven hundred and ninety-seventh line, after the word "assayer," the words "assistant melter and refiner;" and in the seven hundred and ninety-ninth line strike out the words "three thousand four," and insert "four thousand nine;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of the director, treasurer, assayer, melter and refiner, chief coiner and engraver, assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and seven clerks, $24,900.

The amendments were concurred in.

Ninety-fifth amendment:

And the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract for the construction of a custom-house on said site, to include accommodations for a post-office and United States court-room, at a cost not exceeding $300,000.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask for a separate vote upon that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and eighth amendment:

For the construction of an appraiser's store on a portion of the square selected for the custom-house at San Francisco, California, including the expense of piling for the foundation thereof, by contract or otherwise, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem best, $100,000: Provided, That the same restrictions regarding the completion of said work with the sum hereby appropriated, as are contained in this act concerning the erection and completion of custom-houses and marine hospitals, shall be applicable thereto.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is to provide for an appraiser's store in California. It would be a great saving to the Government if the House would concur in it. I ask for a separate vote on it.

Mr. LETCHER. Have not the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union concurred in it?

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir; the committee have recommended a non-concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and eleventh amendment:

For prosecuting operations on the marine hospital at Portland, in the State of Maine, $50,000.

Mr. GROW. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole reported a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and twelfth amendment:

To provide a suitable building as a marine hospital at St. Marks, Florida, $5,000.

Mr. GROW. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole reported a concurrence in the amendment. The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and twenty-eighth amendment:

To enable the Secretary of State to reimburse to Edward Riddle such sums as shall be satisfactorily shown to have been expended by him, or which said Riddle may have obligated himself to pay, on account of his official position at the Industrial Exhibition at London, England, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, $26,000: Provided, That no portion of the payments made, pro rata, by contributors at said exhibition, shall be regarded as within this appropriation.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask a separate vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole reported a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. LILLY. I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on a concurrence in the amendment; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 87, nays 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Breckinridge, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dunbar, Eastman, Edmonds, Thomas D. Mr. INGERSOLL said: I am requested by Mr. CURTINE to state that he is absent from the city by sickness and order of his physician.

One hundred and forty-fifth amendment:

For continuing the work for a supply of water to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $500,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the corporations of Washington and Georgetown, or either of them, shall appropriate and pay an amount equal to one fourth of said sum for the same purpose, and shall agree to pay in like manner the same proportion of all future appropriations; and full power and authority are hereby given to said corporations, respectively, to raise, by loan or otherwise, any sum of money that may be necessary to enable them, or either of them, to make the appropriation herein required; and the said corporations of Washington and Georgetown, and the inhabitants of the said cities respectively, or the corporation making the appropriation, and the inhabitants of such city, shall be authorized to use the surplus water which may be brought by the Washington aqueduct, after supplying the Government establishments in Washington, under such general rules and regulations as may hereafter be prescribed by Congress; and each of said corporations shall have the right to charge and collect of the inhabitants of such city such reasonable tax or rent for the use of the water as will provide for the regular payment of the interest, and the gradual payment of the principal, of any money which may be raised under the authority hereby given.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole reported a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. COOK. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

So the Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I call for the yeas and nays upon the last motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table was then agreed to.

One hundred and sixtieth amendment:

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I ask for a separate vote upon that amendment.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

Insert after the amendment which has just been adopted the following:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the several sums mentioned in the preceding section of this act, as the cost of the buildings therein authorized to be constructed, together with ten per cent. thereon, to cover the compensation of architects, superintendents, advertising, and other contingent expenses, and so much as may be required to purchase suitable sites for said buildings, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned, until a valid title to the land for the site of such building, in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until the State shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax, or in any way assess said site, or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the said United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 87, nays 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. So the Senate amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

One hundred and sixty-first amendment:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed the following buildings:

At New Orleans, Louisiana, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $248,000; and when said hospital shall have been completed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the old hospital at New Orleans to be sold, and the proceeds thereof to be placed in the Treasury of the United States.

At Detroit, Michigan, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $75,000.

At Pensacola, Florida, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $20,000.

At Burlington, in the State of Iowa, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $15,000.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the several sums mentioned in the preceding section as the cost of the buildings therein authorized to be constructed, together with ten per cent. thereon to cover the compensation of architects, superintendents, advertising, and other contingent expenses, and so much as may be required to purchase suitable sites for said buildings, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned until a valid title to the land for the site of such building, in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until the State shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way assess said site or the property of the United States that may be thereon during the time that the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on concurring in the Senate's amendment, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Ball, Bell, Benson, Bliss, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Clark, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Elliott, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Florence, Giddings, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Henn, Howe, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, Kerr, Lindsley, McCulloch, Macdonald, Macey, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, Mayall, Morgan, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, John Perkins, Preston, Richardson, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shannon, William R. Smith, Solters, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, and Wheeler—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Appleton, Barksdale, Belcher, Bridges, Caskie, Chastain, Christian, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Dawson, Dowdell, John M. Elliott, English, Gamble, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kittredge, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, May, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Olds, Orr, Peck, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Sage, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollicofer—70.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to amend the one hundred and sixty-second amendment, by adding to it these words:

In the Department of State, one clerk at a salary of $1,200; one at $1,400; one at $1,600; and one at $1,800.

I will state that I understand the clerical force of the State Department is totally insufficient for the proper discharge of the duties devolving on it. The object of the amendment is simply to supply an omission. We have given seven additional clerks to the Treasury Department, and four to the Attorney General's Office. Requests have been made from the State Department for this increase of its clerical force; and, inasmuch as the object is to facilitate the public business, I trust that no objection will be made to the introduction of the amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to know whether the Secretary of State has applied for these clerks?

Mr. HOUSTON. I received a communication from the State Department.

Mr. HAVEN. If it be in time, I object to the introduction of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Objection does not come too late.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama. I would ask the gentleman to withhold his objection until the letter of the Secretary of State is read by the Clerk?

Mr. HAVEN. I do not wish to get the House into a snarl; and if the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is willing that the amendment shall come in, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. I received a note from the Secretary of State in relation to the clerical force in his office, which I will ask the Clerk to read, although it is a private note.

Mr. LETCHER. Let him send an official communication to this House.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is as responsible as if it were official. The Secretary of State has already sent an official communication to the Senate in respect to remodeling his Department. We were unwilling to remodel it in an appropriation bill. This amendment proposes to leave out all the details, except the provision for four additional clerks.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

One hundred and sixty-sixth amendment:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That all persons claiming any interest in, or portion of, any grant of land derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments in Upper California, where such original grant has heretofore been presented to the board of land commissioners within the time specified in the thirteenth section of the act of the 3d of March, 1851, but who have failed to present to the said board the evidence of their derivative title to said interest or portion from the original grantee, be, and they are hereby, authorized to present the same; and the said commissioners are hereby directed to adjudicate the said interest or portion in the same manner as if it had been presented within the time originally prescribed by the aforesaid act of the 3d of March, 1851, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California."

Mr. McDOUGALL. I call for a separate vote on that amendment. This is merely a local matter concerning the State of California alone; and I hope the House will concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment, and the question is upon agreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HENDRICKS and WALKER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 51, noes 87.

So the Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-sixth amendment.

Mr. HIBBARD. I call for a separate vote upon that amendment. I am satisfied that it ought to be adopted, and that it was non-concurred in from a misapprehension of the facts.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act of the 7th of June, 1844, restricting the employment of inspectors, gaugers, weighers, measurers, and markers in custom-houses to the number then in the service, as may be applicable to those employed in the ports of New York and New Orleans, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment; and it was decided in the negative.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-seventh amendment:

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The one hundred and seventy-seventh amendment of the Senate is that which provides for an increase of the salary of the chaplains. The committee, last night, non-concurred in the Senate amendment. I think we ought to concur; and I ask for a separate vote upon it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Both committees non-concurred in the amendment.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 13th of June, 1853, the annual salary of the chaplains to Congress shall be $750, and such sum additional to that elsewhere provided, as may be required to pay the same to the 30th of June, 1853, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The question was taken on agreeing with the amendment; and it was decided in the negative.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-ninth amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for a separate vote upon the amendments, and the yeas and nays upon it.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the "act making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers," approved the 30th of August, 1852, be, and the same hereby is, amended, by striking from the clause in which they occur the following words: "by the construction of a breakwater across Croatan sound."

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Ball, Benson, Carpenter, Chandler, Clingman, Cox, Craig, Crocker, De Witt, Dunbar, Edmundson, English, Farley, Florence, Fuller, Giddings, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Howe, Ingersoll, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, McCulloch, McDougall, Matteson, Norton, Pennington, Pringle, Puryear, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shaw, Singleton, George W. Smyth, Solters, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, John L. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, James C. Allen, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Belcher, Benton, Bocock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chastain, Christian, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Corwin, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Dowdell, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Gamble, Greenwood, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lindsley, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, May, John G. Miller, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Peckham, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Ready, Reese, Robbins, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Wells, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicofer—82.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-second amendment:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized and directed to appoint two persons to investigate, and collect proof, under the instructions of the Department of the Interior, on the depredations upon private property by the Indians in Florida, subsequent to the 25th December, 1835—the report and testimony to be submitted to Congress at its next session.

Mr. MAXWELL. I demand a separate vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole report a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. What has become of the one hundred and eightieth and one hundred and eighty-first amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk read the number, but no gentleman rose to ask a separate vote.

Mr. LANCASTER. I rose and asked a separate vote on them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman. If it be the pleasure of the House, the question will be taken separately on the one hundred and eightieth and one hundred and eighty-first amendments.

[Cries of "I object!" all over the Hall.]

Mr. FULLER. It is very difficult for those on the outside seats to hear what is read at the desk of the Clerk, and I hope that the Delegate from Washington Territory will be indulged in a separate vote on the amendment he has indicated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must enforce the rule. He did not hear the gentleman from Washington Territory ask for a separate vote, and decides that it is now too late to go back.

Mr. MAXWELL. I demand tellers on the one hundred and eighty-second amendment.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the one hundred and eighty-second amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-third amendment:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the seventh section of the act of January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a Mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" be so amended as to extend the limit for the annual salary of clerks in the Mint of the United States to $1,800 each, from and after the 1st of July, 1854, at the discretion of the officers authorized by law to appoint, with the approbation of the President of the United States, including also one clerk in the office of the assistant treasurer at Philadelphia, and that the salary of the chief clerk of the branch Mint at New Orleans shall be $2,200 from and after the 1st of July, 1854.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. An error occurred in the engrossing of that amendment in the Senate. In the original draft after the words "Mint of the United States" were these words:

"and the branch Mint at New Orleans." The error has been called to the attention of the House by special message from the Senate. The object of the insertion of these words which I now propose is merely to place the clerks of the Mint at New Orleans on the same footing as those in New York and Philadelphia.

Mr. HOUSTON. The message showing the error is now on the Speaker's table. There was no objection, and the words were inserted.

Mr. CHANDLER demanded tellers on concurring in the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WRIGHT, of Mississippi, and Cox, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes not counted.

So the amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-fifth amendment:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That all appointment of clerks and assistants authorized to be employed in the offices of the assistant treasurers of the United States, and in the offices of the Mint and branches thereof, and the assay office in New York, shall respectively be made, with the approbation of the President, by the assistant treasurer, director, superintendent, and treasurers of the Mint and said branches, and assay office, as the case may be, whose bonds are held at the Treasury Department in trust for the proper and faithful performance of their respective duties.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask for a separate vote on that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend a non-concurrence.

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-eighth amendment:

Mr. LETCHER. I believe it is not in order after we pass the one hundred and eighty-ninth amendment to move to lay the amendments upon the table; and for the purpose of testing the question, I move to lay the amendments upon the table; and upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, the previous question still operating.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand the Chair as entertaining the motion to lay the amendments of the Senate on the table?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And that motion carries the bill with it?

The SPEAKER. It does; all go together.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Have we finished the amendments?

The SPEAKER. We have not.

The question was taken on Mr. LETCHER's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 70, nays 113; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Benton, Bocoek, Bridges, Brooks, Campbell, Chamberlain, Chastain, Churchill, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Cullom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Dunham, Eddy, John M. Elliott, English, Sampson, W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hill, Daniel T. Jones, Keitt, Kittredge, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, Matteson, May, Murray, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, John Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Ready, Reese, Rogers, Rowe, Sage, Seward, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollieffer—70.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Breckinridge, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskey, Chandler, Chrisman, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmands, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hens, Hibbard, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Latham, Lindley, McDonald, McDougall, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morgan, Nichols, Noble, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packard, Peckham, Pennington, Phillips, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shannon, Shower, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Westbrook—113.

So the House refused to lay the Senate amendments on the table.

Pending the call,

Mr. SOLLERS gave notice that he been within the bar at the time his name was called, he should have voted in the affirmative.

The Clerk then read the last amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. The House made an order yesterday in relation to "&c." wherever it appears in the amendments. I do not know that it is necessary to take any action upon it now; but I will move that all of them that occur be stricken out from the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. There were certain amendments recognized by the committee yesterday, which were sent in to the House after the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. They were not recognized. The message of the Senate was rejected yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union rejected the propositions contained in the supplemental amendments. That is the truth of the case; for the Speaker was in at the time. A portion of the report of the committee is a rejection of two supplemental amendments. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. The only objection that I have to this course is, that it will multiply the amendments between the House and the Senate. The amendment now proposed to be read was not entertained by the Chair at all. I made the point of order myself, and it was ruled by the Chair that the original text of the bill could not be touched.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will follow the record.

Mr. HAVEN. I think the course suggested by the Chair ought to be followed. That is, to follow the record, and take the question on the adoption of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just learned from the Clerk that there is no record in relation to it. It cannot, therefore, be considered.

Mr. ORR. The message from the Senate was not considered by the committee.

The question was taken on agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in relation to all those amendments on which separate votes had not been taken; and the report was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote just taken, by which the report of the committee was agreed to, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to ask the House to take up and refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ORR. I object.

RAILROADS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. HAVEN. Then I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion now pending to suspend the rules. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] has moved to suspend the rules, to enable him to report the following bill:

A bill granting to the State of Alabama public lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction of railroads from Mobile to Girard, from Selma to or near Gunter's Landing, with branches from or near Gadsden, through Wills and Chattanooga valleys to the eastern State line of Alabama; from Memphis to a point intersecting the Nashville, Chattanooga, and Charleston railroad, at or near Stephenson, Alabama; from Beard's bluff, via Elyton and Tuscaloosa, to some point on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, and from Montgomery to the northern State line of Alabama, via Decatur and Athens, in said State.

The question being on the motion to suspend the rules,

Mr. COBB called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and BARKSDALE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported ayes sixty-eight, not two thirds of a quorum.

So the rules were not suspended.

Mr. ORR. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is on a motion to discharge the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, from the further consideration of certain memorials.

EXTRA PRINTING.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I rise to a privileged question. I have a report from the Committee on Printing, which I desire to make. I believe that committee have the right to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in order.

Mr. STANTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed ten thousand extra copies of the annual report of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, including the minority report upon the distribution of the fund—seven thousand copies for distribution by the members of this House, and three thousand for the use of the institution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay that resolution upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. STANTON. I am also instructed by the same committee to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That twenty thousand extra copies of the report of the special committee raised upon the guano trade, be printed for distribution by the members of this House.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ORR. Has the morning hour commenced?

The SPEAKER. It has commenced.

Mr. MURRAY. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to report back from the Committee on Printing Senate bill "to provide for the payment of the printing of the returns of the Seventh Census, and for the paper purchased for said printing." The subject of the bill was provided for in the deficiency bill. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. I also desire to report back the resolutions which have been referred to the Committee on Printing:

For printing extra copies of Andrews's Report.

For printing twenty-five thousand copies of Scott's Infantry Tactics.

For printing extra copies of the Alphabetical List of Private Claims.

The committee report adversely; and I move that the resolutions be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the adverse reports from the Committee on Printing were laid upon the table, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HAVEN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the river and harbor bill, for the purpose of moving its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I do so in order to facilitate the reference of other bills, to which objection will be made, unless the course I have suggested be pursued.

Mr. ORR. I object.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to suspend the rules, then, in order that it may be taken up for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. PRESTON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules; and there were—yeas 99, nays 76; as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bocoek, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caskey, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Disney, Dowdell, John M. Elliott, Faulkner, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Hibbard, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, Macy, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Packard, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, William Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Walbridge, Walsh, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—76.

So the House refused to suspend the rules, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

Mr. SKELTON. I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass Senate bill (No. 393) "for the better preservation of life and property from vessels shipwrecked on the coast of the United States."

Mr. COBB. It is too late in the session to take up matters of such consequence, and, therefore, I object.

Mr. SKELTON. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose I have indicated. The bill makes no appropriation at all.

The question was taken; and the House refused to suspend the rules.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. DAWSON. I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is that motion now in order?

The SPEAKER. If objected to, it is not.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I object.

Mr. DAWSON. Then I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to submit that motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. At the expiration of the morning hour, could not a majority go to the business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It could. The business in order is the consideration of the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JONES,] to discharge the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads from the further consideration of certain memorials, and that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his motion to suspend the rules, and wait until the expiration of the morning hour to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will insist on his motion.

Mr. DAWSON. I ask that the question be put on my motion.

Mr. PRESTON. I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 81, nays 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Benton, Bliss, Boyce, Breckinridge, Chamberlain, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cook, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Johnson, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Macdonald, McDougall, McMullin, Mace, Maxwell, Mayall, John C. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Richardson, Rowe, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Walbridge, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, Ball, Banks, Bennett, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Caskey, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Corwin, Cox, Craigie, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Thomas Davis, Dick, Edmonds, Thomas D. Elliot, Everhart, Farley, Flagger, Gamble, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lindsley, McCulloch, McNair, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Millson, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Richard A. Stanton, Stratton, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Watley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zollicoffer—86.

So the House refused to suspend the rules, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

Mr. HUGHES, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to lay before Congress, at its next session, if consistent with the public interests, such information as may be in the possession of the War Department, touching the cause of any difficulties which may have arisen between the Creek and Seminole Indians, since their removal west of the Mississippi; together with the number of Seminole or other Indians who have left the country assigned them; and whether they, or any of them, have been engaged in hostilities against the people of the United States since leaving our Territory.

PENSION AND BOUNTY LAND LAWS.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions to report to the House the following joint resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to purchase, out of the contingent fund, for the use of its members, twenty-two thousand copies, and that the Secretary of the Senate be directed to purchase—copies, for the use of its members, of the Digest of the Pension and Bounty Land Laws, prepared by F. F. C. Triplett: Provided, That said work shall be printed on paper equal in quality to that on which the Opinions of the Attorneys General are printed: And provided further, That the same shall not cost more than $1 65 per copy.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I move a suspension of the rules, that I may be allowed to report the resolution.

Mr. LETCHER. Must not that resolution go to the Committee on Printing?

The SPEAKER. It has not been received yet; but it is competent for the gentleman to move to suspend the rule which requires the resolution to go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I have a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions on the subject, which I ask may be read.

[Cries of "Object!"]

The joint resolution was then received, under a suspension of the rules, and was read a first and second time.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have a letter from Mr. Waldo, the Commissioner of Pensions, read.

There being no objection, the letter was read, as follows:

PENSION OFFICE, July 12, 1854.

SIR: You have asked my opinion in regard to the compilation of the Pension and Bounty Land Laws, Decisions of Secretaries, and Opinions of Attorneys General, now being made by F. F. C. Triplett, Esq., of this city. I have examined several parts of this work, and have had a general view of the whole, and I do not hesitate to say that the compilation, when completed, will be of great merit and usefulness. It presents the various pension laws in such an aspect as to give something of form and symmetry to our pension system, and will make the administration of those laws more intelligible. It is, in short, just such a work as the wants of the public demand, and should be generally distributed. I think it deserves the patronage of Congress. No member can serve his constituents better than to place this work within their reach. This will enable them to understand their rights, and to prosecute them without troubling their Representative, as is now the general practice. It will also greatly facilitate the transaction of business in this bureau, and make it more uniform. I would commend this matter to your favorable consideration, and remain your obedient servant,

L. P. WALDO, Commissioner.

Hon. WM. M. CHURCHWELL.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I demand the previous question upon the engrossment of the resolution.

On seconding the demand for the previous question, there were, upon a division—yeas 64, noes 37; no quorum voting.

Mr. CHURCHWELL demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. LILLY, and JONES of Louisiana, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 81, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order now to move to refer this resolution to the Committee on Printing?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, for the reason that the demand for the previous question has been seconded.

The main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to lay that joint resolution on the table.

Mr. LETCHER. And on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. MILLSON's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 67, nays 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Barksdale, Barry, Boccock, Boyce, Caskey, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cook, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Edmundson, Edmundson, Thomas D. Elliot, English, Farley, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Greenwood, Haven, Hendricks, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Latham, Letcher, Lindsley, Macdonald, McMullin, McQueen, May, Mayall, Millson, Morgan, Nichols, Parker, Phillips, Powell, Puryear, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Sabin, Seward, Shaw, Skelton, Andrew Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, Wheeler, and Hendrick B. Wright—67.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Breckinridge, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dick, Disney, Edgerton, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Everhart, Fenton, Flagger, Florence, Goodrich, Green, Henn, Howe, Kerr, Knox, Lamb, Lilly, McCulloch, Mace, Macey, Matteson, Maurice, Morrison, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Peck, Pennington, John Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Ready, Reese, Riddle, Rowe, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Shannon, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, William B. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vail, Wade, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, and Daniel B. Wright—88.

So the House refused to lay the joint resolution on the table.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I call for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Does not this resolution make an appropriation? It seems to me it does, and at the rate of $36,300.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the resolution.

The resolution was accordingly read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is no such fund as is referred to in the contingent fund.

The SPEAKER. Then there is no appropriation made by the resolution.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is that proposition up for action?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about stating the business before the committee, and replying to the question of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, that, in his opinion, the bill contains an appropriation, and that, under the rules, it must be referred. The Chair overrules the objection made by the gentleman from Tennessee. The bill proposes to appropriate the money out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. JONES. What has the House to do with the Senate's contingent fund?

The SPEAKER. It is a resolution which the House has a right to pass, if it chooses to do so.

Mr. FULLER. If this is a resolution for the republication of laws, should it not go to the Committee on Printing?

The SPEAKER. It is a joint resolution, having the force of a law, according to the decision of those who have gone before me. It authorizes the purchase of books. It is a law of Congress which we are about to pass.

Mr. LETCHER. Will there be any extra cost for binding these books?

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to determine.

Mr. LETCHER. It strikes me that there is.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to know if that part of the resolution which applies to the Senate does not make an appropriation? I would like to have the resolution read again.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order. The resolution provides for the buying of certain books, to be printed at $1 65 a copy, and paying for them out of the contingent fund of the House. It does not, according to the rule, appropriate money. The Chair, therefore, overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire that the gentleman shall so amend his resolution as to provide that these books shall be bound.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I have no objection to that. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot accept the amendment, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I ask the consent of the House to make a few observations in reference to it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. Mr. Triplett is not going to sell his book in sheets. It is not a book until it is bound.

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous consent of the House that the gentleman from Tennessee be allowed to modify his resolution?

Mr. JONES. I object; and move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I submit that that motion is not in order. It has been once made and voted down by the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has since been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JONES. I ask the yeas and nays upon the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 81, nays 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Benton, Bockton, Brooks, Bugg, Caskie, Christian, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, John G. Davis, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, English, Farley, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Letcher, Lindsley, Macdonald, McMullin, McQueen, May, Mayall, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Packer, Pennington, Phillips, Powell, Furay, Ready, David Ritchie, Ruffin, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Andrew Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walsh, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Breckinridge, Bridges, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chastain, Churchwell, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Dick, Disney, Eastman, Edgerton, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Everhart, Fenton, Florence, Goodrich, Green, Harrison, Henn, Kerr, Kurtz, Lamb, Lilly, McCulloch, McNaire, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Phelps, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Russell, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, William Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, Trout, Upham, Vail, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, and Westbrook—67.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan, moved that the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled bills of the following titles; which were signed by the Speaker:

An act to relinquish the reversionary interest of the United States to a certain reservation therein mentioned, and to confirm the title of Charles G. Gunter;

An act to constitute Tuscumbia, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery, and for other purposes;

An act to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts, and in the cities of New York and Philadelphia; and

An act granting the right of way over the depot grounds on the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, in the State of Michigan, to Port Huron and Lake Michigan Railroad Company.

COMPENSATION TO A COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerk to the Committee on Territories be, and he is hereby, allowed the usual per diem compensation received by clerks of committees, for such time as he may have served on such committee, over and above the time specified in the resolution employing said clerk.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The business in order before the body is the consideration of the motion to discharge the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads from the further consideration of certain memorials, and that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not. It was progressing when the House suspended all rules to take up the joint resolution on which we have been acting. It is now morning.

Mr. ORR. Is it not more than an hour since the Chair stated the morning hour had commenced?

The SPEAKER. It is an hour and a half.

Mr. ORR. I would inquire how we are to tell when the morning hour expires, if it is to run by intervals? When it commences to run, it strikes me that it runs through.

The SPEAKER. The House suspended the morning hour twenty minutes before it had expired.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the motion will be entertained.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. ORR. I insist that my motion is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is not.

Mr. ORR. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PRINGLE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ORR. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Carpenter, Christian, Corwin, Craige, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dunbar, Edgerton, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Goode, Goodrich, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Haven, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Lamb, Lilly, Lindsley, McMullin, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Powell, Preston, Pringle, Parryear, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—86.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Belcher, Bockton, Bridges, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cook, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edmunds, English, Paulkner, Florence, Gamble, Green, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Howe, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Macdonald, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Millson, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, and Westbrook—64.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 2, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

On motion by Mr. WELLER, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message of the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 10th July, 1854, correspondence and documents in relation to the claims of persons for services performed, and supplies and subsistence furnished to the Indians in California, under contracts with the Indian agents in 1851; which was read, and ordered to be printed.

PETITION, ETC.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of Albert Horn, William H. De Foust, and other American citizens recently residing at, or carrying on business with, San Juan del Norte, praying indemnity for property destroyed by the recent bombardment of that town, by Commander Hollins, of the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the memorial of William R. Glover and T. W. Mather, praying the passage of a law directing the Sixth Auditor to adjust and allow their quarterly compensation under a contract made with the Postmaster General for the transportation of the mails on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers; which was referred the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SLIDELL, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of Joseph M. Hernandez, in behalf of the claimants under the ninth article of the treaty of 1819 with Spain, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William W. Gitt, assignee of land warrants lost, praying the passage of an act authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue other warrants in his favor, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Martin Fenwick, praying the confirmation of his title to a certain tract of land, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a bill to amend the "Act requiring foreign regulations of commerce to be laid annually before Congress," approved August 16, 1842, and for other purposes, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of William Black, a boatswain on board one of the ships composing the United States exploring expedition in 1838 and 1839, praying to be allowed the same amount of extra pay as was allowed other officers of the same grade, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. FISH, from the select committee appointed to inquire into the causes of the mortality and sickness on board emigrant vessels, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the better protection of life and health on board of passenger ships; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FISH moved that ten thousand additional copies of the report of the select committee be printed; which motion was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Lea, of Cincinnati, representing that he has discovered a preventive of the cholera, and praying an investigation into the merits of it, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Jacob McLellan, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Hugh Wallace Wormley, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William Davis, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had this day approved and signed an act for the purchase of the copyright of a work published by Thomas H. Sumner, wherein he describes his new method of ascertaining a ship's position at sea.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to their amendments to the bill to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States, in the district of Massachusetts.

Also, that they had passed the following bills of the Senate:

An act to relinquish the reversionary interest of the United States to a certain reservation therein mentioned, and to confirm the title of Charles G. Gunter thereto; and

An act granting the right of way over, and depot grounds on, the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, in the State of Michigan, to the Port Huron and Lake Michigan Railroad Company.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act to establish a port of delivery at Lake Port, on Lake Pontchartrain, and for other purposes;

An act constituting Madison, in the State of Indiana, a port of delivery;

An act creating a collection district in Texas and New Mexico; and

An act to constitute Tuscumbia, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery, and for other purposes.

Which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

WILLIAM H. WEIRICH.

Mr. WELLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back House bill for the relief of William H. Weirich. If there be no objection, I ask for its consideration at this time.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to pay to William H. Weirich, late second lieutenant of company G, in Colonel J. D. Stevenson's regiment of New York volunteers, $576 26, the amount of mileage from California to New York, and two months' pay, as were paid to other officers and soldiers of that regiment.

No amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ABIGAIL STAFFORD.

Mr. BROWN. Some time since I submitted a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution explanatory of an act for the relief of Abigail Stafford was rejected. I ask the Senate to consider that motion now, for the purpose of disposing of the subject. If it gives rise to any debate, I will consent to let it go over until next session.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall not consider that now. Will a single objection prevent it?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir. It is a question for the Senate to decide.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senate will not take it up. We ought to consider the appropriation bills. If we do not, how will it be possible for us to get through with the business of the session?

Mr. BROWN. If it takes ten minutes, I will let it go over.

The motion was not agreed to—ayes ten, noes not counted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to suspend all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the fortification bill.

Mr. PETTIT. I desire to make a report.

Mr. SLIDELL. I hope the Senator will give us an opportunity to make reports from committees.

Mr. HUNTER. Unless we go on with the appropriation bills, it will be impossible to get through with the business by the time fixed for adjournment.

Mr. WELLER. It will not take ten minutes to make reports.

Mr. PETTIT. I object to proceeding to the consideration of the fortification bill, until I have had an opportunity to present reports from a committee.

Mr. HUNTER. I will withdraw my motion for half an hour.

Various reports and petitions were then presented, which are stated in a former part of the report, for the convenience of classification.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. SLIDELL. I desire to offer a resolution, which will save some of the time of the Senate, and to which I presume there will be no objection. It is as follows:

Resolved, That all subjects before the Senate at the close of the present session, including those before committees, shall be continued to the next session, and shall then be proceeded with in the same manner as if no adjournment of the Senate had taken place; and the papers which have been referred to the committees, and may be in their possession at the close of the session, shall be returned informally to the Secretary, and by him restored to the committees when appointed at the next session.

Mr. RUSK. I suggest to the Senator that that is already the rule.

Mr. SLIDELL. This applies merely to petitions which are pending before committees. It is to obviate the necessity of the committees asking to be discharged from the consideration of the business, and having it again referred to them at the next session.

Mr. RUSK. There is no necessity for that.

Mr. SLIDELL. The Secretary of the Senate tells me that there is, and that it will save a vast deal of trouble.

Mr. SUMNER. I will inquire if the resolution proposed by the Senator from Louisiana is not a superfluity, and if it is not already provided for by an existing rule?

Mr. SLIDELL. It is not.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the Senator will find that it is a superfluity.

Mr. SLIDELL. There is a joint resolution to which, perhaps, the Senator from Massachusetts refers, which applies only to bills. This resolution is simply to obviate the necessity of committees asking to be discharged from the business pending before them, and having it at the next session referred to them as unfinished business,

I am told by the Secretary it will save time. That is my only object in offering it. I have no interest in the matter at all.

Mr. BROWN. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, though it may be a superfluity, to let it pass. It can do no harm, and we can pass it in less time than it will take to talk about it.

The resolution was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

THE BRIG GLAMORGAN.

Mr. SEWARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the memorial of the owner of the brig Glamorgan, praying that the name may be changed, and a register issued, to report "a bill to change the name of the American-built brig Glamorgan to that of Wizard." I ask for the consideration of the bill now. This vessel was seized and condemned as a slave. She is a very good vessel, and, since her condemnation, has been bought by citizens of the United States, who wish to remove the taint which attaches to her former name.

The bill was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the owner of the brig Glamorgan, of Boston, to change her name to that of Wizard, and to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to her a register under that name, she having been condemned and sold by the United States authorities for having been employed in the slave trade, and having been purchased since by her present owner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

HON. JARED W. WILLIAMS.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, a resolution touching a question of privilege in relation to the right of the Hon. Mr. Williams to hold his seat on this floor was referred, some weeks ago, to the Judiciary Committee. I do not know but that I owe an apology to the Senate for not reporting on it earlier, as it is a matter which I know, according to parliamentary usage, should be acted upon as promptly as possible; but there were papers which had to be produced at the instance of the incumbent, without which the committee could not very well proceed. The committee have had the same under consideration, and report, by a resolution, that the incumbent is not entitled to his seat. It is a question for the Senate to say, whether they will consider it now, as I think they ought, or whether it shall be postponed.

Mr. CLAYTON. It ought to lie on the table, and be printed.

The report and resolution were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MARYSVILLE AND BENICIA RAILROAD.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill granting the right of way to the Marysville and Benicia Railroad Company through and over the grounds of the United States at Benicia, California, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report it back, and recommend its passage. I ask that it may be put upon its passage now.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall not put such bills upon their passage now.

Mr. GWIN. It will take but a minute to consider it.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to grant to the company the right of way, sixty-six feet in width, for their road through and over the grounds of the United States at and near Benicia, the route across the grounds to be approved by the Secretary of War, before it is entered upon for the purpose of constructing the railroad, and the grant is only to be made if it shall be without detriment to the public interest in the opinion of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

The PRESIDENT. The bill of the Senate to constitute the city of Tusculum, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery, has been returned from the House with an amendment. The Chair will present the amendment to the Senate for consideration.

The amendment was in the form of an additional section, providing that Paducah, in Kentucky, Shreveport, in Louisiana, and Jeffersonville, in Indiana, shall be constituted ports of delivery within the collection district of New Orleans, and making the usual provision in regard to the appointment of the surveyors of customs and their duties. The title was also amended by adding "and for other purposes."

Mr. CLAY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments, so that the bill may be finally passed.

The amendments were concurred in.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I now move to suspend all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the fortification bill.

Mr. BELL. Is the half hour out?

Mr. HUNTER. The reports have been gone through with.

Mr. BELL. I made an attempt yesterday to get up a private bill which came from the House; but on account of the objection of one Senator, I failed. I hope it will be taken up now. It is a bill for the relief of Rebecca Baggerley. She is upwards of eighty years of age, and may not live more than a year or two. I am sure there can be no objection to the bill. It grants her a pension of only twenty dollars a year.

Mr. HUNTER. I agreed to give way for reports, but not for the passage of bills. I must ask that my motion be put to the Senate. They can vote it down if they are not disposed to go on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. HUNTER's motion was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. I now ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass the bill of which I have spoken.

Mr. HUNTER. I cannot give way for the passage of bills. It is more important that we should go on now with the appropriation bills. The Senator can get his bill up at another time; but I do not see why, when we are about to enter on appropriation bills, we should suspend them for the purpose of acting on a private bill.

Mr. BELL. It might be acted upon and passed while you are finding the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will inform the Senator that his bill can be taken up at another time, and doubtless it will be passed. It is a House bill.

Mr. BELL. Very well, sir, I will take your guarantee.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, accordingly resumed the consideration of the bill from the House, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the repairs of barracks and quarters for the year ending the 30th June, 1855.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state, in reference to the bill, that the Committee on Finance have reported it back exactly as it came from the House. It has been difficult, for some years, to get any bill for fortifications through the House. This one was passed, I believe, by only three majority, and we were afraid to jeopardize it by reporting any amendment. We have, therefore, reported it to the Senate as it came from the House, and hope it will be passed in that shape; for we believe that if we make any amendments and send it back to the House, it will be in danger.

The bill was read.

Mr. BAYARD. I had intended to move to increase one of the appropriations contained in the bill—that for Fort Delaware—but I am satisfied, for the reasons urged by the Senator from Virginia, that it would be impolitic to amend the bill; and, further, I do not think we should have time to get through with the other appropriation bills, if we amended it. I, therefore, forbear to offer the amendment, though I think I could give good reasons for it.

Mr. WELLER. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. SHIELDS,] who has been called away by the serious, and, perhaps, fatal illness of his friend and colleague in the other House, [Mr. BISSELL,] I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendment, to come in after the clause "for repairs and construction of Fort St. Philip, Mississippi river, Louisiana, $25,000;":

And for commencing the tower, battery, and fortification at or near Proctorsville, in the State of Louisiana, $30,000.

This has been properly estimated for by the Department. If any Senator is desirous of it, the report of the Engineer's department can be read to show the absolute necessity for the appropriation. The letter, however, is somewhat lengthy.

Mr. MALLORY. Perhaps the most important fortification in which the country is now engaged, is that at Tortugas. We have the estimates of the Department for two years in succession, upon our table, showing that about $250,000 would be the proper appropriation for that work, and that that sum could be most economically consumed in its construction. In the face of that opinion, however, given at successive Congresses, the Department has now called for only $50,000 for one fort, and $75,000 for the other. That is the present call of the War Department, and still you have upon your table, I say, estimates for the sum of $250,000. Now, had I not a perfect conviction of the fact, that if you put any amendment at all upon the bill it must be lost, I should feel constrained, in virtue of the vast importance of Tortugas, particularly at this moment, to move an amendment to increase the appropriation in the bill. I will say to my friend from California, that I have had assurance from quarters which I am not permitted to doubt, that if we attempt to amend the bill, it will fail in the House; and if it should fail, the important works which we now have going on, and with the hands completely initiated to the work, with all their plans to carry it on, must be suspended, and the implements sold. This little pittance is necessary, to keep it in progress. It would be a great national evil to have the work stopped; and, convinced as I am that it will be stopped, if we amend the bill, I am constrained to vote against all amendments, because, if any be made, the appropriation for Tortugas, which is one of the most important works, should also be increased.

Mr. WELLER. I regret very much that this bill is in the condition in which it is represented to be by my friend from Florida—that if any amendment should be added to it by the Senate, no matter how necessary it may be, the bill will fail. I have felt it to be my duty to present this amendment, not only because the work is important in itself, but because the Committee on Military Affairs, who had charge of the subject, have directed me to do it. I know nothing with regard to it except what appears from the papers sent to us from the department. They show that it is absolutely indispensable that the appropriation should be made; and I hope, sir, that it will not endanger the passage of the bill in the other House. I should be very sorry if we found ourselves, in the latter days of the session, placed in a position to be compelled to refuse important works simply because the House of Representatives would not agree to them. I do not believe that amending any of these appropriation bills, in a proper way, and for public works of acknowledged utility, will endanger its passage in the slightest degree.

Mr. SLIDELL. I would ask my friend from Florida whether the appropriations to which he alludes as contained in this bill, coming to us from the House of Representatives, is not in accordance with the estimate of the War Department? He thinks that a large sum may be judiciously expended. It appears that the Secretary of War entertains a different opinion, and it has been left to us not to exceed the estimates of the War Department. In relation to the amendment offered by the acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I have to say that it is one of the most important and absolutely indispensable points to be fortified for the protection of the great commercial city of New Orleans. Proctorsville, where it is contemplated to build the fort, is situated at the terminus of a railroad some twenty-eight or thirty miles long, making a most direct and easy communication from the sea to the city of New Orleans. I look upon it as absolutely indispensable for the protection of that city. I really cannot appreciate the force of the argument adopted by the Senator from Florida. He says, that if we put any amendment upon the bill, it will be lost. He is more familiar with legislative forms than I am, but my impression is, that if the amendment be agreed to by the Senate, it will be submitted to the House for concurrence. The House may refuse to concur, or they may concur. If they do not concur, we shall have resort to a committee of conference. I think I have never known an appropriation bill lost under such circumstances. I wish this amendment to be agreed to by the Senate; and if the House be obstinate in objecting to its introduction, I shall yield with the best grace that I may to inevitable necessity. I ask the Senate, if there be any doubt upon the subject, to have the Secretary read from the report, which will entirely satisfy them that there is not one item in the bill more meritorious than this.

Mr. WELLER. I have only one additional remark to make. In consequence of the peculiar position in which this bill has been placed, the committee on Military Affairs have concluded to report but this amendment. Ordinarily that committee have presented a good many amendments to the fortification bill; but, I repeat, in consequence of the peculiar circumstances attending the condition of this bill, they have but this small amendment to offer.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall be able to act on this bill speedily. It is impossible for us to debate these appropriation bills at any length. The House has probably passed the last which it has before it at this time, the civil and diplomatic bill. I merely throw out this suggestion for the consideration of Senators.

Mr. MALLORY. It is with a great deal of regret that I say anything against the amendment for New Orleans. I know it is important, and I regret very much that it is not in the bill. As to the estimate of the Department, it has for years estimated for fortifications, but the House of Representatives have refused to pass a fortification bill at all, and this is the first which we have had under the estimate. They have framed this after a deliberate examination of the whole subject, and they have not proceeded upon the estimates which the Department furnished. The estimate for the works to which I refer is in these words:

"The most economical, as well as the most expeditious mode of completing these works, would be to appropriate for each port, at once, the whole sum stated in the estimate as necessary for its completion, namely:

For Fort Taylor.....	$730,000
For Fort Jefferson.....	889,662

giving authority to the President to assign annually, or from time to time, as large a portion thereof as should be found compatible with an advantageous prosecution of the operations, or as public exigencies should, in his opinion, seem to require.

"With such grants the works need never be suspended. The most favorable times for making contracts, procuring supplies, and pressing various kinds of work could always be profited by, and a large sum in contingent expenditures—increasing rapidly with the extension of the time, and scarcely at all with the enlargement of force—would be saved.

"The next best mode would be to appropriate a much larger amount annually for each fort than heretofore.

"The sum of $150,000 might be advantageously expended next year on each; and, should it be deemed important to press on the constructions more vigorously, disposition may be made for an advantageous application of the sum of $250,000 to each."

Now, if I were not convinced that the incorporation of an amendment would give rise to an examination of the bill in the House, and to a committee of conference, and that it would delay if not defeat the bill, I should certainly not put myself in this position in voting against an amendment, knowing its importance. But I have seen members of the House, who are supposed to be well informed on this subject, and I have seen the engineer of the Department, and after mature deliberation, I have become convinced that, by amending it, we may defeat the passage of the bill entirely; and it is for that reason that I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I agree with the Senator from Florida. If this debate were prolonged, I could readily show that the work, the appropriation for which I would desire to have increased, is just as important as any one which is before us; and in addition to that, the faith of the Government is pledged to the construction of that work, and has been broken for twenty years past. These are considerations which do not apply to other works. But I do not wish to detain the Senate under the circumstances surrounding this bill. Sir, we must now look to this fact. You have the Army bill untouched here; you have the Navy bill untouched here; you have but two days of the session left; you have no bill before the House of Representatives except the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill; and if one amendment is offered and adopted to this bill, no Senator, with the opinions he entertains of important works in his own vicinity, will fail to insist that they should be properly appropriated for, and thus the bill would be endangered. I understand that it passed by but a majority of three votes in the House. I, therefore, think it would be exceedingly unwise to amend it at all. Under these circumstances, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. RUSK. The very argument made use of against the amendment would induce me to vote for it. It is stated that for a number of years the House of Representatives have absolutely refused to make appropriations of this description, and that this bill passed by a majority of only three votes. It is admitted on all hands that there ought to be amendments to it, and the argument used against amending it is that it will cause the loss of the bill in the House. That is no sufficient argument to me. I doubt the policy of these expenditures. I am inclined to concur with the minority of the House upon the subject; but if they are to be made at all, there should be something like equality and justice in them. I doubt the policy of this general system of fortifications any way, and I very much doubt the policy of making these small appropriations. A fortification is a thing which must be made according to some system. The expenditure of $25,000 would do no good so far as a fortification is concerned. How is it possible for those who expend the money to know upon what plan to begin the work, because future appropriations to carry it on according to any system are admitted to be extremely doubtful, inasmuch as Congress for a number of years have refused to make the appropriations, and now by a very small majority the House passed this bill, and when we are told that if we receive any amendment, however just it may be, the entire bill will be lost. I believe you had better take the money which you appropriate for these objects, and pay it to the officers and soldiers of the Army. I think that would produce a great deal more efficient defense of the country than by expending it for fortifications.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I take it for granted that the amendment is a legitimate one, and, under ordinary circumstances, I should vote to incorporate it in this bill; but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that we are near the close of the session, and that all the bills alluded to by the Senator from Delaware wait for the action of this body; and the prospect is, that the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill will engage the attention at least of a committee of conference between the two Houses. I know nothing of the merits of the amendment. I take it for granted, on the estimate of the War Department, that it is proper, and, under proper circumstances, I should vote to incorporate it into the bill; but we must look now at the condition in which the bill stands, in acting upon the amendment. I have an amendment, sir, which I should desire to offer, one that I believe is essential, one that is important to the sea-coast which we have at Alabama, and that is for the construction of a fortification at the mouth of Mobile bay; but with all my anxiety to get it adopted, and to have the work in progress, I am willing, under the circumstances which surround us, to forego offering it as an amendment. If, however, the bill is to be amended, I could not consent to withhold it, and I shall press it upon the Senate. I have uniformly pressed it on the consideration of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, but he, from a very solemn sense of his duty, has resisted my application to recommend the amendment to the bill. If we open this bill to amendment, and impede its progress through this body, I could not consent to withhold it. No gentleman can be more desirous to press an amendment of his own than I am to press this; but I feel satisfied that, if the amendment of the Senator from California be adopted, we shall load the bill down with amendments. Under this conviction, I am perfectly willing that the bill should pass as it is, without any amendment. I think it due to the public service, and due to the country, that it should go from this body without sending it back to the House with amendments to be acted upon there.

Mr. PRATT. This bill contains very many appropriations for the completion of forts and fortifications, which have all been commenced. The amendment, if I understand it, is for a new work not heretofore commenced, one which I am sure is very desirable to the country, and would be ben-official; but it is for a new work. The money which it proposes to appropriate is not to be expended towards the completion of a work already commenced under; the antecedent policy of the Government, but it is for the commencement of a new work. I shall be compelled, in order to secure the advantages which this bill does give towards the completion of the works already commenced, to vote against this amendment, as well as every other amendment that may be offered.

There is one other consideration which I desire to submit. Under the present condition of your Army you cannot man your forts. Those already established upon the Mississippi river, above New Orleans, have not more than one old man in them to sweep them out. If you should go to war with Spain, it could send over from Cuba a sufficient force, before we could find men to man them, to take them; and it would require millions of dollars to be expended by the Government for the purpose of getting them out. The true policy, therefore, I think, would be to enlarge the Army, so as to put some force in the forts already existing.

MR. SLIDELL. I know how precious time is, and I shall detain the Senate but a moment. The Senator from Maryland objects to the amendment, on the ground that it is for the commencement of a new work. There are several other items of the same character in this bill. I will not say another word on the amendment. I will simply ask the Secretary to read the letter from the Engineer Department on the subject.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, 18th March, 1854.

Sir: In answer to the letter of the Military Committee of the Senate, inclosing resolution of the Senate, instructing them to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the construction of a fortification at or near Proctorville, Louisiana, referred to this office for report, I have the honor to state that the importance of constructing as speedily as possible a small defensive work at Proctor's Landing has been frequently urged by this Department.

On this subject, I beg to refer to my annual report, dated November 1st, 1845, in which it is stated, as to Proctor's Landing:

"From the landing above named to the city of New Orleans, a distance of about twenty-eight miles, there is a beautiful road, one of the best in the State; and not a single obstacle, natural or artificial, now exists, to prevent or impede an enemy debarking at Proctor's from marching troops of all kinds, with baggage and artillery, directly up to the city; and there is nothing, moreover, to prevent his reaching that landing place in boats. An expedition following this route would encounter none of the impediments which the English found to be nearly insurmountable in the route they followed in approaching the city. Why the defense of this avenue was not provided for in the system proposed by General Bernard, I have not been able to divine. At any rate, now that the other channels of approach are for the most part provided with adequate fortifications, this demands an immediate attention. The defenses should consist of an inaccessible tower of capacity sufficient to accommodate a small garrison; and an exterior battery competent by its fire to prevent the approach of boats, for both which an estimate will accompany this report. It is presumed Congress will not hesitate to grant the proper appropriation."

In a letter to the Secretary of War, December 27, 1845, it is stated:

"Proctor's Landing is without defense; but as an excellent road leads from this landing place directly to the city—distance twenty-eight miles—it is of the first importance that it should be occupied without delay, and we only await the sanction of Congress. The defense should be a strong tower surrounded by a battery."

In a letter to the Secretary of War, February 27, 1846, the Department had occasion to report as follows in answer to a call from the Senate for information as to the project for defense at the place in question:

"In the spring of 1841, on a personal examination made by me of the environs of New Orleans, I became satisfied that an avenue which had been entirely neglected, if not overlooked, was in fact one of the most practicable routes to the city, and one most easily availed of by an enemy. The attention of the Government was accordingly directed to this circumstance, as well as to the probability that other undefended approaches might also exist, to settle which doubt an accurate reconnaissance was recommended of all that region. This reconnaissance, subsequent surveys of the particular locality, and an examination made by me in person, having confirmed the first impression, this Department has two or three times, in its reports to the Secretary of War, repeated its views as to the necessity of a work at the point mentioned."

In a letter to the same functionary, April 3, 1846:

"Next, at the southern end of Lake Borgne, is Proctor's Landing, from which point a good road conducts to the city. Works have been projected for the defense here, but their erection has not yet been authorized by Congress. They should be begun and finished as soon as possible."

The above quotations are given to show the opinions on this subject entertained for several years in this Department, and the anxious desire to secure their favorable consideration by the Government.

I have now only to add, that a grant, at the present session, of $30,000 for the proposed tower and battery, would be regarded as a very important contribution to the security of the city of New Orleans, enabling us to enter very effectually upon the commencement of the work.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOSEPH G. TOTTEN,
Brevet Brigadier General United States Engineers.

Hon. JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was rejected—ayes 8, noes not counted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; and the question was stated to be, "Shall the bill be read a third time?"

MR. CHASE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

MR. HUNTER. I hope the Senator will let the bill be ordered to its third reading, and ask the yeas and nays on its passage.

MR. CHASE. That will answer my purpose.

The bill was ordered to a third reading. It was read a third time; and on the question of its passage, the yeas and nays were ordered and taken, and resulted—yeas 35, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Walker, Weller—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Brown, Chase, Gillette, Houston, Rusk, Sumner, Toombs, and Wade—9.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

MR. HUNTER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

MR. MASON. I submit to my colleague that we ought to go into Executive session for twenty minutes. The Senate is now full, and it is very desirable to have an Executive session.

MR. HUNTER. If we go into Executive session, we shall spend the remainder of the day there, and have no time for the appropriation bills. I shall be willing in the evening to go into Executive session, if we can have the morning for the appropriation bill. The House will soon get through with the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and then they will have no other appropriation bill on which they can be acting.

MR. MASON. My colleague knows that late in the evening we cannot get a full Senate, and, therefore, I ask that we may go into Executive session now. I hope the motion of my colleague will not prevail.

MR. HUNTER. I hope the question will be taken.

MR. SEWARD. I think we shall be able to get out of Executive session in twenty minutes, if we go in now. If we wait until night, we may be in a great deal longer. I hope, therefore, the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Finance will not be agreed to.

MR. HUNTER. I think it is to be presumed that there will be a full attendance of Senators here all day. We are near the close of the session, and it is known that it is necessary to have a full attendance in order to transact the public business. The best way in which we can divide our time is to take up the appropriation bills now.

MR. STUART. Let us have a vote. We spend more time in talking about what to do than it would take to dispose of a great deal of business.

MR. HUNTER's motion was agreed to; ayes 20, noes 17. The Senate accordingly, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1855.

MR. RUSK. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to offer several amendments. The first is to add the following as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That hereafter the Postmaster General be authorized and directed to continue the mail service between Charleston, Key West, and Havana during August and September by a competent steamer, as it is now being performed during ten months of the year, and that to enable him to do so $10,000 are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The contract at present furnishes the mail between Key West and Havana for ten months in the year. For two months, the most important time of the year, the mails are not carried under the present contract. The amendment only authorizes the filling of it up. It would give twenty-six mails, at all events, to Key West during the year.

MR. SEWARD called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

MR. MALLORY. The amendment authorizes the Postmaster General, as I understand it, to carry the mails two months in the year; when they are not now carried. I will say to the Senate, in relation to it, that the town to be supplied with the mails by the appropriation, is the largest town in the State. The population is three thousand. It is the county seat. It has a military station also. It contains military barracks; and they have, in progress of construction, two large fortifications. A number of smaller places are dependent upon this place for mails, and it has now but twenty mails per annum.

MR. BAYARD. My objection to the amendment is, that it ought to be in the post route bill. There is nothing like it in this bill. It is not offered in its proper place here. I shall therefore vote against it without knowing whether such a provision ought to be made or not. This is a mere appropriation bill in every respect, and the amendment is to establish a post-route.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 34, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Butler, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Toombs, Wade, Walker, and Weller—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brodhead, Clayton, Fish, Gillette, Pearce, and Rusk—9.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. RUSK. I am directed, by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to offer the following amendment:

For the creation of post routes, as contained in the bill passed at the present session of Congress establishing routes, $1,000.

That is according to the estimate of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. RUSK. I offer the following amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That there be allowed and paid to the postmaster of Washington city, District of Columbia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a commission of one mill per pound upon the aggregate weight of the public documents printed by order of Congress, and deposited in the office of the said postmaster to be mailed; said allowance to commence with the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1853, and be computed for the first year, from the ascertained weight for the month of January, 1854; and that said postmaster be required to pay out of said commissions to the clerks and other employees in his office a sum not exceeding $250 per annum, as compensation for the extra labor performed by them in the assortment and mailing of said documents; and that he be required to account for and settle with the Post Office Department for the disbursement of those commissions, and any surplus that may remain, in the same manner as is now required in the settlement of his other accounts.

MR. HUNTER. I hope we shall not put that matter in this general appropriation bill. We ought not to touch the question of the compensation of clerks and postmasters in this bill. If we begin with the question of the compensation of postmasters, I do not know where we shall find ourselves. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

MR. RUSK. The compensation of postmasters and clerks everywhere, except in the city of Washington, has been provided for by a bill which we have passed. These clerks, as appears from the evidence before the committee, labor as hard as any clerks in the city of Washington. They have several times petitioned to be put upon the same footing with the clerks in the Department, but inasmuch as they do not belong to the Department, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads believed it best to put them on an equality with other clerks in the city of Washington, or as near as may be so by this method. It will be a very small charge on the immense amount of printed matter which passes through the office. They have very laborious duties to perform, and their salaries are very low. One thing will result from the adoption of this amendment, you will ascertain precisely the amount of matter which passes through the city of Washington, which is very important.

MR. PRATT. Before my honorable friend takes his seat, I shall be glad to know what will be the probable addition to the compensation of the clerks by this amendment?

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 2, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 131.

Mr. RUSK. They are to get a mill on every pound of public documents sent through the office.

Mr. PRATT. What will that pay all the employees in the post office?

Mr. RUSK. I have an estimate here, from which an idea may be formed. From the account which was kept for the month of January, 1854, of letters and documents sent through the post office of Washington city by the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, they were found to be as follows: There were sent through the office, franked by members of Congress, seventy-seven thousand seven hundred and twenty-seven letters, weighing three thousand four hundred and forty-six pounds, the postage of which, prepaid, would have been $4,663 44. In the same month six hundred and ninety-three thousand five hundred and eight pounds of public documents were sent, the postage on which, at the prepaid rates, would have been $100,961 20. That is for one month. The number of clerks and employees in the office is thirty. The chief clerk has a salary of $1,800 a year. Then there is one clerk at a salary of $1,500, three at a salary of $1,400, one at a salary of $1,300, two at a salary of $1,150, two at $1,000, two at $900, and sixteen all under $900, getting about $750 each.

Mr. BAYARD. I trust this amendment will not be adopted. It relates merely to the increase of compensation of the postmaster and clerks, in my judgment without any sufficient data as to extent to which you are going to increase it. You are going to pay at the rate of a cent on every pound.

Mr. RUSK. A mill.

Mr. BAYARD. A mill on every pound of public documents. They are franked, and carried without cost to individuals, but are a charge on the Government. You are going to increase that cost, and without, as I see, any sufficient data to justify the increase. We have no evidence here of what is the compensation of the postmaster of Washington, which justifies making this increase, nor is there any sufficient data to show to what extent the increase will go. Further, the amendment is retrospective. It goes back to the 1st of July, 1853. I moved the other day, by the instruction of the Committee on Public Buildings, at the request of the Postmaster General, an amendment to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, for the purpose of the enlargement of the post office, which, according to the statement made by him, was absolutely requisite for the convenience of the public officers. It was voted down without a moment's hesitation. Here you propose to increase the pay of officers whose compensation is already quite sufficient, I should presume, from the ordinary emoluments of postmasters, and the quantity of business transacted here, and to increase it not only by paying them for the future, but it is retrospective in its operation, and that, too, in an ordinary appropriation bill. I think if this matter is to be allowed, if this change is to be made in the mode of compensation of the postmaster here, there are other cases in which changes also might be desirable. But if it is desirable, it ought to come up in a separate bill, where it would be more maturely considered. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope that the amendment will be agreed to. The clerks in the city post office are the only employees of the Government in Washington, that have not had their compensation increased. We can find no better place in which to increase it than in this bill. It will produce no difficulty at all.

Mr. EVANS. I desire to say a word in regard to the amendment. Is there any occasion for an increase of salaries, when for every vacancy there are fifty applications? My motion is that you should give a salary which will compensate, and which will induce competent men to take the office. Now, it is notorious that for every vacancy there are at least fifty applications. These people work till three o'clock and no longer. The argument, if it proved anything, would prove that you needed an additional number. They work till three o'clock, and then the office is closed, and they do not work afterwards.

Mr. RUSK. If the Senator will allow me, they work about twelve hours a day. This is not an amendment in relation to the clerks of the Post Office Department. It relates to those in the city post office, and they work more than twelve hours a day.

Mr. MORTON. Being a member of the committee who reported the amendment, I beg leave to say a few words. I know not whether this be the proper bill in which to introduce an amendment of this kind or not, or whether this is the proper manner for increasing the compensation of the clerks; but this I know full well: there is no corps of clerks in the employ of the Government more competent, and who perform more laborious duties, than the corps of clerks in the Washington city post office. This mode of compensating them will be no direct draft on the Treasury. The whole amount, if distributed between them, will not be more than $250 to each as the increase of their compensation. They labor from twelve to fourteen hours per day, and many of them fifteen or twenty hours. Many of them receive less than $800 each per annum. I presume there is no appropriation bill more proper in which to introduce the amendment than the post office bill itself. I shall certainly vote for the amendment, unless Senators will suggest a more proper bill in which it should be placed.

Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. Our documents have to be distributed at this point. From here they are radiated all over the country. These clerks are certainly more poorly paid than any other clerks in this city, and the mode of compensation proposed is more just than any other—this being, for the extra labor, only the small pittance of one mill on the pound, as mentioned in the amendment. The aggregate cannot go beyond the increase mentioned, for if the amount in the weight of the public documents should go beyond that, they cannot receive for it. For one, I shall vote for it cordially. I hope it may be adopted.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think it exactly applies to the extra labor. I presume the case occurs to other members of Congress as it does to myself. All the documents, at least during the short session, are sent to me here in one bag. The labor is performed by the local officers in my State. That is constantly done during the short session.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the amendment; and resulted—yeas 27, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Houston, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Stuart, Sumner, Toucey, Wade, and Walker—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Foot, Geyer, Hunter, Pratt, and Toombs—11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I have another amendment, to which I think there will not be a dissenting voice:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the surviving late Vice President of the United States shall have, during his life, the same authority to frank letters and other mail matter, which he possessed while in office, and the same authority shall belong to the future Vice Presidents after they go out of office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I propose the following amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to increase the salaries of the route agents, provided such increase shall not exceed twenty per cent. increase on their present salaries respectively.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall not put amendments increasing salaries on this bill. I think we have as much on it as we can carry.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. STUART. I think it ought to give the Postmaster General a discretion. Under it, as it now stands, he will be obliged to give all the route agents the increase at the same rate.

Mr. RUSK. He is authorized to increase their salaries.

Mr. STUART. I think there should be additional words to the effect, that he shall increase them to such amount as he shall deem necessary, not exceeding the twenty per cent.

Mr. RUSK. That is what is in the amendment.

Mr. STUART. I think under it, as it now stands, he would have to raise all alike.

Mr. RUSK. No, sir.

Mr. STUART. It appears so to me.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not see that these officers have any more claim to an increase of salary than any others engaged in the various departments outside the city of Washington. This ought to be a subject of general legislation, and I do not think that we ought to discriminate in favor of one set of employees, and neglect all the others. We have not time to go into the subject now in a general bill, and I think we ought not to act on it partially.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Texas whether the Postmaster General has not now the power to increase the compensation of the route agents? Do they now receive all that they are entitled to receive by law?

Mr. STUART. I propose to amend the amendment, by inserting the word "such" before "route agents," and adding the words, "as he may think proper;" so as to make the amendment read, in effect, that he may increase the pay of such route agents as he thinks proper, provided the amount shall not go beyond twenty per cent.

Mr. RUSK. I accept that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The question then is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUSK. I offer the following amendment:

For transportation of the mails from Vera Cruz, by way of Acapulco, to San Francisco, twice a month, under the contract made by the Postmaster General with Abert C. Ramsey and Edward H. Carmick; $10,000: Provided, Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to sanction said contract for a longer period than until the 1st day of January, 1855, and no part of said appropriation shall be used until the said Ramsey and Carmick shall signify to the Postmaster General, in writing, their acquiescence in the tenor of this proviso: And provided further, That said contractors be required to alternate with the mails now carried by way of Panama.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to hear some explanation of that.

Mr. RUSK. Some two years ago there was a general law passed, authorizing the Postmaster General, whenever he saw proper, to advertise for the transportation of the United States mails through any foreign country, from one part of the United States to another. Under the provisions of that law, the Postmaster General—Mr. Hubbard, I believe, was in that office at the time—advertised for the transportation of the mails between New Orleans and San Francisco. There were a number of bids received. I think the Nicaragua company proposed to carry the mails twice a month between New Orleans and San Francisco, in something over twenty days, for $240,000.

Mr. SEWARD. By what route?

Mr. RUSK. By the Nicaragua route. The individuals named in the amendment, proposed to carry it from Vera Cruz to Acapulco, and from there to San Francisco, so as to reach it in seventeen days. I think that was the time. The report of the Postmaster General will show it. They made one trip, and came within the time prescribed by the Postmaster General, under their bid for $424,000, I believe it was. The Postmaster General entered into a contract with them, which was not to be of binding force and effect unless it was sanctioned by Congress, and an appropriation made to carry it out. The contract was made on the 3d of March, as well as I remember, when Congress had no time to act upon the subject. It was a part of the system of the Postmaster General, at that time, to have a mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz. That mail is now going on, and being carried, I believe, for $69,000, though I do not remember the exact sum. These gentlemen, after they had performed one trip, called for the mails at the different termini of the route, but they were refused to them on various grounds, which will be found stated in the Postmaster General's report of this year. He declined to make the contract because of the unsettled state of Mexico. He said nothing about Congress not having sanctioned it; but he did not like to risk the valuable mails going to California by this route, from what information he had of the state of Mexico. The terms were that they were to transport the mails from Acapulco to San Francisco in appropriate vessels, vessels of the same character as those in which other mails are carried. Under these circumstances the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, have instructed me to offer this amendment, which, if adopted, will enable this matter to be decided. It is not to go beyond the first of January next, and places no obligation whatever upon the Government beyond that period, because there is a proviso attached to it, requiring the parties to signify in writing, to the Postmaster General, the acceptance of the terms before he is allowed to use the appropriation.

Mr. SEWARD. What will be the saving of time in the transportation of the mail between New York, by New Orleans and San Francisco?

Mr. RUSK. I think something over seven days.

Mr. SEWARD. Seven days? It is a mere experiment.

Mr. HUNTER. What would be the expense for a year?

Mr. RUSK. Four hundred and twenty-four thousand dollars.

Mr. WELLER. I move to strike out the whole amendment, and insert the following:

That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract with the lowest and best bidder, after the usual advertisement, for the transportation of the mails of the United States from New York, Philadelphia, or Baltimore, and from New Orleans to San Francisco, also from San Francisco to New York, Philadelphia, or Baltimore, and to New Orleans, by the most expeditious and practicable route, the service to be performed semi-monthly, and at such times, under the direction of the Postmaster General, as, in connection with other mail service, will secure as near as practicable a weekly mail each way between the points designated and determined upon: Provided, That the entire cost of such service shall not exceed $250,000 per annum.

And be it further enacted, That no contract under the provisions of this act shall be made for a period of more than four years, and that any contract so made may be determined on three months previous notice from the Postmaster General without loss to the Government; and it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to determine any existing contracts for the service herein required, and to make a new contract therefor whenever greater expedition can be secured within the provisions of this act expressed.

And be it further enacted, That all laws, now in force, authorizing the Postmaster General to assess fines or penalties for the non-performance of mail contracts, shall be, and the same are made, applicable to any contract made in pursuance of this act.

I move that as a substitute to the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It will be seen that the only object which we seek to obtain is a weekly mail. We already have a semi-monthly mail, which is provided for under a contract, which cannot now be terminated. It is proposed to leave this open to competition. There are various routes over which the mail may be carried—the Tehuantepec route, the Honduras route, and, also, the one advocated by the Senator from Texas, the Ramsey route. This throws the whole matter open to competition, and provides for a semi-monthly mail, in addition to what we have, at a cost not to exceed $250,000 per annum. It invites competition from all the various routes. Our only object in the matter is, of course, to get a mail. We are perfectly indifferent as to the route over which it will pass. We consider it just and fair, however, to allow those interested in the different routes the opportunity of competing for the transportation. I could go into other explanations, but I know time is precious; and I suppose the attention of the Senate has already been directed to the importance of this subject.

Mr. HUNTER. I am unwilling to add to the appropriations, which are already so large, in this bill. It already appropriates $8,388,000, and that is exclusive of the appropriation for the ocean mail steamers. It contains a provision that $2,344,464 shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, to meet a deficiency. A great deal of this expense is incurred in the California mail service. I think that we ought not to add to these appropriations which are already so large, unless there is some great necessity for it, and if others are added they ought to be distributed, perhaps, more equally over the whole country; but the appropriations are already too large, and I cannot agree to vote for anything to swell them further.

Mr. BRODHEAD. As a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I desire to state this case as I understand it. The first question which arises is, will you increase the mail service to California? They now have semi-monthly mails at a very considerable expense, and the question is will you make it a weekly service. At the close of the last Administration, Ramsey and his partner entered into a conditional contract to carry the mails from Vera Cruz, by way of Acapulco, to San Francisco, for the term of four years, for four hundred and twenty-odd thousand dollars per annum, making it considerably over a million of dollars for the four years. But there was a provision that the contract was not to go into effect until it was sanctioned by Congress and an appropriation made in pursuance of the contract. Under this contract, therefore, these contractors had no right to demand pay, because it was not an effective contract. It was not to be agreed to by both parties until an appropriation was made. No appropriation was made. The contract was negotiated in February, 1853, and signed March 3, 1853. It contained a condition that it was not to go into operation until sanctioned by Congress and an appropriation made. Now, the proposition of the honorable Senator from Texas is to give them one quarter's pay. Well, sir, we all know what that is. If we pay them for one quarter, if we give the service to this route for that time, of course we sanction the contract for four years, at over four hundred and twenty thousand dollars a year. That is the plain, naked truth. The honorable Senator from California submits a proposition, which will not be at an expenditure of more than $250,000. He throws it open to competition. He proposes that the Postmaster General shall enter into a contract to carry this mail semi-monthly, for a sum not exceeding $250,000. I should like to know from him whether the service can be performed for that money?

Mr. WELLER. I have not the slightest doubt but that it can be got for a less sum than $250,000.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The question is, whether we will allow over $420,000 or $250,000. There may be an obligation in equity to carry out the contract with Ramsey. He is a highly honorable, respectable gentleman, so far as I know, and I know him very well. If there is an obligation to carry out this contract with him, it should be carried out. If there is not, we ought to adopt the proposition of the Senator from California, and give it to the lowest bidder. If we can save over $200,000 a year, certainly we ought to do it. With all my kind feelings for these contractors, I cannot, as one of the guardians of the public Treasury, give over $400,000 for mail services which we can get for $250,000. It is very questionable whether we ought to make an appropriation for this or not. The amount of money which we pay to keep up the Government in California is very large. I will not say but that I shall be compelled, from a stern sense of duty, to vote against a further appropriation for mail service in California.

Mr. SEWARD. It seems to me that a single remark in connection with the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of which I have the honor to be a member, will win for it the favorable consideration of the Senate.

In the first place, we now have but a single mail to California, and but a single mail between the Atlantic and Pacific waters. This mail we send round by way of Panama, and it is the best we could do; for we have no railroad, and we have no Nicaragua route. Though it was known that the mails were carried on this route with expedition, under the circumstances, yet the commerce which now exists between these two points, and which is daily increasing, required a much more frequent dispatch of the mails; and for the purpose of securing that, we have provided for having their transmission across Tehuantepec. That probably will quicken the service on both routes. At this time the enterprise of a citizen of Pennsylvania has established a route through a part of Mexico which, of course, reduces the distance very considerably, and he at once assured the Postmaster General that if a contract were given to him he could reduce the time now allowed for carrying the mails seven days, which was about one quarter of the whole period employed. He made a contract with the Postmaster General in terms for $480,000, provided Congress should make an appropriation for carrying the mails on his route. This contractor made the experiment, and brought the mails from San Francisco to New York in seven days less time than the other. It has therefore been demonstrated, and what has been done before can be done now. It is very important to have the mails carried by that route. This gentleman came before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and asked for an appropriation to fulfill the contract. The session is now far advanced. The House has not yet acted upon the subject, and the committee, well satisfied that it had been demonstrated by experiment, concluded to give him a fair trial, one which would be made before Congress met next session; and they have, therefore, allowed him three months—from now until the first day of January. It will take him a month before he can put his plan into operation, and he will then have three months to fulfill his contract, at the end of which time Congress will be in session, and can review the whole subject and determine whether it will give him the contract, or whether the plan proposed by the Senator from California is the lowest and best.

Now, there can be no objection to the passage of this amendment. It is not giving him $420,000, but is paying him for one quarter, with the proviso that it shall not be taken as a preliminary contract beyond one quarter's pay. Some honorable Senator proposes a larger sum, thinking that it ought not to be too limited. I think it will be sufficient. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had that proposition before them, and considering the state of the mail service, and the present advanced stage of the session, have concluded that it would not be wise and expedient to recommend the adoption of that system at this time, and have, therefore, provided that this contract shall be ratified in so far as to demonstrate the necessity of the experiment. We shall then have the light derived from this experiment before us at the next session, and the whole matter will then come up with a determination on our part to revise the whole system, and to consider the various propositions, including that of the honorable Senator from California. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the committee will be adopted.

Mr. PRAATT. I merely wish to state my information on this subject without making any speech about it. The practical effect of the two propositions, as I understand them, is this: One is to pay $424,000 to a particular company, the other is to open the contracts to the lowest bidder, and limit the amount to $250,000. That is the substitute offered by the Senator from California to the amendment. I think the true policy would be for all to vote for the amendment to the amendment, and then those who may not think the amendment right can vote it down.

Mr. WELLER. We have already a semi-monthly mail to California, or rather to Oregon by way of San Francisco, for which we pay in the neighborhood of $800,000 annually, under the contract commonly called the Aspinwall contract. My proposition does not interfere with that, but simply proposes that the Postmaster General shall be authorized to receive propositions for the transportation of a semi-monthly mail. It would give us a weekly mail at a rate not exceeding $250,000, and it invites competition from all these various routes, from the one proposed by the Senator from Texas, as well as from the Tehuantepec, the Honduras, or any other route.

Mr. COOPER. I am in favor of the substitute proposed by the Senator from California. From the information which I possess, I have no doubt at all that the mail can be transported between

New York and San Francisco for the amount proposed in the substitute. I am satisfied that a semi-monthly mail can be transported for $250,000 per annum, and that the company which is now engaged in the trade of that country between San Francisco and New York, is ready, at any time, to make a contract with the Government to carry the mail upon those terms. I have no doubt of it whatever.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I only wish to make a suggestion on one point, in relation to this matter. I believe it will be found, after all that has been said in relation to the treaty concluded with Mexico, that the most valuable of all the acquisitions made by it has been the right of way across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec for the passengers and the mails of the United States. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from California, as it stands; but I do not think that it provides sufficiently for a preference in favor of such a route as may agree to carry the mails within the shortest time. I think not only economy in money, but in time, is equally to be desired, and ought to be provided for. I am satisfied that the mail could be carried between San Francisco and New Orleans regularly in thirteen days by the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. I am not at all indisposed to let the mail be carried by way of Vera Cruz and Acapulco, as long as that shall be the speediest route, and when they can be carried by that route in a reasonable time. But I desire, in making provision for future contracts, that the Postmaster General shall be instructed to look not merely at the sum which the transportation of the mail will cost, but also at the length of time it will take. I think time ought to be taken into consideration rather than money, in the making of such a contract, although, of course, both must be duly regarded. I shall, therefore, if the Senator from California will accept such an amendment, offer a proviso, that the Postmaster General be instructed, in entering into the contract, to make the element of time—speed—one of the main guides in forming the contract, as much so as the price which shall be paid for the transportation.

Mr. WELLER. I have no doubt that the Postmaster General, in making the contract, will consider that very important element, time, as well as the amount to be paid. I have no objection, however, to accept such a modification as the Senator from Louisiana suggests. I have proposed my amendment because I think, in determining upon the matter, the contract should look to that as well as to the amount to be paid. My only object, of course, is to get a mail weekly, and in the shortest time that it can be carried. I have no partiality for any route. I have not the slightest interest or personal feeling in it. I have no prejudice against any one of them. I simply desire that my constituents shall get a mail at the lowest rate at which it can be obtained, and in the very shortest possible time.

Mr. RUSK. I shall vote against the substitute of the Senator from California, and if it be adopted to the amendment of the committee, I shall vote against the whole, for the reason that I think it would be bad policy to make a permanent contract at the present moment, over which we should not have future control, or which would subject us to a claim for damages. I take issue, and shall do so at the proper time, with the statement of the honorable Senator from Louisiana, that the most important acquisition made by the late treaty with Mexico was the route across Tehuantepec. I do not by any means depreciate that transit way, but that is but a small article in the scale of advantages acquired by the treaty with Mexico. There were three matters included in it infinitely superior to this route across Tehuantepec. One was the release from the eleventh article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo; another was the right of way which it gives us over our own territory, to aid our own possessions on the Pacific ocean; and the other, and not an inconsiderable one, was that the treaty itself is worth infinitely more than the whole sum paid.

The amendment of the committee proposes to keep this matter entirely under the control of Congress. The honorable Senator from Pennsylvania is mistaken when he supposes that it sanctions a contract for the term of four years for $420,000. It makes an appropriation of $10,000, which would be the pay for one quarter's service, according to the amount allowed by the contract.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I intended to say, and to be understood as saying, that the effect of it would be to sanction the entire contract, because if I allow these gentlemen a quarter's salary, and they put their stock on the route from Vera Cruz to Acapulco, some three hundred miles, and have their steamboats in operation, I should not be willing to abandon or drive them off. It must result in loss to them, and it would be wrong to allow them one quarter's salary without continuing the contract. We ought to continue the contract if we allow a quarter's salary.

Mr. RUSK. The answer to that whole argument is found in the proviso to the amendment:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as to sanction said contract for a greater period than until the first day of January, 1855, and no part of said appropriation shall be used until said Ramsey and Carmick shall signify to the Postmaster General, in writing, their acquiescence in the terms of this proviso.

Mr. WELLER. I have this remark to make in answer to the Senator from Texas, who affirms that we are placing this contract beyond our control. By the express provision of my amendment this thing is guarded against:

That no contract under the provisions of this act shall be made for a period of less than four years, and that any contract so made may be determined on three months' previous notice from the Postmaster General without loss to the Government; and it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to determine any contract for the service, and make a new contract therefor, whenever greater expedition can be secured within the provisions expressed in this act.

Now, sir, upon three months' notice, by my amendment, the contract, if one be made, can be terminated at the very moment it is ascertained that a more expeditious route can be secured. Is there anything more fair or just than that? It is simply an authority to the Postmaster General to make a contract; and if that route subsequently be found a slow one, or if a new one be opened, over which the mail can be more expeditiously transported, he is compelled by the terms of the amendment to terminate the contract. It is not left discretionary with the company. We do not choose to put it in that condition; but it is made the imperative duty of the Postmaster General, when a more expeditious route is discovered, to terminate the old contract. It all resolves itself into this: If the Senate are willing to establish a weekly mail to California, this amendment ought to be adopted. Upon many of the routes in the old States of the Union you have three daily mails; upon some of them you have as high as four mails per day. We ask for the establishment of a weekly mail; and if you have concluded to give us one, let competition be invited from all the routes within the limits prescribed by the amendment.

I do not desire to enter into a discussion of the relative merits of the routes. I may have my own views upon the subject, but I am very sure I have no prejudices against either route. My only solicitude is to have the mail transmitted in the shortest time, and at the lowest possible expense, either by the way of the Vera Cruz, Tehuantepec, Honduras, or any other route. I am willing to leave it open to competition from all the parties interested in the different routes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WELLER. I should like to hear it read.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It is to add the following: Provided, however, That in all contracts for carrying the mail under the provisions of this act, the Postmaster General shall have due regard as well to the length of time as to the cost of carrying the mails; taking both subjects into consideration in making the contract.

Mr. WELLER. I accept that.

Mr. HUNTER. As I said before, I shall vote against increasing the appropriations under this bill. We have already appropriated for mail transportation to California $730,000, according to the report of the Postmaster General.

Mr. WELLER. I think the Senator is mistaken in that. That is an appropriation to carry the mail from New York to Oregon, stopping, of course, at San Francisco; but this route was originally intended to transport the mail from New York to Oregon Territory. I do not know why the Senator charges the State of California with the $731,000 which is appropriated upon that route.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I say, from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and I repeat it, we already pay for that service $731,000. I am unwilling to add to the already very large appropriations contained in this bill, for additional services anywhere. In relation to the two propositions which are now in competition with each other, I should be at a loss to decide. At first, I thought the proposition of the Senator from California had the superior merit of leaving it to the lowest bidder; but I do not know how that will turn out, because we are to pay according to time as well as distance; and when you come to apply that, I do not know how it will turn out.

Mr. BRODHEAD. No, sir; it says that the contract is not to exceed $250,000, if I understand it; so that the Postmaster General, in no event, can go over the $250,000; but I am of opinion that this whole subject should go over until the next session.

Mr. WELLER called for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. CASS. I understand this amendment authorizes the advertising for the contract. I shall vote aye.

The question was taken by yeas and nays; and resulted—yeas 32, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Slidell, Stuart, and Weller—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Clayton, Fish, Foot, Johnson, Pettit, Rusk, Seward, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—10.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the question recurred on the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The question now is, whether we shall increase the mail service at this session for California. For my part, I am against it.

Mr. WALKER. So am I. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Cass, Cooper, Dawson, Jones of Tennessee, Thompson of Kentucky, and Weller—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Morton, Pearce, Rockwell, Rusk, Seward, Stuart, Sumner, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—28.

So the amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. RUSK. I offer the following amendment:

To enable the Postmaster General to purchase the patent of the clam-shell padlock, should he be of opinion the public service requires it, $5,000.

I have a long statement here from the Postmaster General. At his request the amendment is offered. There is now great difficulty in procuring a lock which cannot be knocked open. He thinks that under the arrangement, with $5,000, he can procure the patent of that lock, and under the present laws nobody else will be entitled to use it. He says in his communication that it is the only lock that has never been knocked open.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I believe that is all right.

Mr. PRATT. There is one part of it which I cannot understand. Why give $5,000 to make an experiment on a lock?

Mr. RUSK. It is not an experiment.

Mr. PRATT. Very well; I do not care. Why have a lock at all? You must depend upon the honesty of the man who carries the mail, that he will not take the trouble to knock it open. He can cut the bag open, if he is dishonest.

Mr. RUSK. They can open the common locks; all these mail locks I have examined myself. The locks which they have had in use until recently, and which they have had to throw aside, can be knocked open by a stick. I have seen it done; they shut with a spring, and parties can open the lock, examine the contents of the mail, and then lock it again, so that they may do that without detection. These are the only ones, I am informed by the Post Office Department, that cannot be so deranged, and they have been in use for a number of years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I have one more amendment which I will read and explain. I hope there will be no objection to it.

And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Cranston Laurie a reasonable compensation for performing the duties of two desks in the Post Office Department, not to exceed the half-pay of a clerk for the time he was employed.

Mr. Laurie, I understand, is a clerk of very superior qualifications, and it was found necessary at the close of every year, in order to secure accuracy in the making out of certain returns, that he should perform the duties of two desks, on account of the limited number of clerks and the large amount of business in the Department. It is certified by the Assistant Postmaster General that Mr. L.'s statement is correct, in which he says he works there sometimes until twelve o'clock at night. The returns, I understand, are always found correct. It is by no means a precedent, for there will not likely be found a similar case.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I offer the following amendment to the bill:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be authorized and required to establish a mail on the Mississippi river from Cairo to New Orleans, and contract for the same for one line, or in such divisions and sections, or both, as will be most compatible with the public interest; and to facilitate the execution of this section, the Postmaster General may make immediate temporary arrangements for carrying said mail by separate boats, and if he fails to obtain separate boats, after advertising for thirty days, he may make private contracts for carrying said mail. Said mails shall not be carried more than seven, or less than three times a week, each way; but if the Postmaster General is of opinion that a daily mail is needed over one part of the route, and tri-weekly mails over another part, he may contract accordingly.

Mr. President, the southern, southwestern, and western Senators know that for years we have been struggling to get a mail on the river Mississippi. It is the most important service to the people of that section of the country that can be devised; and yet from one cause or another we have been delayed year after year, and I venture to say it is the only river which supports as much commerce as that does, or one fifth or one tenth part, which has not a mail. Why, sir, the commerce of the Mississippi is more in the aggregate than the whole exports of the Union put together. I saw it estimated last year at $250,000,000; and that is more, I say again, notwithstanding my friend from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] shakes his head, than the whole of your foreign exports. I have seen an estimate, coming from what I think competent authority, that within the last two years it has been $250,000,000. At all events it is very great. And yet, notwithstanding that state of affairs, we have been unable to get anything like mail service upon that stream. I think the time has come when there should be a change in this regard. The amendment proposes to authorize the Postmaster General to put service upon the river from Cairo to New Orleans. He has service from Louisville and St. Louis, and all the points above that as far as Cairo. This will be directing a further continuance of the line from Cairo to New Orleans. In addition to that, if he thinks proper, he may fill up the intermediate points by short routes. I propose that for this reason: I know very well that the Postmaster General cannot have the mail carried from New Orleans to Cairo six times a week, and land at all the intermediate points; because, if a boat undertook to stop at every one of the landings on the river, it would take some seven or eight days to go up; and if a boat were required thus to ascend the river from New Orleans to Cairo, it would carry no freight, no passengers, and not even the mail, because some boat going ahead of it would take the whole. I propose, therefore, that the Postmaster General be authorized to make a contract, if he thinks proper, to run through the whole line, stopping, of course, at the principal points, and then that, between the intermediate points, he may make short routes.

This is all arranged after mature deliberation and study; and if the Postmaster General attempts to execute it he can do it, and put service upon the river cheaper under this amendment than under any other scheme, in my opinion, that can possibly be devised. Without detaining the Senate, I will simply say, that having studied the subject, I think I understand what I am about.

Mr. HUNTER. I am not able to estimate what would be the precise effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. It does not propose a direct appropriation of money, but then I am uncertain as to how much money it may require to carry it into execution. Nor do I know how far it proposes an advantageous arrangement in relation to the mails. Do I understand it to come from a committee?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir. It does not propose any appropriation whatever—not a sixpence; but it simply proposes to authorize the Postmaster General to contract for carrying the mail on that river. Let me tell the Senator from Virginia this: We have a law authorizing a mail upon the river, and the Postmaster General undertakes to execute it in this way: He advertises for the service, and he gets extravagant bids, which he rejects. He advertises again and again, gets bids which he rejects, and so it goes on from year to year. In the mean time we get no mail; and we are getting tired of that. The reason why the Postmaster General does not get proper bids is this: He advertises from one point to another where no boats land; and if he is to have good boats built especially to carry the mail, it will be at so enormously an increased expense, that the thing will be impracticable. This amendment authorizes him to make such contracts on such routes as he thinks proper to make them on; and I will tell the Senator why I do that. There are packets running from New Orleans to Natchez, for instance. Let him contract with a packet to run the mail that length. Then there are packets from Vicksburg to Napoleon. Let him make contracts with those packets. There are others from Napoleon to Memphis. Let him contract with them. Then, again, there are those from Memphis to Cairo. Let him contract with them. Then he has a continuous line made up by these four lines, which can run in connection; but under the present law the Postmaster General advertises for the line from Louisville to New Orleans. He cannot have the mail carried in that way. I do not care if he paid out millions of dollars for it, it cannot be done. Why? First, because of the expenditure. A boat starts from New Orleans, and if it undertook to stop at every point to land the mail, it would require ten days to go up the river, and a boat of less speed going up with nothing but freight and passengers, would go up in seven days. Will a merchant of New Orleans put his mail in the first boat when it takes three days longer than another boat? Certainly not. Can a boat get passengers which will take three days longer than another? Can it get freight, or anything else? Four mail boats, under that system, would simply run up and down the river, carrying no mail, no freights, no passengers—nothing. It would be of no practical utility whatever. What I want is, that the Postmaster General may be authorized to contract for one continuous line, stopping at the principal commercial points, such as Baton Rouge, Vicksburg, Napoleon, Memphis, &c., where all the boats stop anyhow; and then by way of supplying the little offices on the river he can put in short packets, and contract, for instance, for running a packet from New Orleans to Vicksburg, another from Vicksburg to Napoleon, another from Napoleon to Memphis, and another from Memphis to Cairo, all which I know is practicable; and in that way you can get the service required. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that the Postmaster General informed me he did not want any appropriation.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to ask what the probable cost of a contract would be made in conformity with the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON. If my friend from Mississippi will allow me, I will ask the Senator from California what is the cost of the Shanghai line? What is the cost of the Pacific lines generally? What is the cost of the Atlantic lines? What is the cost of the whole of them? Sir, I venture to say that if you count them up, you will find that it is millions; but here is the Mississippi river in our midst, where a mail has never yet been carried with any kind of regularity or benefit to the community. I see here Senators all over the floor who are interested in this matter; their constituents are all interested in it, and a very large portion of the Union is interested in it. I believe one half of the whole Union is interested, and yet there never has been a systematic or regular line upon all that river, a river which carries the commerce mentioned by my friend from Mississippi. He says it is $250,000,000 annually. I never before heard it estimated at less than $300,000,000, and the country is still going on increasing in prosperity and business, yet there is no mail line there. When the demand is constant, when it is incessant, when the business relations of the country are so direct, so immediate, and so immense, still there is no line there, and there never has been an effort made to get a line. Here are the Senators from Indiana, from Ohio, from Illinois, and from Virginia all interested in it. Distant as Virginia is, she is at one end of the line, and all these States, and all that lie below—the Northwest, the South—all the South except the States on the Atlantic slope—are deeply interested, and yet an adequate effort has never been made to put mail service on that route. It is astonishing to me that this has never been done before.

Mr. CHASE. Will the Senator allow me to say one word? There is already a law upon the statute-book providing for this service. The only reason why it is not executed, is, that the Postmaster General has not yet made the contract which the law requires.

Mr. JOHNSON. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. Brown] has explained the difficulty in regard to that. He has made an investigation of the subject. That law has been standing very long on the statute-book; but it has been inoperative and ineffective. It has stood there as a useless enactment. It has never produced the effect which it was designed to produce. I believe that the amendment which is now before us will be effective, and that it will obtain for all that immense number of people the object desired. If there is any one project in regard to mail facilities which has been brought before this country that ought, from its size, its character and description, to be more absorbing and overpowering than any other, in connection with mail matters, it certainly seems to me it should be this. I can only say that I am confounded and surprised that this thing has never been effected before. I do hope that the effort which my friend from Mississippi makes to have a route established there, and put in operation in spite of all the little difficulties which seem to have surrounded it heretofore, and to have virtually destroyed it during the past two or three years altogether, will succeed. I believe if it is done as he proposes, it will be effective; and I repeat, I am astonished, that some such plan has not been adopted heretofore. Here are the Senators from Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois; from Missouri, Iowa, and Wisconsin; from Arkansas and Louisiana; from Mississippi, Kentucky, and Tennessee; here are those from Virginia and Pennsylvania, all interested in this proposition; and I do hope that they will look at the matter seriously, as it stands; and I cannot but believe that while we are having lines across the Pacific and the Atlantic, our internal communication will be deemed worthy of some consideration, and to have some merit in it. It seems to me to be exceedingly strange that we cannot get any system established, and that we have been utterly unable to do it heretofore.

Mr. WELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator allow me to answer his question before he proceeds?

Mr. WELLER. I want to speak of the manner in which that question has been answered. I expect to vote for this amendment; and I did express my surprise that no direct plan had been adopted for the transportation of the mail upon the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. I am a friend, therefore, to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi. Desiring, however, to know what would be the probable cost for transporting the mail, I asked the Senator, in good faith, to inform me if he had the necessary data in his possession, what would be the probable cost of carrying out this plan? The Senator from Arkansas, to whom I put no interrogatory upon the subject, comes in, and instead of answering the question, proceeds to make a fling at a bill which passed, providing mail facilities from California to Shanghai.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator will pardon me for interrupting him. So far from intending it as a fling, I voted, and no man knows it better than the honorable Senator, for that bill. It was not a fling, for I would not make a fling at it.

Mr. WELLER. I know the honorable Senator from Arkansas did that, but he let down upon me to-day when I was making an effort to get a weekly mail for my constituents. He saw proper then to record his vote against me. He thinks he ought to have a daily mail on the Mississippi river for the convenience of his constituents, and I agree that they ought to have it; but when I ask to get a weekly mail to San Francisco, the Senator thought I was not entitled to it. I shall, however, return good for evil. I intend to vote for the amendment, and if defects exist in the former law, or if there has been a mistake or refusal of the Postmaster General to execute a former law of Congress, I hope the amendment now proposed will be so specific that there will be no evading it. I expect to vote for the amendment; but I cannot answer the Senator's question as to how much was appropriated by the Shanghai and San Francisco bill, which was passed. He ought to know that, as he voted for it, I believe. I do not know how that may be, but my only object in asking the question was to justify the Senate in voting for the amendment, as I intend to vote for it. My desire was to strengthen, not to defeat the amendment.

Mr. CASS. There is something in this I do not understand. Certainly the Postmaster General would not refuse to execute an act of Congress without some reason for it. There must have been some considerations operating upon him to lead him to do that.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think I can answer the Senator's question. It will be remembered that a few years ago, after a series of years of ineffectual application for mail service on the Mississippi river, the Senate, in spite of the opposition of the then Postmaster General, directed him to make a contract for daily service from Louisville to New Orleans, and from St. Louis to New Orleans, and a tri-weekly service from Nashville to New Orleans. The then Postmaster General, Judge Hall, had been entreated for years to put on that service. For some cause, I know not what, he refused, at all times, to do it. The Senate took the question under consideration, and set aside the judgment of the Postmaster General, and ordered positively and unequivocally that that service should be established. Before the time came for Mr. Hall to make the contract, he was transferred from the Post Office Department to the judiciary, and another gentleman took his place. A short time before he went out of office, he made a contract, under that law, for carrying the mail from St. Louis and Louisville to New Orleans. That contract was made with Glover & Co., of New Orleans. The day arrived when they were to commence their service. A new Postmaster General came in—the present incumbent—and examined the contract, and found in it a provision that the boats carrying the mail should not carry any freight. He issued an order to his agents at Louisville not to deliver the mails to Glover & Co., if there was any freight on board. They went down with the mail, at the appointed time, and found freight upon the boat. They refused to deliver the mail. The contract was suspended. The present Postmaster General suspended it, and has made no other permanent contract, but has made some conditional ones. For instance, he made a contract to carry the mail from Louisville to St. Louis. He made a special contract with a company to carry the mail, and that contract is going on now; but he failed to make a contract for carrying it from the mouth of the Ohio to New Orleans; and the only mail service that we have on the river between the mouth of the Ohio and New Orleans is just such service as the Postmaster General, in his wisdom and beneficence, or in the conceptions of his own right, chooses to make with the transient boats that go along.

The amendment offered by my friend from Mississippi is simply this: The Postmaster General asserts that he cannot make contracts under that law, because they would amount to too large a sum; and, sir, under his constructions of the law, it would be too large a sum, because he would require the boats to carry the mail, without taking a single pound of freight, an absurdity that never could have entered into the mind of any but a man who never saw the Mississippi river. There is the difficulty. He would not permit boats that carried the mail to carry any freight whatever, although they bound themselves under penalties and bonds to deliver the mail according to the contract. He excused himself under that provision, and nullified the contract with Glover & Co. He has refused, up to this time, to make any contract. Under the most urgent entreaties of all the friends of this measure, embracing, I believe, near one half of the States of the Union, he recently issued another proposal to carry out this law of Congress, passed two years ago. He has had bids received under the proposal; and the difficulty intended to be obviated by the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is this: He wanted a continuous daily line from St. Louis and Louisville to New Orleans; he cannot get that for a reasonable sum; he has bids for it, but I understand they are so high that he has determined not to execute them. This proposition is to reaffirm and reindorse the law of two years ago, and enable him to let out detached portions of the route. From Memphis to New Orleans the mails can be carried for a small sum, because we have regular packets; but if you require these gentlemen to run packets three times a week to go to St. Louis or Louisville, you involve them in an expenditure of money to which they are wholly incompetent. If the friends of this measure desire to see mail communication on that river, they can only get it by reaffirming the law passed two years ago, and so amending it as to enable the Postmaster General to let it out in detached contracts, instead of letting it out in an aggregate contract from Louisville and St. Louis to New Orleans. That is the effect of the amendment, and I am sure it is just. It involves no expenditure of money which was not authorized by the law which was passed two years ago.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, obtained the floor.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the Senator from Iowa will allow me to answer the inquiry of the Senator from California as to the probable cost of the mail facilities provided for by the amendment. I might make an approximation to the cost, yet I might be very wide of the mark; but of this I am perfectly satisfied, that the mail can be carried for a great deal less money under that amendment than under the law as it now stands; and the question is simply between having no mail, as we have none now, and having it under that amendment at less cost than it would be under any other plan.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I wish to move an amendment to the amendment. It is to insert after the word "Cairo" the words "and also from thence to St. Pauls, Minnesota."

Mr. BROWN. I would suggest to my friend that a large portion of that route is already supplied with the mail. It is so below St. Louis. How much above that it is I do not know.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. There is no difficulty in regard to that. As I understand the amendment of the Senator, on any portion where there is a mail, that is not to be contracted for or interfered with. There are several gaps, of several hundred miles extent between Cairo and St. Pauls, the capital of Minnesota Territory, for which regular mails are not provided. I am friendly to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, and I wish it success. I intend to vote for it; but I desire, when it reaches Cairo, that it shall also extend to St. Pauls.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the Senator from Iowa that his amendment would be better if he would say from St. Louis to St. Pauls, because there is already a daily line from Cairo to St. Louis. I suggest to my friend that if he will change his amendment in that way, I will go for it. There is a daily line now from Cairo to St. Louis. I should have no objection to making provision by his amendment from St. Louis to St. Pauls.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Then I will say from St. Louis. But, I understand, from the phraseology of the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, that the Postmaster General will not be bound to relet any portion of the route on which there is a mail.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly not.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. It is therefore proper that I should move to insert this amendment now. From Galena to St. Pauls there will be no more service, but there is a gap from St. Louis to Galena, Illinois, for which I wish to provide; and we can do so by saying from Cairo to St. Pauls, Minnesota.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I supposed that the Senator would not have objection to it, or I should not have offered it. I would withdraw it if I thought he was opposed to it. I shall vote for his amendment.

Mr. ATCHISON. I have my doubts about the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, and also the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. I am willing to furnish mail facilities, both by land and water, wherever they are necessary; but it strikes me that, for one third of the year, at least during the winter, it would be found impossible for boats to run up the Mississippi river. Then, sir, how will they receive their mails up to St. Paul?

Mr. BROWN. How have they had them before?

Mr. ATCHISON. They have had them by boats; and they have had them by railroads, and by stages, when the water is low. Now, sir, I am for taking what is right, and I am for taking nothing more than is reasonable; because, if we ask for what is preposterous, we are apt to lose what is reasonable. Therefore, I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator says that there are certain seasons in the year at which boats cannot run on the river. Then he expresses some doubt about the propriety of my amendment. I believe that is not covered by the objection. If there is a daily mail from Cairo to St. Louis, I apprehend, whenever you run a boat there, you can run one from Cairo to New Orleans. Let me say, in this connection, that unless this mail is established, the rest of the offices on the river Mississippi will have no mail facilities at all; for I have more than once undertaken to explain here, but Senators will not listen, or will not understand, that the whole of the lower Mississippi, except at important points, is inaccessible from the interior, and especially during high water. The high lands along back of the river, as the Senator knows very well, are cut off from a communication except by boats; therefore, they do not undertake to get the mails from the banks of the Mississippi, through the swamps, to the interior. It has never been attempted, or whenever it has, it has been simply ridiculous.

You must give these mails by the river, or not give them at all. There are, in my own State, certainly not less than twenty-five post offices, supplied entirely and wholly by the river, and they cannot be supplied in any other way. We have a mail line there, but nothing but a line. What we want is service on it, as the Senator from Tennessee has said; and I repeat it. The only mail sent on the river is just such as was contracted for in New Orleans by some transit boats going up the river. If they do not happen to find any, the mail is not sent; and if it is sent, it is only landed at such points as the boat thinks proper to stop at, and it never thinks proper to stop at landings, unless it happens to have freight or passengers for them. That is all wrong. I trust the amendment will be adopted. I know it is absolutely necessary. I want to talk no more about it.

Mr. BELL. I desire to know if I understand this amendment properly. I should like to hear some gentleman give an explanation of its operation. We have now a law authorizing the Postmaster General to give us a daily mail on the Mississippi from New Orleans to Louisville, and from New Orleans to St. Louis, in distinct lines. We appropriate to carry the mail from St. Louis to New Orleans daily. Under the authority given, the Postmaster General advertises for proposals, and requires the same line to carry the mail daily from Louisville to New Orleans, and not only from Cairo, but from Louisville, at great cost. At some seasons of the year it is impracticable to carry a daily mail to all the points on the route, on account of the ice and other obstructions. What I fear now is, that this proposition will nullify that law altogether, and that we shall have no prospect of continuing the daily line hereafter between these points and New Orleans. I want my friend to consider that point. We have, as has been stated already, a daily line from Louisville to Cairo, and a daily mail from Cairo to St. Louis, except when the ice obstructs the upper Mississippi. They have the enjoyment of that daily mail now.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. If the Senator from Tennessee will allow me to interrupt him, I will withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BELL. That amendment is withdrawn. Now, what is the objection to having a daily line from Cairo to New Orleans? If any amendment ought to be adopted, it ought to be to supply that defect in the former law, and not require the Postmaster General to contract with the same company to carry to St. Louis and Louisville. My idea is, that there is a daily mail between these points already, except under the accidental obstructions of the ice, for example, in the upper Mississippi, and sometimes in the Ohio river. We have these daily lines.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator from Tennessee will allow me, this amendment says nothing about a mail from Louisville or St. Louis to Cairo, because there is already service there. It authorizes and requires the Postmaster General to put service on the balance of the river in one continuous line through, or with sections leaving out the continuous line. Then it authorizes him to make contracts for daily service, or for tri-weekly service, taking a part of it daily and a part of it tri-weekly. I will tell you why I did that. Take the section from Memphis, for instance, to Vicksburg; the service three times a week would absolutely be an embarrassment. You could not get the postmasters to open the mails. That is the only obstacle. They are very important offices to the persons who live there, but they do not want a daily mail, especially a daily mail up and down. The Postmaster General can under this, and, if he does his duty, he will put a daily service upon the whole line. This will not interfere with the old law between Cairo and New Orleans. It does not require the line to be daily to all the intermediate points on the river, but gives them as much as they want, and gives the larger points a daily mail.

Mr. BELL. The result of the adoption of this proposition will be that Louisville, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, and St. Louis will all be cut off, and will have no prospect of a daily communication with New Orleans. They have it now, clearly; but then this proposition does not require the establishment of a daily line between New Orleans and Cairo. Now, everybody knows that the daily communication between the whole southwestern country is to be supplied from Cairo to New Orleans. Is there any impediment in the establishment of such a line as this? We do not want the mails delivered at all these post offices, and it is not required; it cannot be done. What is the impediment? I want the Senate to consider, I want the honorable Senator from Missouri to consider, I want the honorable Senators from Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and the whole of the northwestern and northern States to consider what the real impediment is to having a daily communication between Cairo and New Orleans. When you get it established to Cairo, you will have it to the whole of the country northwest. The impediment is that it costs a little more than the Postmaster General thinks he can afford. He thinks that the revenue derived from the postal service for carrying the mails west does not supply a sufficient proportion to justify the expense that would be necessary. Now, sir, if the proposition of my friend from Mississippi succeeds, you nullify the act which we already have for our benefit. If the Postmaster General takes any exception to the former law, the proper way would be to modify it, to require him to advertise for contracts for the daily mail between New Orleans and Cairo, and then with the principal cities on the river, and you will have the benefit of the daily mail.

As to the extent for which this should be provided, the inconveniences under which the very small post offices on the line of the Mississippi labor, are not such as to require them to have a daily mail, instead of a tri-weekly one. These inconveniences ought not to counterbalance the benefits derived by the northern States and the eastern States, by the daily mail between New Orleans and all the remaining portion of the western country. Now, sir, Louisville has a deep interest—I say nothing of Nashville; nothing of Memphis—in having a daily communication with the southern commercial depot—New Orleans. If the amendment be adopted, it will nullify the existing law requiring the Postmaster General to establish a daily mail between Cairo and New Orleans. My friend will not say that that is an impracticable project. There is no difficulty in having a daily line. They can run experimental trips to Louisville in five days, and they can go to Cairo in about four days; and under a contract made to secure a daily mail to Cairo, unless some difficulty intervenes, such a provision should be made. If the effect of this is to discharge the Post Office Department of its obligation to supply a daily mail to the whole West, particularly the southern commercial metropolis, New Orleans, and the Northwest, we ought to consider very seriously whether the difference between what the Postmaster thinks he ought to give, and what he is compelled to give, should lead us thus to act?

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Tennessee will allow me to make a suggestion? I do not deny the rights of the people of the States on the Mississippi to have these mail facilities; but I only wish to suggest whether we had not better take time, in order to digest a plan to secure the object.

Mr. BELL. We have a law now.

Mr. HUNTER. Then why offer this amendment?

Mr. BELL. I do not press it.

Mr. BROWN. Because the Postmaster General will not execute that law. He has not done it for two years.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am quite sure that if the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Brown] had been thoroughly acquainted with the law and all the facts connected with the proposition which he has introduced, he would not have presented it. There is no necessity for legislation, in order to secure the mail service asked for by his amendment. There is now a law, full and ample, and it is not the fault of any Senator or member of the House that it has not been executed. It is the fault of the Postmaster General. There is a contract existing at this time, made in April or May, 1853, whereby all the mail service intended to be provided by the honorable Senator's amendment, was to have been commenced in December last. The parties who made it were ready, willing, and offered to execute it; but the Postmaster General gave such a construction to some of its provisions as to prevent any attempt at its performance, and thus defeated the object of the law. If this question is to be argued at length, I shall ask the Secretary of the Senate to read a report which was communicated to the Senate on the 9th of February last, in answer to a resolution offered, I believe, by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Thompson.] This "report is in answer to a resolution of the Senate respecting the measures taken to establish a daily mail between certain places on the Ohio and Mississippi, as required by the eleventh section of the 'act to establish certain post roads and for other purposes,' approved August 31, 1852." I shall ask the Secretary to read so much of that report as may be necessary to explain the matter; but before he does that, I wish to read the law now in force on this subject. I think I can satisfy the honorable Senator that legislation is not necessary in this case. The eleventh section of the act of August 31, 1852, reads as follows:

"Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to issue proposals and contract for the transportation of a daily mail between Louisville and Cairo, St. Louis and Cairo, Cairo and Memphis, and Memphis and New Orleans, and to supply such intermediate points as he may order, from time to time, on suitable and safe steamboats."

Now, I will ask the Secretary to read the first two pages of the report of the Postmaster General: The Secretary read them, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, February 9, 1854.
SIR: In obedience to the resolution of the Senate of the 24th January, 1854, I have the honor to submit the following report:

The eleventh section of the act of Congress, approved August 31, 1852, made it "the duty of the Postmaster General to issue proposals, and contract for the transportation of a daily mail between Louisville and Cairo, St. Louis and Cairo, Cairo and Memphis, and Memphis and New Orleans, and to supply such intermediate points as he may order from time to time, on suitable and safe steamboats."

Under this act of Congress my predecessor advertised on the 31st December, 1852, that proposals would be received until three, p. m., of 10th February, 1853, (to be decided on or before the 1st March following,) for conveying the mails for four years from 1st July, 1853, by an express line, stopping at the principal offices only between Louisville and New Orleans, and way lines connecting such principal offices and supplying all intermediate offices, and also by a connecting line from St. Louis and Cairo.

A copy of the advertisement is herewith transmitted, marked A. It was published in the National Intelligencer, Republic, and Union, of Washington city; Express, New York; Gazette, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Gazette, Cincinnati; Ohio; Journal, Louisville, Kentucky; Intelligencer, St. Louis, Missouri; Eagle and Enquirer, Memphis, Tennessee; Gazette and Democrat, Little Rock, Arkansas; and Commercial Bulletin, New Orleans.

The abstract, marked B, shows the several bids that were received under said advertisements.

On the 1st March, 1853, the Postmaster General accepted the bid of Messrs. Glover & Mather, which is in the following words, viz:

"We, William R. Glover, of Louisville, Kentucky, and Thomas W. Mather, of the city of New York, propose to carry the mails on routes No. 5,102 express, and way lines from Louisville, Kentucky, to New Orleans, Louisiana, agreeably to the advertisement of the Postmaster General, dated the 31st day of December, 1852, and by the following mode of conveyance, viz: in steamboats, as required by the advertisement, for the annual sum of $450,000.

"WILLIAM R. GLOVER,
"THOMAS W. MATHER."

"WASHINGTON CITY, January 21, 1853."

On the 2d March, 1853, the following letter was addressed to those bidders, viz:

"GENTLEMEN: The Postmaster General has accepted your proposal for carrying the mail on routes No. 5,102, Louisville to New Orleans, express line.

5,102a, Louisville to Evansville, way line.

5,102b, Evansville to Cairo, do.

5,102c, Cairo to Memphis, do.

5,102d, Memphis to Napoleon, do.

5,102e, Napoleon to Vicksburg, do.

5,102f, Vicksburg to St. Francisville, do.

5,102g, St. Francisville to New Orleans, do.,

agreeably to the advertisement of the Postmaster General, dated December 31, 1852; service to be daily in new low, pressure steamboats, and to commence on or before the 1st day of October next, all for the compensation of $450,000 a year.

WILLIAM H. DUNDAS,

"Second Assistant Postmaster General."

Immediately after taking charge of the Department, representations were made to me that the public service did not require two lines between Louisville and New Orleans, and the following letter was received, which was, of course, entitled to great consideration:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11, 1853.

The undersigned respectfully recommend that no contract be entered into with the accepted bidders on the routes between Louisville, Cairo, St. Louis, and New Orleans. They are satisfied that one daily mail over these routes will be as much as the wants or wishes of the public will require; and that the expenditure of so large an amount as is requisite for two daily mails is unnecessary.

They would respectfully suggest that the accepted bidders be notified of the fact that the Department has suspended the acceptance until the matter can be investigated by yourself. Very respectfully,

J. D. BRIGHT,
S. P. CHASE,
D. R. ATCHISON,
S. ADAMS,
THOMAS J. RUSK,
JOHN PETTIT,
GEORGE W. JONES.

HON. JAMES CAMPBELL, Postmaster General.

On receiving this communication I suspended the acceptance of the bid for such service, until I could make full inquiry on the subject.

On the 12th March, 1853, I caused Messrs. Glover & Mather to be addressed as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, }
CONTRACT OFFICE, March 12, 1853. }

I am instructed by the Postmaster General to say, that he has not had time, since he came into the Department, to examine the matter of the acceptance of the proposal of yourself and T. W. Mather for conveying the mails on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, between Louisville and New Orleans, but that it is his intention to reconsider the acceptance as soon as he can find time to give it his attention.

WILLIAM H. DUNDAS,

"Second Assistant Postmaster General."

WILLIAM R. GLOVER, Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. BRIGHT. The late Postmaster General, Mr. Hubbard, had accepted proposals for carrying the mails in a double line of steamers, from Louisville to New Orleans. That is, there was to be an express line starting daily from Louisville, and running through without delivering mails except at the principal points, and another line was to start from the same place, and stop at all the intermediate points. The accepted bidders for this double service agreed to perform it for $450,000.

The object of the letter just read was to postpone definite action until the present Postmaster General could satisfy himself that the amount of service proposed to be performed, and the mode of performing it, was not adapted to the interests and wants of the public. The gentlemen who joined in that letter had all taken an active part in passing the law that I have just read. They felt then very much as the Senators from Arkansas and Mississippi seem to feel now; and hence their anxiety to see the work entered upon under such auspices as would insure its continuance. They believed an attempt to establish a double line, or, as it was called, an "express" and a "way line," would defeat both; that one line would accommodate the entire community, and that only one line could be sustained. They further believed that the introduction of low pressure boats, on the plan proposed by the late Postmaster General, would prove a failure, as it had on our western rivers.

It appears that the present Postmaster General, after examining the whole subject, decided, as he had a right to do under the enlarged discretionary powers given him by law, to annul the contract, which he did, and made an entire new contract, which is now in force, cutting off one of the lines altogether, and a large portion of the way-service called for in the printed proposals, reducing the amount to be paid from $450,000 down to about $300,000. This service, I understand, was to have been commenced by the contractors, Glover & Mather, some time last winter; and, if my information is correct, (and I have no reason to doubt it,) these contractors were ready, willing, and fully prepared, on the day named in their contract, to perform it; but on calling for the mail at the post office both in Louisville and New Orleans, they were told they could not have it, because the boats on which they intended carrying it had taken freight on board. The effect of this unjust, illegal, and arbitrary order has been to bring about the very state of things of which the honorable Senators from Mississippi and Arkansas complain. It has left the people of the great valley of the Mississippi, from the falls of the Ohio to New Orleans, without any regular mail facilities, and forced them to fall back upon the old plan of hiring such transient boats from day to day, or from week to week, as would undertake the service, which, in reality, is little better than no service at all; for I am informed that, under this system of shipping the United States mail, it is not uncommon for a boat starting from New Orleans to Louisville three, four, five, and sometimes six days behind another having the mail on board, for the boat last starting to deliver her mails in advance of the other. All experience proves that we cannot rely upon this transient service for anything like system or regularity in our mail communication upon western waters. We must have a regular line, and this the public are now entitled to, under the existing laws; and, as I said before, it is no fault of Congress that this service is not now performed. It is the fault of those having charge of your postal arrangements. It is they who have broken down the contract regularly made, for a cause that is nothing more than a mere pretext, and so regarded by every man who knows anything about the expense of navigating western waters by steam. Why, sir, the idea of a steamboat running in any trade on the Ohio or Mississippi river, and paying even her expenses, without carrying freight, is preposterous; and any man at all conversant with the facts involved in such a proposition, and would deny it, is either insincere or demented. Freight is the important item in the business of all western steamboats, I care not in what trade they may be engaged; and deny to any line of boats this privilege, and they would not pay their daily running expenses, after adding on and paying them the highest rate of compensation for mail service ever paid on the Ohio or Mississippi rivers; and, sir, in this position I will be sustained—fully sustained—by every man who knows anything about the subject of which I speak. The Senator from Ohio knows what I say is true, (the Senator from Ohio nods assent;) so do the Senators from Tennessee, and doubtless others; but I have no wish to prolong this debate now. We have not time. All these facts will doubtless be before us in another form. I shall content myself at present with repeating, that I do not think the amendment at all necessary; the law now in force is full, ample; and it is only a willful disregard of that law by those whose duty it is to see it executed, that deprives the public of the mails they so much need.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, I cannot very well appreciate the censure which seems to be attempted to be cast upon the Postmaster General in this case. It appears that his predecessor advertised for service on this route. There were bidders for the service. A bid was accepted, and a contract entered into for $450,000. After this contract was entered into, it was discovered by certain gentlemen now in the Senate, that the extent of the service was greater than they deemed necessary. They therefore addressed the Postmaster General a letter on the subject, representing to him that the service provided for by that contract was greater than was necessary, and would cost more than it was proper to allow. They desired him to take the matter into consideration, as he Senator from Indiana says, because he and others who signed the letter thought the character of the contract was such, and the amount to be paid was so great, that the whole scheme would be broken down. The Postmaster General took their letter into consideration; he received their suggestions; he perceived their propriety, and he acted in accordance with them, and disbanded the contract. In reviewing the subject, he deemed a modification of the contract to be necessary. He altered the proposals. The persons who were the first contractors came forward, accepted the modified proposals, and entered into a contract for one daily line at $297,000 a year. It seems that they were ready to perform that service at the specified time; but as there was, in the original proposals, a provision that the boats to carry the mails should not be freight boats, when they applied for the mail, having nothing but freight boats, the mail was refused them. Now, Mr. President, I have traveled somewhat upon the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, and I do say unqualifiedly that the general class of freight boats there are not proper for carrying the mails. Who that has been at Louisville, or Cincinnati, or St. Louis, or Memphis, and other points, has not seen the annoyances to which persons are put? A man sees the shingle of one of these boats up to leave at a certain hour in the day. After seeing this, he will go on board, pay his passage, take his baggage, and yet he may not get off for three or four days; and when he does get off, how is he treated? Why, they start down the river, and the first point they come to the boat stops to take on board twenty, or thirty, or forty hogsheads of tobacco, and so it goes on.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not wish gentlemen to argue on a supposed state of facts. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The mail boats start from Louisville at a certain hour. They are bound to do it; and unless they do, they are finable under the law.

Mr. WALKER. I know what the law requires, and I know they advertise to start at a certain time, but I have been stating the case as it actually exists. Every one who has traveled on these mail boats knows that he is detained at every one of the stopping points until the boat makes up a cargo. We have had some example of mail-boats on the Ohio river, and I say that those packets formerly used, when I was in the habit of traveling on them, the old White, the Ben Franklin, number 1, 2, 3, and I believe they went up to 10, did not do a freight business.

Mr. BRIGHT. They always did.

Mr. WALKER. They did an express business, but they did not do a freight business, such as was contemplated to be excluded under this contract. I do not deem it proper that the Postmaster General should be censured in this manner without his views upon it being heard. For my part, so far as I have witnessed his action, I believe he would not violate an act of Congress; I believe he would not run counter to Congress, and would not set himself up in opposition to the legislative department of the Government. I do not think he has done so, and I venture to say when his explanation is heard on the subject, he will give good and sound reasons for the course he has pursued.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. My friend from Wisconsin may have traveled on the Mississippi, but I do not think he knows much about it; and his traveling there must have been in olden times. Now, sir, the only difficulty in the way is the one suggested by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT.] The Postmaster General, under the law passed by Congress, issued proposals for carrying an express mail and a way mail on this route. Certain Senators, believing that to be impracticable, addressed him a letter, and asked him to change it. Glover & Co. were the contractors under the first proposition. In obedience to the suggestions of those Senators, and yielding to their experience as to that river—for all of them either lived there, or had traveled much upon it—the Postmaster General changed the order, and the same company—Glover & Co.—took the contract for carrying one daily mail on this line.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that after this contract was made, the Postmaster General did right in excluding them from carrying the mails, because they carried freights. Now, let me tell that Senator, that there never was a mail carried on the Mississippi, or on any of its tributaries, in any other character or class of boats. The very line to which the Senator alluded, from Cincinnati to Louisville, carries freight with every mail, and makes money enough from the freight to defray expenses. I know it; because I have traveled on that line time after time. A mere freight boat, with reference to time and speed, is one thing, and the carrying of way freight is a different thing. But to what does all that amount to, and what right had the Postmaster General to consider it? It was not in his contract. There was his written and signed contract with Glover & Co. They gave abundant security, according to his own requirements, to carry the mail in accordance with the contract, and his remedy was under the contract. For him to set aside his own contract, or rather a change of contract made in obedience to the suggestion of Senators interested in the matter, when there was no provision in that contract excluding the carrying of freights, was a usurpation of power which ought not to be tolerated by the Senate.

Mr. PRATT. Will my friend allow me to ask him one question, for I wish to understand this matter before I vote.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. PRATT. I understand that the Postmaster General issued an advertisement, by which he asked for proposals to carry the mail in boats which were not to carry freight. Then a contract was entered into which was silent in reference to that point. Now, I ask my friend as a lawyer, or I will ask any lawyer on this floor, whether, when the contract was entered into under an advertisement which required that the party contracting should not carry freight, the advertisement would not be considered as part of the contract, although the contract itself might be silent on the subject?

Mr. BRIGHT. The honorable Senator is mistaken as to the fact.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for information.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. In the first place, the facts are not as the Senator from Maryland supposes; and, in the next place, I should differ from my friend on the question of law, though doubtless he is a better lawyer than I am. I do not choose, however, to mix this question with technicalities. I want the people of the valley of the Mississippi to know how it is, and why it is, that they have been denied the enjoyment of advantages and benefits which have been secured to all other portions of the country. Besides, the law guarantees them this mail service. A proposition was made to carry the mail daily under the law. That proposition was accepted by a responsible company, under bonds, guarantees, and security. The contract was set aside by the Postmaster General succeeding the one who made the contract, under the advisement of Senators here, and a new contract was made. The parties went forward and consummated that contract, and prepared their boats to carry it out. A boat at the proper time was at the wharf at Louisville, with steam up; but when the agent applied for the mails, the postmaster refused to give them. Why? Because he said they were required to be carried upon vessels which had no freight. No such provision was in the contract, and it cannot be shown in the contract. It never was there, and it could not have been there, because no sensible man who ever traveled on that river could believe, for a single moment, that men would agree to carry a daily mail from Louisville to New Orleans for $290,000 a year, and exclude everything else but the mail. They were bound to carry it according to time. They stipulated for time. They gave bonds and security to carry it within that time. And the Postmaster General refused to deliver them the mail to carry. That, however, is not exactly the point which I wish to get at.

Mr. HUNTER. I know my friend will pardon me for interrupting him; but I wish to suggest to him that we have but little time left. We ought to be disposing of this bill. I wish to make that suggestion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am as sensitive, I hope, as any one here in regard to the rights and interests of this Government, and I would defer to the Senator from Virginia as soon as any Senator on this floor, but I have been told the same thing over and over again since I have been here. All this important business is reserved to the close of the session, and when untold millions of dollars, and the rights and interests of my constituents are at stake, I am told that the time is too short. If the time is too short, let gentlemen offer a resolution to extend the time, and I will vote for it; but sooner than see the rights of my constituents disregarded, I would speak away the last hour of the session, and feel that I had violated no right of the constituents of the Senator from Virginia, or of the country. We have been postponed from year to year, and other measures have been carried forward; and now we are told that because the time is short, justice cannot be done to nearly one half the States of this Union.

But, sir, let me come to the point at which I wish to arrive. I will ask the honorable Senator from Indiana if, after the Postmaster General refused to give the mails to Glover & Co. because they carried freight on their boats, he did not give part of that same contract to another company who did carry freight on their boats from Louisville to St. Louis? And did he not give them $70,000 a year, without any warrant of law, upon a special and private contract, and allow them to carry freight on their boats? I ask the honorable Senator if he knows anything of that?

Mr. BRIGHT. I will say, in reply, that I understand the company carrying the mail from Louisville to St. Louis, before this contract was entered into, received about $70,000 per annum for that service, and always carried both freight and passengers, as every boat does on our western rivers. I never heard of an instance where a boat's business was confined exclusively to passengers. After the mail was refused to Glover & Mather, on the St. Louis branch of the line, the old contractors, Rodgers, Shirlock & Co., were permitted to go on and perform the same service at the old rates, receiving the same compensation as before; carrying freights, of course! for no boat in that, or any other trade in the West, could pay expenses and be debarred this privilege.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is just what I supposed. Then here is your Postmaster General, so fastidious about his advertisements for carrying the mail, that, though he leaves it out of his contract, he refuses to allow the mail to be carried under a contract, on the ground that the boats carry freight. Afterwards he turns round and gives the best part of that contract to another contractor, whose boats are carrying freight every day, and that contractor is in this city to-day drawing his money for that identical part of the contract—$70,000 for carrying the mail from Louisville to St. Louis. And yet, from the mouth of the Ohio to New Orleans, we are to have no mail service, not even twice a week, or tri-weekly, much less daily, because the Postmaster General says his proposition was that no freight should be carried upon the boats. If you can carry freight on the mail boats from Louisville to St. Louis, why not to Memphis, to Vicksburg, to Natchez, to Napoleon, to New Orleans, and all along the river? There is something wrong about this matter, and I think it is time to get at it. Congress has accorded this service to us; and if your executive officers choose to set aside and treat your edicts with contempt, it is time, I think, that the Senate should stand up for its own dignity, and read a lecture to such gentlemen as choose to set aside the laws passed by the Congress of the United States. This officer has violated the law for two years; he now refuses to comply with it; and this amendment is intended to obviate such difficulties as he suggests, and to enable him to carry it out. In my opinion, he will not do it after you pass this.

Mr. BROWN. I am exceedingly anxious to get a vote, quite as much so as my friend from Virginia, and therefore I do not intend to make a speech; but I have a few words to say in explanation. The law which my friend from Indiana has read has been on the statute-book for two years. It has not been executed. If it stands there two years longer it will not be executed. I will not take time to explain why it will not be. But here is an amendment which expresses the sense of Congress in such explicit terms that the Postmaster General cannot misunderstand it. More than that, it not only authorizes him to do this thing, but requires him in so many words to do it. There is another law behind which I know the failure to execute this statute is sheltered, and that is a provision in the General Post Office law, which allows the Postmaster General to reject bids for excess. He has two or three times advertised under the law of the last Congress, and made no contract. This amendment authorizes him to advertise; and if he does not get bids which he can accept, it requires him to make private contracts to carry the mails at all events. What we want is the service. I would rather have it by advertisement; but if that fails time after time, and he cannot by advertisement get such bids as he can accept, then let him make private contracts; but do not let us stand here to all eternity on mere technicalities.

I think, with my friend from Indiana, that the Postmaster General has not discharged his duty under this law. I believe he has rejected as excessive bids which were not so, and bids which he ought to have accepted. Still he shelters himself behind the law. I want to take away that shelter, and put him in a position where he must make a contract, and must have a mail carried. He can make contracts under this provision; if it passes, he will be compelled to do it, and he can make them cheap. Without another word, I hope the vote will be taken.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi to allow me to renew, in part, the amendment which my colleague offered. Its object is to fill up the gap between Keokuk, in the State of Iowa, and Galena, in the State of Illinois. That is the only part of the Mississippi river upon which the mail is not now carried by steamboats. It is not carried, I believe, for the reason that the Postmaster General does not believe he has authority to do it. The mail is carried by steamboats from St. Louis to Keokuk daily, and it is carried from Galena to St. Pauls daily. There is a gap of about two hundred and fifty or three hundred miles which I desire to see supplied; and I hope, therefore, the Senator will agree to amend his amendment by inserting after "New Orleans" the words "and from Keokuk, Iowa, to Galena, Illinois."

Mr. BROWN. That would not connect the lines together. My amendment is for one continuous line from Cairo to New Orleans. Now, my friend proposes to commence above St. Louis, and go from Keokuk to Galena, which would make altogether a separate line. It ought to be offered as a separate amendment, and in that form I will vote for it.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Suppose it be added as a proviso to the Senator's amendment, in these words:

Provided, That the Postmaster General be also authorized to contract for carrying a daily mail from Keokuk to Galena.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator can offer that as a separate amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. If the Senator will not accept it, I will not offer it now, because I do not wish to embarrass the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will only repeat that I am unwilling to give the Postmaster General any such power as is contemplated by this amendment, for the reason that he now has, under the general law, authority to employ temporary service at any time; and prior to and since the execution of the contract in this case has, as I am informed, done it.

Mr. BELL. I think I cannot vote for this amendment, because I understand that it is an abandonment of the claim of the West to have a daily mail between Cairo and New Orleans.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not regard it as an abandonment, and therefore I shall vote for it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I think the Senator from Mississippi made an explanation, which, if it had been listened to by the Senate, would have been entirely satisfactory, and would have shown gentlemen the necessity, the absolute necessity, of the section which he has proposed to add to the bill. The section of law, which was read by the Senator from Indiana, provides, as follows:

"That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to issue proposals and contract for the transportation of a daily mail between Louisville and Cairo, St. Louis and Cairo,"

Now we come to the part between Cairo and New Orleans:

"Cairo and Memphis, and Memphis and New Orleans."

The law therefore restricts the Postmaster General distinctly in the service between Cairo and New Orleans to two routes, one from Cairo to Memphis, and the other from Memphis to New Orleans; and it does not authorize him to subdivide those contracts. It does not authorize him to make any other contract than these. It gives him no discretion. It requires a daily mail between "Cairo and Memphis, and Memphis and New Orleans." Now, as has been perfectly well explained by the Senator from Mississippi, you cannot contract for any reasonable sum for a daily mail between Memphis and New Orleans, or between Memphis and Cairo; but if you will allow the Postmaster General to contract for a daily mail between New Orleans and Natchez or Vicksburg, and then allow him to make another contract for the conveyance of the mail between Natchez or Vicksburg and Memphis, and thus subdivide this contract, so as to take advantage of the daily packets between the intermediate points on the river, you can get your mail carried daily. The object, then, of the Senator from Mississippi, is to enlarge the power granted to the Postmaster General by this section of law, so as to enable him to take advantage of the local means of conveyance, and thereby attain the object that all have so much at heart.

Mr. BELL. But does not the amendment also provide that, if he thinks proper, he shall not contract for a mail more than three times a week?

Mr. BENJAMIN. The gentleman does not understand the section, I am satisfied. I do not so read it.

Mr. BRIGHT. I so understand it.

Mr. BELL. And I.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If the gentlemen will allow me to say a few words more, I shall abandon the floor to them. The next point provided for by the Senator from Mississippi is this: It is true the general law provides that the Postmaster General shall have permission to reject bids when he advertises for proposals, provided they are in excess of what he deems to be fair compensation for the service rendered; and it is also true, as suggested by the Senator from Indiana, that the Postmaster General has power, under the general law, to provide for temporary service; but the section presented by the Senator from Mississippi is not intended for one case or the other. The section presented by the Senator from Mississippi provides that, if the Postmaster General, after advertising, shall find that the cost of carrying the mail is greater than the exigencies of the service justify, he shall be at liberty to reject the bids, and then make private contracts without advertising for the whole term for which he has advertised—not a mere temporary contract to supply the deficiency for a moment, but a permanent contract, if he can do it on private terms, for less than the bids which are offered in response to his advertisement.

Now, in relation to the tri-weekly mail of which the Senator from Tennessee speaks. The provision of the Senator from Mississippi is simply that, as between Memphis and Cairo, the Postmaster General shall be authorized to make the mail a tri-weekly one, if he cannot succeed in getting it carried daily on terms to suit him; but between Memphis and New Orleans it is to be a daily mail.

Mr. BELL. I think the honorable Senator is entirely mistaken. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand it to be as I have stated.

Mr. BROWN. The provision is, "shall not be carried more than seven, nor less than three times a week each way."

Mr. BELL. Certainly. If he finds that a daily mail will cost more than he thinks ought to be expended, he is authorized to establish a tri-weekly mail, and no more. That is the ground on which I said it was a repeal of the former law.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not so understand the amendment; but if that be the meaning of it, it can be easily altered so as to effect the object which I know the Senator from Mississippi has in view.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN] and myself do not disagree as to the enlarged discretionary powers which the Postmaster General possesses under the general law regulating his duties; and I will demonstrate that he has exercised them to their fullest extent in this case. In the first place, the proposals provided, as I said when I was first up, that the service should be double, and upon low pressure boats; and the bid was accepted at $450,000; but upon the representation of those Senators whose names I read a few moments since, that such service was not adapted to the western waters, that there was too much of it, that the public would be satisfied with less, the Postmaster General at one stroke of his pen swept all out, annulled the contract, and directed his assistant to make a written proposition to the present contractors, saying we will pay you, not $450,000, as has been agreed upon by the original proposals, but $297,000, reducing the service, lengthening the time, altering the character of the boats to perform the service, and changing it generally.

This the Postmaster General had a perfect right to do; but had he a right to make a contract, involving the great responsibilities as this contract did, silent as to the privilege and right of the contractors to carry freight, and after the time arrived for the commencement of its performance, to set up the absurd nonsensical objection that the boats provided to carry the mail had freight on board, and therefore the mail could not be delivered.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator will permit me to say that I do not at all pretend to defend the past action of the Postmaster General, but I wish to place it beyond his power to deprive us hereafter of this mail.

Mr. BRIGHT. I was about further to remark, that if a proposition inhibiting these contractors from carrying freight had been proposed, I am instructed by them to say that they would have said at once, it is impossible to perform it on such terms. I am informed, and believe, that the actual running expenses of vessels from Louisville to New Orleans and back, such as these contractors had provided for carrying this mail, are from $5,000 to $6,000 per trip. Now, what is the rate of compensation which they were to receive per trip for carrying this mail? A friend has just handed me a statement which shows that from Louisville to New Orleans and back, the round trip, as it is called, the pay would be less than $500, being less than one tenth of the amount required to pay the actual running expenses of the vessel performing it.

All the facts connected with this matter go to prove that the Postmaster General knows little or nothing about the wants of our western constituencies, and still less about our commerce and postal arrangements. For one, I do not believe the amendment pending, if adopted, will enlighten him in the least, and lest it might, per possibility, be construed into an approval of his course, I shall vote against it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. To obviate the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Indiana, I propose to amend the amendment of my friend from Mississippi by adding these words:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to justify the Postmaster General in failing or refusing to execute the law passed at the last Congress providing for a mail service on the Mississippi river, or in any wise to impair the rights of parties heretofore contracting for this service.

I hope my friend from Mississippi will accept this proposition.

Mr. BROWN. I have modified my amendment so as to meet the views of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL,] and I trust also my friend from Indiana, by adding:

And said mail shall be carried daily from Cairo to New Orleans; and the Postmaster General is authorized, at his discretion, to restrict the delivery of the mail at all other points than Cairo, Memphis, Napoleon, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans, to three mails a week each way.

I tried to explain before, that to undertake to deliver a daily mail at all the little offices on the bank of the river would be wholly impracticable; and if it could be done, the people would consider it a decided bore. They want no such service; but the great points do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART in the chair.) As the yeas and nays have been ordered, it requires the consent of the Senate to allow the modification to be made.

Mr. BROWN. I suppose there can be no objection to my modifying it as I have proposed.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have no more objection to that than to the whole amendment. I am opposed to giving the Postmaster General more enlarged discretionary power than is necessary. Under the general law, as I stated before, the Postmaster General has all the authority that is proposed to be given by the amendment; and the only reason for the amendment is to seem to legalize that which ought not to be legalized.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Does the Senator from Mississippi accept the amendment which I suggested?

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to adding this proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with existing rights of parties.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That will accomplish the object I have in view.

Mr. BROWN. That is perfectly right.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would rather take the vote on the amendment as it is offered, and afterwards on the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BROWN. Very well; I will afterwards vote for the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee myself.

The question being taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge, of Iowa, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Johnson, Jones, of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Sebastian, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clayton, Fessenden, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, James, Mason, Norris, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Seward, Stuart, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, and Walker—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the question was stated to be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PEARCE. There is one amendment which it seems to me violates the rules of the Senate. I refer to the one appropriating money for arrears of pay due to a clerk in the Post Office Department. I inquire whether that is not contrary to the rules of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART.) The first question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Maryland can have that amendment excepted if he wishes.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask to have it excepted, so that the question may be decided.

The Presiding Officer put the question on all the other amendments, made as in Committee of the Whole; and they were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment which was excepted at the request of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. PEARCE. It seems to me that that is out of order. I make that point.

Mr. RUSK. Is it not too late?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is too late to make the point of order, as the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, have agreed to the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I now move as an amendment the section which was offered by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BROWN,] and rejected. It may be a matter perfectly agreeable to gentlemen on this floor to give a vote of censure against the Postmaster General, and I do not know that I should be disposed at all to object to their gratification of that desire, if it were not at the expense of my constituency, and, as I believe, of the interests of the whole valley of the Mississippi. Now, sir, unless some amendment of this kind is put in this bill, it is perfectly certain we shall remain subject to the same inconveniences in the valley of the Mississippi, to which we are now subject, and have been for the last five or six years. Gentlemen object to the passage of this amendment on the ground that the law, as it was passed two years ago, provided a daily mail for us in the valley of the Mississippi; and to our remonstrances that we do not get that mail, that we are deprived of the facilities which all other portions of the Union enjoy, the answer is, that it is the fault of the Postmaster General; that the Postmaster General does not execute the law; that the law is well enough as it is, and the evident intention is to pass a vote of censure on him. Now, sir, if they will offer a distinct and independent vote of censure on the Postmaster General I may vote for it, so that I can get my mail. But to take the postal service of the whole valley of the Mississippi, and sacrifice it to the mere gratification of a desire to reprimand the Postmaster General for his neglect of his duties, is what I think the Senate, on reflection, will not be willing to do.

Mr. WELLER. It is just the other way. The vote is an approval of his conduct, as far as it goes.

Mr. BENJAMIN. So far from that, gentlemen said they rejected this section because the law, as it stood, was sufficient; and the object is to reprimand the Postmaster General for not having executed the law as it stood. They say that the law, as it stood, was sufficient; and that, if we have not all the mails, it is the fault of the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General says, he does not construe the law as gentlemen on this floor do. We propose, by this amendment, to give him such a law as will make it impossible for him to violate the intention of the Senate and of the other branch of Congress. We do this with a view of securing a daily mail for the valley of the Mississippi. I can see no reason for refusing to make this provision declaratory of the intention of Congress, other than a desire to censure the Postmaster General for non-compliance with the law. As I have already said, I repeat, this is a vote of censure on the Postmaster General, to which, as such, I have no objection, provided gentlemen will not pass it at the expense of my constituents.

Mr. GEYER. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be authorized and required to establish a mail on the Mississippi river from Cairo to New Orleans; and that he contract for the same in one line, or in such divisions or sections, or both, as may be most compatible with the public service. And to facilitate the execution of this section, the Postmaster General may make immediate temporary arrangements for carrying said mail by the trip; and if he fails to obtain acceptable bids, after advertising for thirty days, he may make private contracts for carrying said mail. And the said mail shall be carried daily from Cairo to New Orleans, and the Postmaster General is authorized, at his discretion, to restrict the delivery of the mail at all other points than Cairo, Memphis, Napoleon, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans, to three mails a week each way.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not know, Mr. President, how the Senate may construe the vote which has been taken. Whether they concur in the opinion expressed by the Senator from Louisiana or not, is a matter of very little consequence, so far as the merits of this question is concerned. The Senate having voted by yeas and nays on this question understandingly, I feel quite sure they will not reverse that vote without some other better reason than yet heard offered. Now, sir, I repeat that the law which has been read, authorizes the Postmaster General, without another word of legislation, to enter into a contract to carry the mail to and from any points between Louisville and New Orleans; and permit me to say, that I am quite as anxious to see this much needed service in operation as any Senator present, and will aid in such legislation as may be necessary to effect the object; but I cannot consent to redeclare a law so plain in all its provisions as the one which has been disregarded, and not executed in this instance. All the gentleman's argument about giving power to the Postmaster General to employ temporary service is wasted upon me. That power the Postmaster General possesses now, and has for years past, and it has been exercised often before and since the making of the contract over the route in controversy. Hence I say, if the power given under existing laws is not plain and broad enough to demand and secure this service, nothing we can enact will.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, really, I do not understand the tactics of my friend from Indiana, although he is about as easily understood as any Senator upon this floor. I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, and the reason was simply this: I understand that under the previous law, the Postmaster General thought there was some discretion in him, and under that law he refused to make this contract, or, having made the contract, he set it aside. The object which the Senator from Mississippi has in view is to compel him to make a contract for the transportation of the mail on these rivers. Now, the Senator from Indiana says he is in favor of that; he wants the mails carried; but he entertains a different opinion in regard to the original law from that entertained by the Postmaster General. As there is a difference of opinion between the executive and the legislative branch of the Government, it has become necessary to legislate still further. The Senator from Mississippi now proposes to put the law in such a shape that there will be no discretion in the executive department, and that the Postmaster General will be compelled to give them this mail, which is so much demanded by the public interests. The last vote, in my judgment, is an approval of the conduct of the Postmaster General in refusing to make that contract. In other words, so far as the effect of that vote is concerned, it is declaring that the Postmaster General has exercised his discretion, if he has any discretion over the subject, in the proper way. I want the mail; and what have I to do to accomplish it? I have to vote for an amendment which puts it on such grounds that the Postmaster General dare not refuse to enter into a contract. That is the reason I vote for the amendment.

I do not undertake to censure the Postmaster General. It is a matter of no sort of consequence to me whether he has acted properly or not, in the past. I desire to put the law in such a shape that he will not dare, as an executive officer, to refuse to carry it out. The Senator from Indiana refuses to go with me. That is the whole of it. I want the mail, and he says he wants it. The Postmaster General says he has not power to do otherwise than he has done. The Senator thinks he has. There is a difference of opinion. To obviate that difficulty which exists between the Department and certain Senators here, I voted for the amendment. That amendment, if it effects anything, will compel the Postmaster General to make a contract.

Mr. BROWN. The vote just given is neither a positive indorsement of the conduct of the Postmaster General, nor a vote of censure. While one Senator, judging from the debate, has evidently felt inclined to censure the Postmaster General for failing to do what the law required, others have voted against the amendment, because they thought a vote in favor of it would be a censure on him. Those disposed to censure him by vote, and those disposed to screen him for censure, have evidently acted together to vote down this amendment.

Now, I wish to call attention to one fact, and I hope the Senate will attend to it. All the Senators from the States through which this line runs from Cairo to New Orleans, have voted for the amendment, while those who live off the line, and have no direct interest in it, have voted it down. The two Senators from Arkansas, the two Senators from Tennessee, the two Senators from Louisiana, and the two Senators from Mississippi, (covering the whole of the country between Cairo and New Orleans, except a small portion of Kentucky,) have voted for this amendment. Now, I ask Senators whether we ought not to have the right to speak first in reference to the arrangement of our own mail affairs; and if the amendment is acceptable to the Senators through whose country the line runs, ought it not to be acceptable to Senators elsewhere? I respectfully submit to my friend from Indiana, whether his opinion that the Postmaster General has failed in the performance of his duties under the law, ought to operate to the detriment of my constituents? I care not what may be the opinions entertained by my friend from Indiana, of the conduct of the Postmaster General? I am standing up here speaking for justice; appealing, in the name of a people who have no mail facilities, for the passage of this amendment; and I especially submit again, that if the two Senators from Arkansas, the two from Tennessee, the two from Louisiana, and the two from Mississippi, being the Senators most immediately and directly interested in this question, think this proposition will be effective, ought we not to have it.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. And the Senators from Iowa voted for it.

Mr. BROWN. But that part of the river through which this mail is to run does not touch Iowa. I do not say that other Senators ought to take it, as a matter of course, because we vote for it; but I do say that those of us who live immediately on the line, ought to know more about it than those who live further off. My friend from Indiana may feel like censuring the Postmaster General for failing to perform his duty, and I shall not stop to screen that officer, for I think myself he has not discharged his whole duty; but I wish something done in this matter. The Postmaster General, for two years, has stood out against the execution of the law. Now, what does my friend from Indiana propose to do? Suppose he stands out two years longer, are my constituents to be all this time without mails, because my friend from Indiana thinks the Postmaster General ought to do the very thing which the Postmaster General thinks he ought not to do? I ask my friend if this were a matter in which the people of Indiana were directly interested, and he brought forward a proposition on the subject, he would think it proper to have it defeated as this has been? The Mississippi river, from Cairo to New Orleans, does not run by Indiana at all. My friend has a daily mail on the Ohio river along his State, and so have the Senators from Missouri on the Mississippi, in front of the State. It is true they are not connected with the mails below, but still they have their daily mail covering the whole front of Indiana on the Ohio river. We have none at all. The Postmaster General has refused to give us any. The Senator from Indiana censures him for that, and so do I; but we are without remedy, and we are without power. We have not even the impeaching power. What can we do? Are we still content to complain and hear complaints, and do nothing, and are the people to be left without mails to all eternity? My philosophy is different; I would move in the premises; I would make the law still more stringent, and so word it, that there could be no possibility of avoiding it. I have tried so to word the amendment, and I think I have done so. I trust the Senate will at least give the Senators through, or between whose States that part of the river proposed to be covered by the amendment runs, the privilege of wording the law for themselves, as they desire to have it.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, I am very anxious to see a daily mail on the Mississippi river, but this is a very complicated business, and one which we cannot well consider at the close of the session on an appropriation bill. There is a law now in force requiring a daily mail to be carried on the Mississippi river. It has not been executed, and another law will make it no better. The effect of passing this will be merely to repeat the same thing twice over. Then I have other objections to the amendment. As soon as the Illinois Central railroad shall be finished to Cairo, there will be a difference on the river which will require new arrangements. Besides, the amendment gives to the Postmaster General entirely too much discretion. In my judgment, it is not sufficiently matured. I cannot see precisely what will be the effect of it. I am not in possession of the facts in regard to the contract made by the Postmaster General. I think he committed an error when he refused to give the mail to boats carrying freight. But it is a very difficult matter to adjust a plan that will get a mail there on a proper basis, and I do not think we can settle it now on this bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Let me suggest that, as the Illinois Central railroad will be done before long, this arrangement ought to be made before that time; for that will increase the necessity of a daily mail to New Orleans.

Mr. WALKER. I wish, sir, to make a remark in reply to the Senator from Louisiana. He construes the vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi into a vote of censure on the Postmaster General. I voted against that amendment, but with the very opposite motive to that attributed, not expressly by him, but in which I was embraced, by the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana. I should have voted for that amendment if it had not been for the position taken by some of those so friendly to it, who threw the whole blame on the Postmaster General. For one, I am not willing to concede that he is so blameable as to require this imperative demand on him, that he shall do thus and so; and, consequently, I voted against the amendment, but not for the purpose of censuring him.

Mr. GEYER. I do not rise to debate this question, but to put the honorable Senators, who are favorable to the amendment, in possession of the reasons why I voted against it as it stood. I understood it to be a proposition to give authority, and a mandate to the Postmaster General to make a contract, irrespective of any arrangements already entered into; and so understanding it, I did not feel authorized to vote for it.

Mr. BROWN. Then the Senator misunderstood it. I say so with all possible respect. The amendment does not release the Postmaster General from the necessity of advertising, and it does not even compel him to accept bids if he thinks them excessive; but after he has exhausted that remedy, it authorizes him to make a private contract.

Mr. GEYER. I understand that a contract has already been entered into, and this amendment is mandatory on the Postmaster General to make another contract, either for the entire route, or in parts. The honorable Senator from Tennessee moved an amendment which was designed to save any existing contract; but that has not been incorporated in the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi. Now, I am prepared to vote for a proposition which shall make it obligatory on the Postmaster General either to execute the contract he has entered into, or make a new one; but while there is an outstanding contract, I am unwilling to authorize, and still less to command, the Postmaster General to make a new contract, which seems to me to be a recognition by the Senate of his indisposition to execute an existing contract.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, my honorable friend from Texas spoke of this question as being exceedingly complicated, and he said that this was too late a period of the session to consider it properly. There is no doubt as to the latter remark; but I will ask the Senator whether there ever was a time when this subject was considered at any earlier period of the session? It is hopeless for us to expect any legislation on the subject except in this connection; and when it is brought up in connection with the appropriation bills, it always is the latest hour of the session when it is approached. Therefore, so far as that point is concerned, there is no prospect that we shall ever have any more favorable time.

The reasons which have been presented in favor of the amendment by the Senator from Mississippi, I believe to be sound and correct; and so believing, I voted for the amendment before, and shall vote for it again with great pleasure.

But, sir, the idea of censuring the conduct of the Postmaster General has attracted some attention here. Now, I wish to say that my vote on this question is governed by no disposition to censure or to pass any judgment whatever, either of censure or of approval, upon the action of the Postmaster General under the existing law. The law is in existence. It never has been enforced. The reason why I do not know. The reason may be good, but it is impossible for me to say until I know something of the facts. Those facts I know nothing of from him. I have heard assertions made from which it would seem that censure could justly be imposed on him; but I have not heard his statement, and I do not presume to pass any censure on him. The amendment is to remedy a difficulty which exists somewhere, and which has prevented the execution of a law that has been in existence for two years. It is to remedy the difficulty, so that we may have the service. If the difficulty exists, it exists under a law. If we pass the proposed new law, it will certainly attain the object, or else difficulties will arise under it. With the matter of censure I have nothing to do. I simply ask for the service, which we have not had under a law that has been in existence for two years. If the Postmaster General wishes to make any showing in regard to the facts, let him do so; but I wish, in the mean time, to obtain a law which will give us the service.

The remarks of the Senator from Texas in regard to the Illinois Central railroad have nothing to do, I think, with the subject. There is already a regular daily mail from St. Louis to Cairo, and from Louisville to Cairo. The completion of the Illinois Central railroad to Cairo will only add another daily mail to that point, and makes more imperative the necessity for a daily mail from New Orleans to Cairo, connecting with that road. I hope the amendment will obtain more favor on this vote than it did on the last.

Mr. WELLER. This subject, I think, is fully understood by the Senate, and I hope we shall be able to obtain a vote. Before the vote is taken, however, I desire to say, that I did not understand myself as voting to censure the Postmaster General, or to approve of his conduct. As far as I have seen the acts of the Postmaster General, he is an able and efficient public officer, and I believe an honest man; but I vote for the amendment, because those who are advocates for this service say legislation is necessary to accomplish the object. That is the only reason I vote for it. I spoke in my former remarks of the general principle of Congress doing its own business, and leaving the executive officers to theirs. I hope the question will now be taken.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have been absent from the Senate Chamber, and have not heard this discussion; but I am told that Senators on this floor have censured the conduct of the Postmaster General, for not carrying into effect the provisions of a law, applicable to a contract made with Glover & Mather. As I understand the facts of the case, I think they perfectly exonerate the Postmaster General from any censure whatever. His predecessor in office had advertised for proposals to carry the mail from Louisville to New Orleans in high pressure boats, not carrying freight. A bid, I think, was made for $450,000.

A SENATOR. The facts have been stated before.

Mr. SLIDELL. I certainly have no disposition to consume the time of the Senate uselessly. I am told that these facts have been stated before, but I was told by another Senator, my colleague, that they were not stated.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not think they have been stated as fully as my colleague was about doing.

Mr. SLIDELL. I merely wish then to say that it has been the uniform practice of the Post Office Department, in making a contract, to consider the particulars of the advertisement, as part of the contract.

Mr. WELLER. I understood that the Senator from Louisiana is mistaken, and that there is nothing whatever in the advertisement in regard to the transportation of freight.

Mr. SLIDELL. I think there is.

Mr. WELLER. That is a very material fact.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will correct the Senator from Louisiana. In the proposals issued originally for the service in low pressure boats, there was a clause providing that freight should not be carried.

Mr. SLIDELL. Exactly.

Mr. BRIGHT. That was in the original proposals, which, as I have stated, were set aside, and the Department issued a proposal to the present contractors, after the suspension of the former contract, to know whether they would perform the service.

Mr. SLIDELL. Precisely, without any subsequent advertisement, and that is exactly the point. I contend that the Postmaster General has no right to deviate from the terms of a proposal once made. I do not think he has any such right under the law, though he may have under the usage of the Department. What I mean to say, as to the main point of the case, is, that, after having by his own volition, dispensed with the necessity of having low pressure boats, and reduced the price of the contract from $450,000 to $297,000, he gave it to the gentlemen whose claims are advocated by the Senator from Indiana. Now, I say, that under the contract as entered into by the predecessor of Judge Campbell, the mail service could not have been better performed, the price being $290,000, than it had been previously, and has been since, for the sum of $70,000 or $80,000 a year. There could not possibly have been, with boats carrying freight from Louisville to New Orleans, any greater degree of speed, or certainty of communication, than there is under the existing system, when the Postmaster General ships his mails on board each boat at the lowest possible price. I understand the present cost is about $80,000; and the effect of any attempt now, if it were successful, to oblige the Postmaster General to carry out this contract, would be to entail on the Government an additional expense of $210,000, without adding one particle to the utility of the service.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana, who undertakes to state what facilities we have, to tell me how often we get mails at Memphis from St. Louis and Louisville?

Mr. SLIDELL. I really cannot answer that question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is just as I supposed; the Senator does not know anything about it.

Mr. SLIDELL. I do not think my admission went so far. I may, perhaps, not have that very accurate information which the Senator possesses on this and all other subjects; but I think I do know something about it. I hope he will correct the remark he has just made. I am not in the habit of stating anything of which I know nothing.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am willing to concede to the Senator from Louisiana superior intelligence on every subject except this; but I understood him to say that the Postmaster General, for an expenditure of $80,000 or $90,000 a year, had as good mail service as he could have obtained at $290,000 under the law. That is the point which I controvert. Under that law we were entitled to daily mail service from Louisville and St. Louis to Memphis and New Orleans; but I undertake to say, there are now sometimes three or four days when we never get a mail at all. I undertake to say, further, that if we can have no better mail service on the river than we have now for $80,000 or $90,000, it would be the interest of this Government to abolish it altogether. It is a mere pretext for mail service, without any of its substance or reliability. How long does it take to get a mail from Memphis to this city? There are honorable Senators who know that it requires eleven or twelve days to get a mail from Memphis here. If we had a daily mail from New Orleans to Louisville, as was provided by the law two years ago, we should get the mails here in five or six days at the furthest. The mail service we now get on the Mississippi river for $80,000 or $90,000 a year is a mere sham. It is that much money thrown away. All the express letters are carried by other conveyances, and this mail boat goes along, taking ten days or two weeks from Louisville to New Orleans, and at the end of two weeks you get your mail. That is the kind of mail service we have now. It is no service at all. It is sporting with the interests of the people of the valley of the Mississippi, and ought to be abolished.

But, sir, some difficulties seem to exist in the minds of Senators as to releasing the Postmaster General by this proposition from his obligation to previous contractors. I have no wish to interfere with those contracts, and, therefore, I propose to amend the amendment by adding the following proviso, which I hope the Senator from Louisiana will accept as part of his proposition:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to justify the Postmaster General in failing or refusing to execute the law passed at the last Congress, providing for mail service on the Mississippi river, or in anywise to interfere with the rights of parties contracting for that service.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have no objection to accepting that as a part of the amendment. We have no desire to interfere with any existing contracts or laws. All we desire is to get our daily mail.

Mr. WELLER. It strikes me that the latter branch of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee will effect the object without containing that which might be regarded as a censure on the Postmaster General. Let him confine his proposition to the latter clause:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the rights of other parties which may have entered into contracts with the Postmaster General."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. At the suggestion of the Senator from California, I will modify my amendment so as to retain only the last clause, and make it read:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with the rights of parties heretofore contracting for that service."

Mr. BRIGHT. I still adhere to my original position, that legislation is unnecessary on this subject; that the existing laws are full and ample; but I do not object to the amendment with the proviso suggested by the Senator from Tennessee. If the Senators from Mississippi and Louisiana still think legislation necessary, I am willing to withdraw my objection.

Mr. BROWN. I think there is an absolute necessity, because the Postmaster General does nothing in the premises.

Mr. BRIGHT. There is an honest difference of opinion, and I am willing to withdraw my objection, provided the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is adopted.

The amendment of Mr. BENJAMIN, as modified, was agreed to; as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be authorized and required to establish a mail on the Mississippi river, from Cairo to New Orleans, and that he contract for the same in one line, or in such subdivisions, or sections, or both, as may be most compatible with the public service; and to facilitate the execution of this section, the Postmaster General may make immediate temporary arrangements for carrying said mail by the trip; and if he fails to obtain acceptable bids, after advertising for thirty days, he may make private contracts for carrying said mail; and the said mail shall be carried daily from Cairo to New Orleans. And the Postmaster General is authorized, at his discretion, to restrict the delivery of the mail at all other points than Cairo, Memphis, Napoleon, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans, to three mails a week, each way: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with the rights of parties heretofore contracting for that service.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I wish now, if it is in order, to offer the amendment which I intimated some time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is too late; the amendment cannot be received.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

TRANSMISSION OF BILLS.

Mr. WELLER, (during the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, said:) I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a motion to suspend the 16th and 17th joint rules of the two Houses. The 16th provides that "no bill that shall have passed one House, shall be sent for concurrence to the other on either of the three last days of the session;" and the 17th that, "no bill or resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall be presented to the President of the United States, for his approbation, on the last day of the session." Some bills were passed this morning, which makes it necessary to suspend those rules. I ask unanimous consent to submit the motion.

Mr. WALKER. For the general purposes of the session?

Mr. WELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALKER. The rules had better be suspended separately for each bill. That is the course which has heretofore been pursued.

Mr. WELLER. Then I make it applicable to these two bills.

Mr. PRATT. And all appropriation bills.

Mr. WELLER. I will include them also.

Unanimous consent was given, and Mr. WELLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the 16th and 17th joint rules of the two Houses be suspended during the present session, so far as relates to bills S. 462, granting the right of way to the Marysville and Benicia Railroad Company, through and over the grounds of the United States at Benicia, in California; S. 488, to change the name of the American-built brig Glamorgan, to that of Wizard; and to any general appropriation bills.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the House had agreed to some, and disagreed to others, of the amendments of the Senate to the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855; and had agreed to other amendments of the Senate to said bill, with amendments, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider their amendments as amended, and disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and,

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill, insist on their amendments disagreed to by the House, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That said committee be appointed by the President pro tempore.

And Mr. HUNTER, Mr. BRIGHT, and Mr. FISH were appointed the committee of conference on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts, and in the cities of New York and Philadelphia.

An act to relinquish the reversionary interest of the United States to a certain reservation therein mentioned, and to confirm the title of Charles Gunter thereto.

An act granting the right of way over, and depot grounds on, the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, in the State of Michigan, to the Port Huron and Lake Michigan Railroad Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore thereupon signed the above mentioned bills.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. PRATT submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That hereafter the Senate will not receive or consider any bill or proposition (other than the general appropriation bills for the support of the Government) which appropriates money for more than one object.

HOUR OF MEETING.

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution, submitted by him on the 1st instant:

Resolved, That the daily hour of meeting of the Senate, for the residue of the session, be ten o'clock, a. m.

Mr. WELLER. I know that some of the standing committees are compelled to sit at ten o'clock, in order to prepare amendments to the appropriation bills.

Mr. RUSK. I move to strike out "ten," and insert "nine." There will be but two days of the session remaining after to-day, and there are a great many private bills from the House, which ought to be passed, and got out of the way for the next session.

Mr. SLIDELL. If it meet the assent of the Senate, I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Several SENATORS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. SLIDELL. Then let the question be taken upon it.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the original resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after sometime spent therein, the doors were reopened.

OCEAN MAIL STEAMER BILL.

The bill from the House, making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mails by ocean steamers and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ABSENT SENATORS' COMPENSATION.

Mr. GWIN. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate pay, under the direction of the President of the Senate, the usual per diem to such Senators as did not take their seats at the opening of the session by reason of sickness of themselves or families, providential causes, or necessary business.

I will state the facts in regard to several Senators. Several SENATORS. It is not necessary.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to hear the Senator's statement as to the reason for this. There is a law now providing for a Senator if he is absent on account of sickness of himself.

Mr. GWIN. This extends further to Senators who, from sickness or other providential causes, or necessary business, were prevented from taking their seats at the beginning of the session. A Senator who is here on the first day of the session, and is absent any part of the balance of the session, receives his pay for the whole; but one who is necessarily detained, and cannot take his seat at the beginning, receives no compensation for that time. There are several cases here now.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand it to be in the nature of an order for this session, but is not to stand as a law.

Mr. GWIN. That is all.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Is the resolution open to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WELLER in the chair.) It has been adopted.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I suppose there will be no objection to including the usual compensation to the reporters.

Several SENATORS. Do not offer it as an amendment to this.

CHRISTIAN INDIANS.

Mr. CASS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to report to the Senate, at the commencement of the next session of Congress, the nature of the titles of the Christian Indians to the lands in the State of Ohio, purchased of them by a contract or agreement made with them in the year 1823, pursuant to an act of Congress of the 3d of March of that year; and what amount has been received by the United States from the sale of said lands.

GILLIS'S REPORT.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am directed to make two reports from the Committee on Printing. One is in regard to Gillis's report. A resolution was referred to the committee, providing for the printing of ten thousand copies of it. I am instructed to report in favor of printing five thousand copies of the first number, and one thousand each of the subsequent ones.

The report was concurred in.

MORTALITY ON BOARD EMIGRANT SHIPS.

Mr. JOHNSON. The next report I have to make is in favor of the printing of five thousand extra copies of the report of the select committee on mortality on board of emigrant passenger ships. The resolution was referred to us for the printing of ten thousand copies. I am instructed to report in favor of the printing and binding of five thousand copies for the use of the Senate.

JAMES M'MINN.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of James McMinn.

Mr. GWIN. I must object. I desire to have the naval appropriation bill taken up, so as to have it the unfinished business of to-day.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the Senate will not take up private bills when we have public business to dispose of.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of James McMinn upon the pension rolls, at the rate of four dollars per month, from the 1st of January, 1854, to continue during life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill from the House making appropriations for the support of the Navy, for the year ending the 30th June, 1855, reported it back without amendment.

REPORTERS' COMPENSATION.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to each of the reporters of the Congressional Globe for the Senate, the same sum which was paid them at the last session of Congress.

Mr. BRIGHT. Let it lie over.

The resolution lies over one day, under the rule.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GWIN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion. I hope the Senate will take up the naval appropriation bill, so that we may proceed with its consideration to-morrow.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 11, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Evans, Foot, Gillette, Houston, Seward, Sumner, and Wade—11.
NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Cass, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Geyer, Gwin, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Pratt, Rusk, Slidell, Toombs, Walker, and Welles—23.

So the motion was not agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BELL. Will not the Senator allow me to have the small bill taken up, which I endeavored unsuccessfully to have considered before the Executive session.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the naval appropriation will be read. I wish to hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BELL. I hope the Senator will allow me to have this bill passed. It is a House bill for the relief of a widow, who is eighty years of age.

Mr. RUSK. If that can be done by common consent, without displacing the naval appropriation bill, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that bill will be taken up.

Mr. BRIGHT. I object. I wish to hear the naval appropriation bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks the unanimous consent to have a private bill considered.

There was no objection.

MARY H. CUSHING.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. While the bill of the Senator from Tennessee is being looked for, I ask to be allowed to make a report from the Committee on Public Lands, in behalf of a blind and insane girl. It is a favorable report on a House bill to give her the forty acres of land to which her heroic father was entitled.

Unanimous consent was given, and the bill was reported and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Mary H. Cushing, daughter of John Wainwright Cushing, deceased, a soldier of the war of 1812, a warrant for so much bounty land as he would be entitled to receive, were he now living.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

REBECCA BAGGERLEY.

On the motion of Mr. BELL, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House, for the relief of Rebecca Baggerley, widow of David Baggerley, deceased.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior, to place the name of Rebecca Baggerley, widow of David Baggerley, who was a soldier in the Maryland line in the war of the Revolution, on the pension roll, under the acts of July 7, 1838, March 3, 1843, June 17, 1844, and July 29, 1848, at the rate of twenty dollars per annum, to be paid as other pensions have been paid, in pursuance of the provisions of those acts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. STUART submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the time fixed by the resolution of the 1st of July, for the adjournment of the present session of Congress be, and the same is hereby extended to —, at 12 o'clock, m.

The Senate then, at seven o'clock, p. m., adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 3, 1854.

The House met at ten o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Journal of yesterday is uninteresting, and as we shall want every moment of time left us of the session, I move that its reading be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

CORRECTION OF A MISTAKE.

Mr. HOUSTON. In the communication to the Senate of the action of this House on the amendments of that body to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, there were one or two errors, and I now desire that a request may be sent to the Senate for the return of that bill and amendments, so that correction may be made.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose that if the bill and amendments be returned, the Clerk can make the necessary corrections, without their being brought into the House for action in the matter.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Would it not be best for the House to send a message by the Clerk to the Senate, setting forth the errors of the communication referred to by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the course which I have suggested to be pursued in the matter is the best one.

Mr. HAVEN. I object. I do not know whether this is a privileged question or not; but I now give notice that I shall object to everything until the river and harbor bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is not my question a question of privilege? There is an error in the communication to the Senate of the action of this House on the amendments of that body to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. The amendment for the marine hospitals at New Orleans, and various other places, is reported to have been non-concurred in, when it was concurred in by this House; and I now ask that the error may be corrected, and I present it to the House as a question of privilege.

Mr. HAVEN. I am the last man to throw any obstruction in the way of our legislation. But there is another ordinary appropriation bill which has a majority in its favor in both Houses; and I insist upon it that the people are entitled to some consideration, as well as the Government.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman from New York desires to take up the river and harbor bill out of order and out of place before the homestead bill, which was first considered, first passed, first returned from the Senate, and is first upon the Speaker's table. I object to taking up the river and harbor bill, and I suppose the gentleman desires now to throw all the obstacles he can in the way of carrying on the Government. He may do so if he chooses, but I say to him that I shall not withdraw my objection to taking up the river and harbor bill out of its order.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

[A message was here received from the Senate by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that they had passed bills of the following titles:

A bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1855;

An act for the relief of William H. Weirich;

An act for the relief of Rebecca Baggerly, widow of David Baggerly, deceased; and

An act for the relief of Mary H. Baggerly, deceased.

Also, that they insisted on their amendments disagreed to by the House, to bill of the House (No. 48) making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1855; that they disagreed to the amendments of the House to said amendments, and had appointed a committee of conference, consisting of the following gentlemen: Messrs. HUNTER, BRIGHT, and FISK, to meet a like committee of conference, to be appointed by the House on the said disagreeing votes.]

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will it not be in order to move to suspend the rules? Preparatory to making such a motion, I will ask the Chair if the question presented by the gentleman from Alabama is a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that if an error has been committed by the Clerk, or in any other form, in any bill passed by the House, that it is competent for the House to correct that error; and in that form it becomes a privileged question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move, then, that a message be sent to the Senate informing them of the error, and requesting that it may be corrected. I think that will be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. The bill, as the Chair is informed by the Clerk, is at this moment already reported back by the Senate to this House. Perhaps that fact would vary the gentleman's motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I presume, then, that it is only necessary for us to have the bill sent back in a corrected form; and if a message is necessary, I will make such a motion.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire the yeas and nays upon that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that, perhaps, the most convenient mode of reaching the object would be to send a message to the Senate by the Clerk, correcting the error, and informing the Senate what the action of this House was upon that particular item in the bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If that will accomplish the object, I am ready to make the motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It will be recollected that the Senate sent a message here of that kind upon this very bill, but the House did not entertain it.

Mr. HAVEN. They paid no regard to it whatever.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is competent, I take it, for the Speaker and Clerk to send the bill back in a corrected form—it having passed the House. If the Clerk made the mistake, I presume this can be done.

The SPEAKER. The Senate, however, have passed upon the action of the House, as it appears in the bill, and has so reported to the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I presume it would require a motion to have the error corrected.

The SPEAKER. It will require a motion; and if the gentleman submits a motion according to his own views, the Chair will put it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to make a suggestion to the House. I understand the fact to be in regard to the alleged error in this bill, that the House is reported as having disagreed to an amendment in reference to a particular custom-house to which, in fact, they had agreed. I understand that the Senate have disagreed to our proposition; and I suppose the whole thing can be settled now by our simply agreeing to the disagreement of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If that be the true state of the case, the Chair thinks that it would be the most convenient mode of reaching the object desired.

Mr. HOUSTON. That perhaps would be the most convenient mode, but it would not be the proper and legal mode. I intend to ask for a committee of conference, and we can make the correction there. It is proper, however, that the Journal should present a true record; and I regret that the gentleman from New York should interpose an objection when he must know that all I ask is, that the report of the action of the House shall set forth what that action really was.

Mr. HAVEN. I did not hear the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] and I do not know what it is. I desire to interpose no obstacles in the way of any appropriation bill whatever; but the river and harbor bill, which I desire to take up, is an ordinary appropriation bill, and is not like the other legislation upon the Speaker's table that gentlemen want to reach. I do not desire to make any objection to the correction of this error, but I shall interpose any obstacle to any other appropriation bill until the river and harbor bill takes the ordinary course of legislation.

Mr. HOUSTON. My motion is to send to the Senate and ask for the return of the bill and amendments for the purpose of making the corrections in question. This is the legitimate and proper way to do it. The bill, however, is here, and the Senate report that they insist upon that particular amendment, with others, and have appointed a committee of conference to pass upon these disagreeing votes between the two Houses. Therefore, with a view to ease the trouble of my friend from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] for I dislike to see him troubled in his mind, I will ask for the appointment of a committee of conference to meet that of the Senate. To try and apply the remedy in this way I make that motion.

Mr. HAVEN. As to the subject of the committee of conference, while I am desirous that that committee should be appointed, I desire that it shall be delayed until this other matter is passed upon; and on the gentleman's motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit this question to the Chair: That the message having been communicated from the Senate at the time when there was no question before the House, is not legitimately before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the subject-matter of appointing a committee of conference is in order now. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] moves that the House agree with the action of the Senate in relation to the appointment of a committee of conference; and on that motion the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENN. Can I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Alabama? I wish to submit an amendment instructing the committee, on the part of the House, to adhere to that amendment which the House agreed to, and about which the mistake has been made.

Mr. HOUSTON. That would not be in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to instruct a committee of conference. When they report to the House it will be then for the House to adopt or to reject their action. But in the form in which the gentleman from Iowa proposes, the Chair thinks that proposition not in order.

Mr. HENN. This is an unusual case, and I think the committee of conference should be instructed as I propose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair held that it was in order to move to take such action as would lead to the correction of errors, and that in this way it might be a privileged question. The gentleman from Alabama, however, with a view to attain that object, proposes a committee of conference to meet a like committee on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. HENN. Is it not competent to instruct that committee?

The SPEAKER. Not in this connection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would say to the gentleman from Iowa, that a vote of the House upon the yeas and nays, concurring in that amendment, will be a strong instruction to the committee of conference.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

ALTERATION OF RECORDS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a question of privilege. The select committee appointed under a resolution of the House to investigate the alterations alleged to have been made to the Minnesota land bill, and also the alteration of other bills and joint resolutions, desire to make a report. I wish to say, sir, that upon one branch of the investigation the committee make a unanimous report. In relation to the other branch there is a majority report and a minority report, each one of which recommends the immediate passage of a bill.

I will now send to the Clerk's desk the unanimous report of the committee, touching the matter of the interlineation of the joint resolution of this House, and ask that it may be read, after which my colleague [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] upon the committee will present the report of the majority upon the other branch. Then the report of the minority will also be presented.

The report was then read, as follows:

The select committee appointed to investigate the alterations made in House bill No. 342, to aid the construction of a railroad in the Territory of Minnesota, "and also in regard to all other cases of interpolation of bills or joint resolutions of the House during the present session," in considering the latter branch of the inquiries, have unanimously agreed upon the following report:

That they have taken testimony in regard to the interpolation of the joint resolution, fixing the compensation of the employees in the legislative department of the Government, which is herewith submitted. They have come to the conclusion that the words "and public folders" were interlined and read at the Clerk's desk through mistake. It appears that Messrs. WENTWORTH and FLORENCE made an effort to procure the said alteration through Mr. CURTIS and the committee who had reported it, but there is no evidence to show that they sought such change by any improper means. On application to Mr. CURTIS, he (Mr. C.) took a copy, (not the original resolution,) and as a private memorandum for his own use, interlined in pencil on said copy the words mentioned. The original as well as said copy were carried to the Clerk's desk by the Speaker's page; and at the same time Mr. WENTWORTH said to the Clerk, "All right, all right." From these facts, Mr. Barclay, the Journal Clerk, inferred that the committee had directed the change, and he accordingly interlined upon the original resolution the said words, "and public folders." The resolution was then twice read, and the yeas and nays, on a suspension of the rules, were partly taken, when the attention of the House was called to the interpolation. Thereupon, Mr. CURTIS having announced that it was not authorized by the committee, the Speaker ordered the words stricken out, and the resolution was then passed in the form in which it had been agreed on and reported by the Committee on Accounts.

The committee therefore think that none of the parties had any fraudulent or improper design in regard to this matter.

LEWIS D. CAMPBELL,
JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE,
N. S. BARRY,
JOHN G. DAVIS,
G. A. SIMMONS.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of privilege. I notice that in the report there is the name of WENTWORTH connected with that transaction. There are two gentlemen of that name in this House. If the report is intended to be derogatory to Mr. WENTWORTH, I do not intend to bear any part of it, but if it is intended to be complimentary, I do not desire a compliment not intended for me.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The testimony which has been submitted, accompanying the report, will certainly make that matter plain.

Mr. WENTWORTH. No, sir; I am not satisfied with that. I want the name to be made explicit in the report.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I hope the name will be put in as JOHN WENTWORTH, of Illinois.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suppose there will be no objection to that alteration being made.

There was no objection; and the change was made.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I now move that the report, with the accompanying resolution, be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have been instructed by the majority of the committee to offer a report, accompanied by testimony. The minority have also a report to submit to the House. The points of difference between the recommendations of the majority and minority will be fully shown by the reports themselves, and relate to suggestions touching the conduct of members and officers of the House.

It is not proposed, at this time, to read the testimony. I will state, however, that the report which I hold in my hand, has been drawn up by myself, and it is so near the close of the session that I have not been able to get it copied, and as my handwriting, like that of some other members of the House, is somewhat illegible to others, I ask the consent of the House to read it myself. It is as follows:

The select committee, appointed under a resolution of the House of the 24th of July, 1854, to inquire into an alleged alteration in the text of House bill, No. 342, making a grant of land to the Territory of Minnesota, after its engrossment and passage through the House, "and also in regard to all other cases of interpolations of bills or joint resolutions of the House during the present session," beg leave to report:

That they have considered the subjects submitted to them as thoroughly as possible, and have taken a large mass of testimony, which is herewith presented to the House. There is but one other witness whose testimony is desired by any of the committee, and they expect to have it filed to-morrow morning, and they ask that it may be printed with the other testimony. A considerable portion of the testimony they regard as irrelevant, but they believe that whatever has a material bearing upon the subject-matters of the resolution is exhibited on the record. It has been impossible, at this late period of the session, and with the pressure of business upon the members of the committee, to prepare an elaborate report, analyzing at length the testimony taken. Your committee, therefore, must content themselves with submitting the evidence, and their conclusions founded upon it.

Ist. In regard to the alleged alteration in the text of the bill granting land to aid Minnesota Territory in the construction of a railroad therein, they report the following summary of facts preceding to, and connected with, said alteration:

On the 4th of March last the Legislature of Minnesota, in anticipation of a grant of land by Congress for the railroad proposed, passed an act of incorporation, vesting in a company, when formed and organized in pursuance of the charter, the said grant, for the purpose of constructing the road under certain limitations and conditions. A copy of the charter is filed with the testimony. It may be added here, that it appears from the evidence, that a company has been organized under the provisions of the charter, the stocks subscribed, and steps taken to comply with the conditions contained in the act of incorporation, and there is no evidence that said company were apprised of any unauthorized change in the bill prior to the resolution of this House directing an investigation; but your committee not deeming themselves authorized, under the resolution of the House, to examine the merits of the claim of said company to the grant in virtue of the Minnesota charter, leave that subject to the determination of the House.

Other parties, however, being unwilling that any company formed under said act should receive the grant, and desiring to leave the disposition of it to some future Legislature of the Territory, framed a bill, which was offered to the House Committee on Public Lands, the third section of which was as follows:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said lands hereby granted to said Territory shall be subject to the disposal of any future Legislature thereof for the purpose aforesaid, and no other; nor shall they inure to the benefit of any company heretofore constituted or organized. And the said railroad shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States; nor shall any of said lands become subject to private entry until the same shall have been first offered at public sale at the increased price."

The parties who were dissatisfied with the Minnesota charter, and who desired the grant to be thrown upon a future Legislature, wished the third section to be reported from the committee, and passed by the House in the above form; while those who desired the company to receive the grant by virtue of the charter wished the word "future," before the word "Legislature" to be stricken out, and the word "and" to be substituted for the word "or" between the words "constituted" and "organized."

Your committee do not deem it necessary to enlarge upon the objects and aims of those conflicting interests. They find that the bill without being referred to from the House, was sent by the framers of it first to the Committee on Public Lands; that it was referred in committee to Hester L. Stevens, a representative from Michigan; that Mr. Stevens recommended to the committee to report the bill with the "future" stricken out, and the word "and" substituted for "or," and that it was directed to be reported with those changes in the original draft; that Mr. Stevens accordingly did strike out the word "future" before the bill was reported to the House, and supposed he had made the other change also, but neglected to do so, and the bill was reported and passed this body with the word "or" instead of the word "and" between the words "constituted" and "organized," in the third section; that shortly after the bill passed the House, and before it passed the Senate, the attention of Mr. Stevens was called to the fact that the second change intended had not been made; that Mr. Stevens then went to the Senate, where the bill was pending, and, after explaining the above facts to General Jones, a Senator from Iowa, asked him if the correction could then be made; that General Jones replied, he believed verbal changes were sometimes made, but he would inquire of Mr. Patton, who had been for a long time one of the engrossing clerks of the Senate; that they then spoke to Mr. Patton on the subject, who stated that changes deemed verbal and unimportant were often made, but that as this was a bill from the House, he supposed it could not be done without the consent of the Clerk of the House, or of the committee which reported the bill; that Mr. Stevens and Mr. Patton then proceeded to see Mr. Sproule, one of the engrossing and enrolling clerks of the House; that Mr. Stevens asked him if the word "and" could be substituted for the word "or," in the third section, saying that it was the purpose of the committee so to report the bill, and that the omission had been accidental; that, as Mr. Sproule doubted his power to act in the premises, the three went to the room of Mr. Forney, the Clerk of the House, and desired the correction to be made; that Mr. Forney asked if such corrections were usual under similar circumstances, and was informed by Mr. Patton that verbal and unimportant changes were often made, and that such a correction would be made in the Senate; that Mr. Forney supposed the proposed change to be unimportant, and at length yielded to the request, and directed Mr. Sproule to make it; that at this time the engrossed bill, the original bill, and the enrolled bill, were all in the Clerk's office, the bill having been enrolled, as is customary, in advance of the passage through both Houses; that Mr. Sproule accordingly immediately substituted the word "and" for the word "or," in the third section of the engrossed bill, and at the same time made a corresponding change in the original and engrossed bills, and in this form it passed the Senate, was signed by the Presiding Officers of both Houses, and approved by the President.

Your committee, therefore, report that the text of the bill in question was changed after it passed the House in one particular, to wit: by substituting the word "and" for the word "or," between the words "constituted" and "organized," in the third section, and they believe that the foregoing statement explains the mode and circumstances of the change. They have, in addition, taken testimony with a view to determine whether any of the corrupt motives, or intended to practise a fraud on the House; and, after a careful review of all the evidence, they have to report that they do not find such motives or intentions, but, on the contrary, from the evidence, they distinctly acquit them of any criminal or improper purpose.

Your committee report that Mr. STEVENS supposed, under his information in regard to the prevailing custom in both Houses, that it was proper to make the change, to carry out the unexecuted intention when the bill was reported to the House, and that the Clerk of the House directed the change under the influence of the same sentiments.

But while your committee make this report in regard to the motives of the parties, they would express in strong language their conviction that any unauthorized change in the text of a bill or resolution of the House, no matter what the intentions of the parties may be, is of the most dangerous tendency; and in this view of the case, they express the opinion that the change in question deserves severe censure. To Mr. Sproule your committee attach no blame, as he acted under the direction of his superior.

They deem it proper to add that the evidence shows that verbal and corrections, which are considered merely changes and unimportant, are sometimes now made in both Houses, and they venture to call the attention of the House to this custom as highly pernicious in its tendencies, and calculated to produce the most injurious results. In the opinion of your committee it is highly censurable in any member or officer of the House to make any change, even the most unimportant, in any bill or resolution which has received the sanction of this body.

Your committee have thus reported the facts bearing upon the change in the text of the bill after its engrossment and passage through the House, and this may be thought to exhaust the duty imposed upon them by the resolution of the House. They do not assume to instruct the House upon the question whether any legislation is proper, or if so, in what form it shall be taken; but inasmuch as the text of the act, now on the statute book, is not in the precise form in which it was voted on in the House, and as a majority of the committee are of opinion that the word "and" for the word "or" is material in its legal effect, they suppose it to be within the scope and spirit of the resolution under which they have acted, to report a bill with a view to remedy the error, if it shall be the pleasure of the House to take such action as it may think to be in its power to place the text of the act in the exact form in which it passed this body.

The bill reported by the majority of the committee, after reciting that the bill which passed the House had been changed by the substitution of "and" for "or" between the words "constituted" and "organized," in the third section, restores the word "or," it being the intent to place the act in the exact form in which it was voted upon by the House.

The second section provided that, by virtue of no act heretofore passed by the Minnesota Legislature, shall the Governor, auditor, and treasurer have the power to designate the company, or companies, who shall receive the benefit of the act.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. In explanation of this second section, I will state to the House the following facts: The committee have already presented the fact of the organization of the company, and of their claim under this matter, which the committee did not undertake to decide. By the nineteenth section of the act which passed the Minnesota Legislature, incorporating the company, it is provided:

"In case the persons incorporated by this act shall fail or neglect to accept the privilege to the same, and to comply with the conditions within the time, and in the manner herein described, the same may be accepted by any other company approved of by the Governor, auditor, and treasurer of the Territory, which, upon complying with the terms and conditions of this act, will be vested with all rights, powers, and immunities vested in the corporation herein named; and shall be subject to all the liabilities in said act, set forth in as full and ample a manner as the company hereby organized."

The object of the committee being, in case those who had organized themselves under the charter granted by the Legislature of Minnesota had failed to comply with the conditions of the act, that it should not be in the power of the officials of the Territory to put it into the hands of any other company prior to the action of the Minnesota Legislature.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman from Kentucky be good enough to state by what members of the committee the report just read has been signed?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not believe that the members of the committee have signed it. The report, however, is made by Mr. DAVIS, Mr. BARRY, and myself.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am instructed by the minority of the special committee to present a report, embracing their views on the present condition of the testimony taken.

Before proceeding, however, to read the report, it is but proper to say, that the committee have been assiduously engaged, from eight o'clock in the morning till some time in the night, since their appointment. The minority think that the testimony touching one branch of the inquiry is yet incomplete. It has been impossible to get the attendance of witnesses, deemed by all of the committee important to this investigation. And, by way of exhibiting or illustrating that fact, I have but to say to the House, on behalf of the minority, that this morning, for the purpose of getting certain information which we deemed important, questions were propounded by telegraph to a witness in the city of New York, who was unable to attend. We have had no answers to those interrogatories yet. If the House gets any before its adjournment to-morrow, those answers must be subject to all the uncertainties of sending interrogatories, and receiving responses by telegraph. I will read the report. It is as follows:

The minority of the select committee appointed to investigate the alleged alterations in the bill which passed the House of Representatives granting public lands to the Territory of Minnesota, to aid in the construction of a railroad therein, &c., &c.

I. That an alteration was made in the bill mentioned in the resolution subsequent to its engrossment and passage by the House, and that the alteration was not merely clerical, but material, completely changing one of its most important features; that the bill which passed the Senate and was approved by the President, and is now considered to be a law, has never been acted on by the House of Representatives.

II. That the alteration was made by Mr. Sproule, the engrossing clerk, by the authority and under the directions of Mr. Forney, the Clerk of the House, without which the said enrolling clerk had previously refused to do so.

III. The next point of inquiry embraced in the resolution, and the only one under which the committee have encountered difficulties, is, "under what circumstances was such change made."

The testimony under this branch of the investigation, although voluminous, is yet incomplete, and we do not deem it proper to form conclusions, setting a willful fraud upon any party, upon partial or imperfect testimony, taken by the committee in great haste under the disadvantages which surround them at the close of the session. Besides, several witnesses, deemed important, reside at a great distance from the capital, and their attendance cannot now be procured. We therefore think that all the testimony taken, except as hereinafter mentioned, should be withheld from publication at this time, and that the committee should be authorized to continue its inquiries at the next session. A resolution to that effect is herewith reported. It is regarded as a matter of justice to the parties whom the testimony taken might tend to implicate in a fraudulent purpose, to withhold the evidence taken until a full, thorough, and deliberate investigation may be had touching their agency in the matter.

There are certain facts connected with this most extraordinary infringement upon the rights of the House, so clearly and conclusively proven, that we proceed to state them briefly and as intelligibly as we can in a hurried report.

Two distinct bills granting lands to Minnesota Territory have been acted upon by both branches of Congress. The first bill originated in and passed the Senate. It came to the House, and there failed about the 10th of March. Whilst this measure was pending before Congress, certain parties applied to the Territorial Legislature of Minnesota, then in session, for a charter for a company known as the "Minnesota and Northwestern Railroad Company." After a protracted controversy in the Legislature, this charter passed on the 4th of March, whilst the bill granting lands, and which afterwards failed, was before this House. That charter, as will be seen by reference, transferred in advance to said company all the lands which Congress might grant to the Territory, and, amongst other things, required the corporators to organize the company on or before the 1st of July. The nineteenth section provides that "if the corporators did not so organize, &c., then the governor, secretary, and treasurer of the Territory might select any other company to receive the benefit of said grant."

The first bill having failed in Congress, we now proceed to give a brief history of the second bill—that which was altered. We do this to throw light on the "circumstances" attending the alteration. The third section, (that which was altered,) as originally prepared and sent to the Committee on Public Lands, contained these words:

"That the said lands hereby granted to the said Territory, shall be subject to the disposal of any future Legislature thereof, for the purpose aforesaid, and no other; nor shall they inure to the benefit of any company heretofore constituted or organized."

The effect of this language would be, first, to place said railroad company in the power of a future Legislature as to the lands granted; secondly, to exclude it and all other companies constituted or organized.

Whilst this bill was being prepared, and was before the Committee on Public Lands, George W. Billings, one of the said corporators, was in Washington conferring with those who prepared it, for the purpose of having it so worded as to secure the grant to the said company.

The bill was in the charge of the Hon. Mr. STEVENS, as a member of the Committee on Public Lands. Before reporting the bill to the House, he, understanding that he had authority from the committee to do so, erased the word "future." The original draft, with this erasure, was put on its passage without having been printed, and those who took special interest in the matter supposed it was the identical bill sent into the committee, as Mr. S. had not advised them of the change. The bill passed in this House on the 20th of June. It was properly engrossed and sent to the Senate, where it was taken up and printed. When printed, it was found to contain the words, excluding all companies, "constituted or organized." The company already mentioned was therefore excluded by the bill. The word "or" was erased in the manner stated from the enrolled bill, and the word "and" inserted, and the same alteration was made in the original bill and the enrolled bill, which was afterwards approved by the President. The corporators were limited to the first of July to organize, and if organized prior to the passage of the bill, they would be excluded from the grant, unless the word "and" was thus substituted for "or." The bill thus altered passed the Senate June 28th, was approved by the President June 29th, and the company organized July 1st. That company now claims that the lands, by the terms of the act thus altered, inure to its benefit.

In view of these facts, we regard the immediate passage of an act to correct the terms of the grant as of the utmost importance. If such action is not had before the close of this session, it may be claimed that such rights to these lands have vested in the said company as cannot be taken away by future legislation. We cannot recommend a repeal of the grant, for the reason, that we do not think the laboring pioneers of Minnesota should be punished on account of wrongs to which they are not a party. Nor do we agree entirely to the bill proposed by the majority. In our judgment, the entire third section should be repealed, and such provisions substituted therefor, as will, beyond doubt, place the grant of land under the control of Legislatures hereafter to be chosen by the people, and prevent the transfer of such an important power to the Governor and other officers appointed by the Executive. This we regard as due to the principle of "popular sovereignty." Accordingly, we have reported such a bill.

It is due in justice to add that, as yet, no proof has been taken, nor have we any reason to believe that any such exists, to lead our judgments to the conclusion that either of the alterations was made or procured by any member or officer of either branch of Congress with a design to perpetrate any fraud, or to do any wrong; or through corrupt or criminal motives; or that any such member or officer was actuated by such motives in aiding the passage of the bill. Whether the action of Mr. Stevens and of Mr. Forney, resulting either from want of proper attention as to the effect of such an alteration, a disposition to accommodate others, or from negligence of duty, calls for any further action of the House, is for the House itself to decide. Whilst we are neither disposed nor prepared to deny the purity of the motive, we condemn the act as a culpable error. If such a system prevails, there can be no certainty or reliability in congressional action. There can be no safety to members under such a practice, because it falsifies the votes they give under the solemnities of their oath, by making them appear as voting for measures which they would have opposed. It brings odium upon Congress, and destroys public confidence in congressional proceedings.

The sanctity of the record should always be preserved, and those charged with it should be held to the most rigid accountability.

LEWIS D. CAMPBELL.

I concur in the foregoing report, except that I prefer the form of the bill recommended by the majority to that of the bill accompanying this report.

G. A. SIMMONS.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will now read the bill and resolution referred to:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the third section of an act entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," approved June 29, 1854, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2 And be it further enacted, That the lands granted to said Territory by virtue of the act aforesaid, shall not be subject to disposal under the provisions of any act heretofore passed by the Legislature of said Territory, nor shall any portion of the lands inure to the benefit of any company heretofore constituted or organized in said Territory, or elsewhere, but in future legislation shall have the right to dispose of the same for the construction of one or more railroads therein: Provided, That in no event shall the Governor, or other person in said Territory, have power to designate the company or companies to whose benefit said grant shall inure; and any railroad which may receive aid from said grant of land, shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from all toll or other charge on transportation of any property or troops of the United States. Nor shall any of the said lands be subject to private entry until the same shall have been first offered at public sale at the increased price.

The latter clause is the same as that in the original third section of the bill.

The resolutions reported are as follows:

Resolved, That the select committee appointed to investigate the alterations made to the bill "granting lands to the Territory of Minnesota, to aid in the construction of a railroad therein," be directed to continue their investigation at the next session of Congress.

Resolved, That the testimony of Messrs. Jones, Stevens, Forney, Sproule, Lee, Buck, and French, having reference to the facts immediately connected with the alteration made to the Minnesota land bill, be made part of the reports printed, and that the balance of the testimony taken be retained by the committee until their final report is submitted.

Mr. Speaker, I desire now to say one word by way of explanation of the difference between the two bills. This chartered company procured this charter from the Minnesota Legislature on the 4th of March, one of the corporators of which sought to have the bill pass here in a particular form. In that charter there is a section which provided that if the charter failed, the governor, treasurer, and secretary might have the power to designate the company to receive these lands. The bill reported by the majority of the committee takes away the power of that act, but it does not provide anything against the future, so that the very Legislature which gave that extraordinary power might be convened in an extra session, and pass an act in the future that would carry the same power to the Governor and those officers; for the bill reported by the majority simply guards against that which was done heretofore, while the bill reported by the minority provides that no such power over these lands shall be given to those officers; and the whole thing will be left subject to the action of the Legislature hereafter to be chosen by the people. That is the important distinction; and the second difference is this: The testimony which this committee has most assiduously sought for, in order to probe to the bottom the outside influences and motives which produced this important change, has not yet been had, but has been telegraphed for. It is for that reason that the minority think—although they do not ask to sit during the recess, and although every member of the committee would be glad to avoid the discharge of any such duty—it due to the integrity of Congress, and the inviolability of the records of this House, that the committee should act at some time in the future with the powers they have.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question before he sits down. What is the object of proposing to continue the sitting of this committee, when the minority as well as the majority of the committee have reported to the House their opinion that the alteration was immaterial, and that they exonerate all the parties who made it of fraudulent intent?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is testimony which might tend to some extent to implicate other parties, and might tend to implicate to some extent members of this House. The minority think it important that full testimony should be taken to wipe out even the suspicion that might be raised under the imperfect state of testimony, or, if not to wipe out, to fasten with some degree of certainty on the right persons the crime, if there has been any perpetrated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire in relation to the reception of the bill reported by the majority of the committee. Shall it be read a first and second time?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Before that is done, allow me to make one or two other explanations.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For the purpose of having the matter tested, I wish the gentleman from Kentucky first to allow the question to be taken on the bill proposed as a substitute—the bill of the minority. If that be voted down, then the question can be taken on the bill reported by the majority.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire the gentleman from Kentucky to permit me one moment. I wish to appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] to withdraw his objection to the appointment of a committee of conference on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. He is aware that there is a large number of amendments on which the two Houses disagree. Then there are the army bill, the navy bill, the post office appropriation bill, all behind the one which he speaks of, and which he is desirous of getting up. It will take a considerable portion of the remaining time of the session for the committee of conference to act upon the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill; and if he will withdraw his objection, and permit the committee of conference to be appointed, all his purposes can be answered.

Mr. HAVEN. I will answer that appeal in a moment, by saying that if my friends are willing to do it, I am desirous—inasmuch as the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill has got ahead of this other appropriation bill—that a committee of conference should be appointed. If they are agreeable to this—

Several MEMBERS. Yes, yes.

Mr. HAVEN. But I insist that I will not consent to any action on the other appropriation bills. I will withdraw my objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama, if that is agreeable to the House.

The SPEAKER. Then if there be no other objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama, a committee of conference will be appointed.

There being no objection, the following named gentlemen were appointed a committee of conference, to meet a similar committee on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill: Messrs. HOUSTON, HAVEN, and HENDRICKS.

Mr. HUNT. I rise to a question of privilege. I do not know that it is competent for a committee of conference to correct an error made in this House. I understand that an amendment to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, reported to have been non-concurred in, was concurred in. Now, I desire the correction to be made in the proper place by the proper person.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in reply to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. HUNT,] would say that that subject was investigated. However, the gentleman has submitted no motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. There are one or two words of explanation which I wish to offer.

Mr. HUNT. Did I understand the Chair to say that I had made no motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood the gentleman, and so remarked, in order to call his attention to it.

Mr. HUNT. Then I wish to be distinctly understood. From what I have been told here, I have learned that no motion is necessary, and that action may be taken on this matter by the committee of conference. I am alluding to an amendment which passed in relation to marine hospitals. I have been informed by the gentleman from Alabama that the amendment of the Senate has been recorded as non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER. By a mistake, such is the fact; a Committee of the Whole House agreed to the amendment in question; but, as has been conceded this morning on all sides, and as is within the recollection of the Chair, by some mistake in numbering the amendment, it was reported to the House as having been non-concurred in. It is competent, however, for the committee of conference to settle it; and the Chair supposes that there will be no difficulty about it.

Mr. HUNT. Then I am satisfied.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is, perhaps, due to the clerks—

Mr. HUNT. I believe I have the floor. I wish it distinctly understood, that an error committed in this House must be corrected in this House. It can be done by unanimous consent, and I ask that it may be done, and let the bill go in its proper shape to the committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to inform the gentleman from Louisiana that the bill has been already passed upon by the Senate in the shape in which it was sent to them, with the error in it. The Senate have adhered to all of their amendments, and it has been sent back from the Senate, with a request that a committee of conference be appointed on the part of the House. The bill is now in possession of the House, and it will tend to delay if the course indicated by the gentleman should be taken.

Mr. HUNT. Understanding that has been done which I desire to have effected, I will not now submit a motion.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to suggest whether it would not be in the power of the House to recede from its disagreement as to that amendment, and then appoint a committee of conference as to the rest of the amendments? That would settle all the difficulty.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say a word which perhaps is due to the clerks of the House, who have had the management of this bill. It is this: The numbers which the printers placed opposite to the amendments do not correspond with the numbers in the original bill from the Senate, and in that way this confusion has crept in; and it is an error which may be corrected without the least impropriety by the conference committee. As it now stands, the House disagreed to the amendment; and when the bill went back to the Senate the Senate insisted upon the amendment; and the committee of conference can settle the matter according to the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The House has already ordered a committee of conference; and this subject can only be reached in the House by reconsidering that vote.

ALTERATION OF THE RECORD—AGAIN.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not intend to detain the committee more than a minute or two, to make an explanation founded upon the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] in regard to the governor, auditor, and treasurer of Minnesota. For the reason which I explained when I was offering the report of the majority, the majority thought proper to insert a second section to the bill, to prevent these executive officers from indicating any company, in case the legal result of what has taken place should be that the company, as organized, has failed to comply with the charter. But if the House chooses to make a grant of land to Minnesota, the majority of the committee did not propose to make a proposition to the House to fix and limit the territorial government from indicating the manner in which that Territory should dispose of that grant. That is the difference between the suggestion of my friend from Ohio and the balance of the committee; and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SIMMONS,] who signed the report of the gentleman from Ohio, states that he prefers the bill offered by the majority of the committee.

One other word. Your committee have been in session—and I am instructed to say so—for more than a week. The subject matter of investigation was simple and direct. They could have exhausted the subject in one or two days. They believe they did, but some latitude was given, and a great deal of matter is contained in that record, which, while it does not reflect upon anybody, is irrelevant to the matter in hand.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] stated something in regard to the names of some gentlemen of this House having been mentioned in that testimony, and that he deems it proper that the committee should stand over until the next session. It is true that the name of a member of this House was mentioned in the course of that testimony; but not upon the knowledge of any party concerned, or bearing directly upon the fact of the alterations. In the course of the evidence, the name of some individual in New York was mentioned; and it was stated that he might answer two or three questions touching the matter in connection with which his name was mentioned; but the committee have directed that these interrogatories shall be put to these persons, and they have authorized me to ask that their answers, as soon as they can be obtained, shall be filed with the evidence. But your committee did not suppose they would have any material bearing upon the matter in hand. I am instructed to say, that the committee have examined the matter submitted to them by the House thoroughly, and the facts as to who made the alterations, as far as they have been able to ascertain them, are fully spread out in the evidence. The majority of the committee have not felt authorized to inquire into any matter not pertaining to the matter in hand. They believe that no member of the House would be implicated by any further investigations; and, therefore, they recommend that the evidence, in full, be printed, together with whatever answers may be received to the interrogatories we have sent to the person to whom I have referred in New York, which are expected to-morrow morning, and that the committee may be discharged from the further examination of the subject.

And, now, in reference to the bill reported by the majority of the committee, I will state that four of the committee concur in reporting the bill which I read to the House. My friend from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] however, prefers the one which he has read to the House. By reference to the terms of the resolution raising the committee, the House will observe that the committee were simply instructed to inquire into the change in the text of the bill, as to who made the alteration, and under what circumstances it was done. They might very properly have confined themselves simply to a report responsive to the resolution. They doubted for some time whether, under the instructions of the House, and being a select committee, they had the right to report any recommendations for the action of the House.

MESSAGES FROM THE SENATE AND PRESIDENT.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that they had passed the following bills of the House without amendment:

- A bill for the relief of John Frink;
- A bill for the relief of civil township of Marion, in the county of Mercer, Ohio;
- A bill for the relief of James Walsh;
- A bill for the relief of W. D. Porter of the United States Navy;
- A bill for the relief of Benjamin Hammond, of the State of New York;
- A bill for the relief of Henry W. Halsted;
- A bill for the relief of Jesse R. Faulkner, of Missouri; and
- A bill for the relief of John McVea and John F. Kneely, of Louisiana.

Also, that they had passed a resolution suspending, for the remainder of the session, the 16th and 17th joint rules, in which he had been directed to ask the concurrence of the House.]

[A message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, his Private Secretary.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move that the message which has just been received be taken up and read.

There being no objection, the Speaker presented the following message:

WASHINGTON, August 2, 1854.

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit to you a copy of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, negotiated at Washington on the 5th of June last. It has been concurred in by the Senate, and I have no doubt that the ratifications of it will soon be exchanged. It will be observed that by the provision of the fifth article the treaty does not go into operation until after legislation thereon by the respective parties.

Should Congress, at its present session, pass the requisite law on the part of the United States to give effect to its stipulations, the fishing grounds on the coasts of the British North American Provinces, from which our fishermen have been heretofore excluded, may be opened to them during the present season, and apprehended collisions between them and British fishermen avoided.

For this reason, and for the purpose of securing to the citizens of the United States, at the earliest practicable period, other advantages which it is believed they will derive from this treaty, I recommend the passage by Congress, at the present session, of such a law as is necessary on the part of the United States to give effect to its provisions.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

On motion by Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, the communication was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.]

ALTERATION OF THE RECORD—AGAIN.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, (resuming.) Mr. Speaker, I had only a word or two to offer when the interruption occurred. It is impossible for the committee to make the House acquainted with the testimony spread on the record, or to go into a discussion of it now. They can only state their opinions and conclusions, and the House must take such action as it thinks proper on the recommendations from the committee.

I am instructed to say that four of the committee prefer the form of the bill which has been submitted by the majority; that they believe they have examined all the evidence material to the alteration in the text of the bill which can be obtained; that the only witness who was, by any individual on the committee, supposed to be material in any form, or who could give any testimony, not touching the alteration, but touching other matter which had been introduced, was in the city of New York and unable to be here; and that to gratify the gentleman whose name had been mentioned, the committee had directed interrogatories to be put to him, although the whole of it was founded on hearsay, and have asked that that shall be printed with the testimony, when it comes. Under those circumstances a majority of your committee ask that the evidence, including the answer to their interrogatories, shall be published for the satisfaction of the House; and that they may be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

In regard to the bill offered by the majority, as I was remarking, your committee thought, at one time, that it was proper for them to confine themselves to the resolution under which they were appointed, and to report simply the fact of the alteration, by whom made, the circumstances under which it was made, and then let the House act on the report as it may think proper. But, inasmuch as a change in the word indicated had been made after the bill was engrossed and had passed the House, your committee supposed that they did not transcend the spirit of the resolution under which they were appointed, by offering a proposition to the House to put it in statu quo ante bellum, that the House, if it chose, might pass a supplemental act, which restored it to the condition in which it was. It is not for us to volunteer any action to the House.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky, that he had better call for the previous question, and let us pass this bill. I for one, am disposed to do it.

Mr. HUNT. The report ought not to be passed over by this House without an expression of opinion on the part of members. I for one, desire to express my opinions on the conduct of the Clerk of this House and the member from Michigan.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the House will give me its attention for a few minutes, I will briefly state the reasons why the minority of the committee think that further testimony should be taken. Now, I put it to each and every member of that committee, and each and every member of this House, whether the reports of the majority and minority of the committee do not show that a gross fraud has been perpetrated by the interpolation in an act of this House, and I would put it to the House whether either report settles the fraud upon any person, and whether, under such circumstances, and especially when the committee has had only a few days in which to pursue its investigations, and those at the close of the session, it is not due to Congress and the country that we should make some further effort to ferret out the originator of the fraud whether he be a member, an officer, or an outsider. Why, sir, this Minnesota bill makes a larger grant of the public domain than any bill ever passed by Congress

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 132.

before. Millions of acres, by the insertion of the word "and" in the place of the word "or," were taken away from the control of the Legislature of that Territory, and given to an incorporated company which had procured a charter from the Legislature. I appeal to the honorable gentleman who has just taken his seat, to say if there is anything that we have said in the report which fastens suspicion upon any member of this House? But neither of the reports goes so far as to say that there is nothing that does not fasten suspicion in some other quarter.

Mr. JONES, of New York. Will the gentleman from Ohio inform me whether the committee know who are the directors in that company; and if they do, will he not inform the House, so that we may better judge in relation to this matter?

Mr. CAMPBELL. By reference to the charter, which is made a part of the testimony, it will be seen that the corporators are the Messrs. Schuyler, of New York.

Mr. JONES. Which Schuyler?

Mr. CAMPBELL. George Schuyler, Ketchum, &c.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio. It is perfectly manifest, from the reports of the majority and minority, that a fraud has been perpetrated, and I desire to be informed who committed it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The committee could not come to a positive conclusion of sufficient strength to authorize us to make a solemn report in regard to that matter to this House, for the reason that we had not time to go thoroughly into an investigation of all the matters connected with this affair. There are parties living in the Territory of Minnesota whose testimony, I now state to the House, I believe to be important to a thorough understanding of this subject. So much for the proposition to extend the investigation.

Now a word, and but a word, as to the proposition to take away the power by which one or two or three officers of the Territory of Minnesota may designate the company to which this vast domain shall be given. The bill of the majority proposes simply to nullify the act heretofore passed giving them that power. There is nothing in the bill of the majority which would preclude the Legislature, composed of the very identical members, from assembling and again passing an act of that kind. It is for that reason, and for the purpose of guarding the rights of the people there, that I have provided in the bill of the minority that the people shall elect a Legislature in future which shall decide in what way this vast domain shall be disposed of. Such, let me say, was evidently the intention of the parties who first prepared that bill, and sent it to the Committee on Public Lands.

I now move, Mr. Speaker, that the bill reported by the minority, be taken as a substitute for that of the majority; and on that motion I ask the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his call for the previous question, to enable me to make one or two remarks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw the call for the previous question, as requested.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Ohio speaks of the bill as giving away millions of acres of the Territory of Minnesota. Now, I want to ask that gentleman one question—I am posted up on it myself, and, inasmuch as I have voted for this bill, I desire that my vote shall always be estimated according to its worth. What I want to know from him is: He states that the bill grants some millions of acres. Has he ever calculated the amount really granted by it? If not, I can tell him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I should like to know.

Mr. COBB. Then I suppose you have not made a close calculation: have you?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No.

Mr. COBB. Well, then, that the thing may go properly to the country, I will state the quantity of land granted by that bill. I was myself of the same opinion as that entertained by the gentleman from Ohio in relation to the quantity of land granted under that bill. But I have an estimate that was made by a properly qualified person, from which I learn that, if the railroad track be run in a direct line, the quantity of land granted will be less than six hundred thousand acres.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, that is no small quantity.

Mr. COBB. One more suggestion. According to the bill, if the track be constructed meandering between certain places, the company may get more than that quantity of land; but I do not believe that in any case they can get more than seven hundred thousand acres.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I further withdraw the demand which I made for the previous question for my colleague on the committee, [Mr. BARRY,] who I understand wishes to make some observations.

Mr. BARRY. I wish to make a few remarks to the House on this subject; but I promise to occupy very little of its time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, in the chair.) The Chair desires to state the question before the House, that there may be no mistake or misapprehension. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] made a report from the committee, and concluded that report by making a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the subject, and to print the report and testimony. That is, in the opinion of the Chair, the question pending before the House. The Chair thinks that the question on the bill read by the gentleman, and the motion to discharge the committee, and to print the report and testimony, cannot both be pending at the same time. The question, therefore, before the House is the motion to discharge the committee, and to print the report, including the testimony.

Mr. MILLSON, (interrupting.) I desire to ask a question of the Chair. I desire to ask the Chair whether, if the main question shall be ordered, it will not bring the House to vote on the report of the committee alone? And will it be in order afterwards to introduce any resolution in reference to the conduct either of the Clerk or of anybody else? And will it not cut off the motion to postpone the further consideration of this whole question to the next session of Congress? I wish to be informed on these questions before we proceed to vote on the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair is of opinion that the pending question is the motion made by the committee through their organ, the gentleman from Kentucky, to discharge the committee, and to print the report and minutes of the testimony. If the previous question shall be sustained on that, and if the vote be taken, the question will be disposed of.

Mr. MILLSON. Then it is not in order to move a postponement of the question until we can have read the evidence, so as to understand the question fully?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not, if the previous question be sustained, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. BARRY. The question which the committee was chiefly to examine, was in reference to a certain interlineation and alteration in records, and the circumstances under which it had been made. The examination of that involved but few facts, and the evidence of but few persons. But in going into the investigation, we made the discovery, as was stated by the gentleman from Michigan, that the alteration was requested by a certain person outside of the House. Then the committee proceeded to inquire from that person and others what was his motive in making the request. That is the outside portion of this testimony; and if we were to ferret it to the bottom, as we are called upon to do, it would take the committee six months; because we would have to examine every man who had had a conversation upon the subject, or who had had anything to do with the subject, directly or indirectly.

As to the first part of the examination, we were enabled to report upon it in full, and unanimously, and to state that there was no corrupt design on the part of any member of this House, or any officer of the House. Now, shall we stop with the report which we have made, and not let it go to the country, because we cannot with absolute certainty tell whether or not the motives of the person who suggested the change outside of the House were criminal? This House cannot, of course, understand the question without the testimony; and when they see it, they will discover that a large portion of it is irrelevant. We did not know what was to be proved, or what witnesses were to be called for examination. When a lawyer examines a case, the party for whom he appears tells him what is to be proved, and what witnesses shall be called, so that he knows who to ask and what to ask. But in this case the committee had no such aid. We were entirely in the dark. When we examined a person, and he alluded to another in mutual connection, we had to send for him to explain what the other had alluded to. Thus we were groping in the dark in relation to the testimony; and were the committee to sit six months, they would still be groping in the dark.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] has said that there are witnesses in Minnesota who were not examined. That gentleman said to the committee, and perhaps truly, that if we should take their testimony, we should elicit important information. I do not know but what we should, for I do not know who has any knowledge about this matter. In examining them, we should grope in the dark, as we have been all through on the examination.

There is one witness in New York whom it was thought necessary to examine. The Sergeant-at-Arms sent a deputy after him eight or nine days ago. But he is sick, and cannot come. In a letter from him he says he knows nothing upon the subject which will criminate anybody in reference to the matter before us. We have now sent to him, by telegraph, certain interrogatories, and the answer to them will be received by mail to-morrow morning, we hope.

Mr. HIBBARD. I desire to ask a question. Am I right in understanding that neither the minority or majority report impute improper motives to any officer or member of this House?

Mr. BARRY. I understand it is so. It is certainly so in the majority report, and I think it is in the other. I say that all further examination will result as that which we have heretofore had. We shall be groping around in the dark to find out something, perhaps to find nothing material, and perhaps to find out nothing. For instance, the testimony of Mr. Hunt was hearsay. On examining one witness, he said, I was informed by Mr. Hunt that such and such things are facts. Now, we inquire of Mr. Hunt if that is so. All the information we can get from him will be as to the truth of what has been asserted by another witness. That is all. The gentleman in reference to whom such statements were made came forward and openly and frankly denied their truth.

Now, sir, I say, why protract this investigation into another session, when we have no specific charges before us against any individual upon which we can act? It would be merely to beat about to find intimations upon which we can obtain evidence. In my own opinion, there is no reasonable prospect that any further material can be found upon which to act. We have had before us the men who are most deeply concerned in the matter, and who, if there has been any corrupt proceedings in reference to the matter, know it, and refuse to divulge it.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) I propose, if the gentleman will allow me, that by common consent we should first act upon the bills reported by the different branches of the committee, then upon the resolutions reported by them, and lastly, upon ordering the reports and testimony to be printed. If there is no objection, I will make that proposition, and I do it for the reason that it is important; it has been so regarded by both branches of the committee, that there should be some immediate action in reference to the matter. I ask the unanimous consent that the bills reported by the majority and minority be taken up and acted upon.

Mr. BARRY. I will not object, if it is the wish of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I do not give my consent, unless with the understanding that I be heard upon the subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I certainly shall not object to that.

The SPEAKER. It can be only done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I object, if the effect will be to cut off the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARRY] from finishing his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to state here that the minority of a committee have no right to make an independent report, except by unanimous consent. The proper course would be, when the bill reported by the majority comes up, for the gentleman from Ohio to offer his as a substitute.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I believe it was the understanding of the House that both bills should be reported.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I desire to know distinctly whether it is the understanding that I shall be heard upon these bills?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly it is.

The SPEAKER. The motion to discharge the committee, and to print the reports and testimony, is first in order.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I hope the proposition to act upon these bills at the present time will not be agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Why, sir, it requires unanimous consent, and I have objected until my friend from Mississippi shall have an opportunity to conclude his remarks. If the gentleman from Georgia desires also to speak, I shall be happy to hear him.

Mr. BARRY. I simply desire to say, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Cobb,] that the land donated by this Minnesota bill will amount to about five hundred and seventy-six thousand acres.

Now, one word in reference to this railroad company. A prejudice has been created against them in consequence of a statement which has been made that the Schuylers are connected with it. I desire to say, that the Schuylers were connected with the company as it was originally incorporated; but since that time the company has been reorganized, and their names are not, in any way, connected with the corporators, nor do they own one dollar of the stock.

Mr. JONES, of New York. Will the gentleman be good enough to read the names of the corporators?

Mr. BARRY. I do not know their names.

Mr. JONES. Then I ask the Clerk to read them. I believe their names are in the bill, or the report of the committee.

Mr. BARRY. I do not think their names are there.

Mr. JONES. The names of the original corporators are there, are they not?

Mr. BARRY. The names of the original corporators are there, but not those of the present company.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the names of the original corporators may be read.

Mr. DISNEY. I object to the reading.

Mr. HIBBARD. Will the gentleman allow me one word?

Mr. BARRY. Certainly.

Mr. HIBBARD. I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman's remarks, but merely to remind the House that there are now eight general appropriation bills unfinished and pending between this House and the Senate. We have agreed to adjourn to-morrow at noon.

[Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the names of the corporators of the Minnesota and Northwestern Railroad Company. The Clerk then read the names, as follows: Robert Schuyler, William P. Burrall, George L. Schuyler, Morris Ketchum, Edward Bement, R. B. Mason, and George W. Billings, of the city of

New York; Erastus Corning, of the city of Albany; John W. Forbes, Curtis B. Raymond, and John Gardner, of the city of Boston; W. B. S. Moore, of the city of Bangor, Maine; Frederick S. Jesup, of Dubuque, Iowa; Franklin Steele, Charles W. Borup, Orange Walker, Alexander Wilkin, Willis A. Gorman, Alexander Ramsey, James Stinson, and J. Travis Rosser, of the Territory of Minnesota.

Mr. BARRY. Those are the names of the original corporators. That company is now organized, and has been since the 1st of July. I do not know the names of the directors, yet it is testified that the Schuylers are not of them, and that they had no stock or connection with the company as organized.

Mr. PRATT. I will state that William P. Burrall, whose name has been mentioned among others, is as respectable a gentleman as lives in New York, or anywhere else. I have nothing to say of the others.

Mr. BARRY. I hope that the House will take no action on this subject which will prevent the reports of the majority and minority of the committee, as well as the accompanying testimony, from being printed. The House cannot act intelligently on this subject until it has examined the testimony beyond this one point, that they know that there was a change made in the language of the bill. We can, without further evidence, proceed to reinstate the language of the bill as it passed this body. We cannot go any further than we have safely, unless we have the reports of the committee, and the testimony accompanying them, be printed and examined. I hope that no action will be taken which will in any way tend to prevent the testimony, as presented by the majority and minority of the committee, from being at once printed. I trust that the gentleman will persevere in his motion, and that the reports from the committee be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the passage of the bill which has been reported from the committee. That bill provides that "or" be reinstated for "and," but I do not think that the alteration referred to is one of a very material character. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] to whose report and remarks I have listened attentively, speaks of a very great fraud having been committed. I cannot perceive it. The words in the bill, as it was read when it passed this House, were "nor shall they inure to the benefit of any company heretofore constituted or organized." The word "and" has been substituted for the word "or," so that it now reads "shall not inure to the benefit of any company hereafter constituted and organized." And in this way it read when it passed the Senate. Gentlemen seem to consider the word "constituted" as equivalent to the word "incorporated" or chartered. This, in my judgment, is a radical error. When a charter is granted, corporators named, the company is not constituted until the corporators meet, accept the charter, and form themselves into a body-politic. Until this be done, no corporate company can be said to be constituted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Whatever may be the legal effect of the word, it is very evident, from the proof, that that company was not organized until the 1st day of July; and, not being organized, the insertion of the word "and" would make the land inure to its benefit.

Mr. STEPHENS. I know nothing about these outside matters. I know nothing of the organization of any company which may claim the benefits of this act. I look at the language of the law as it passed the House, and how far the interest of any company or anybody can possibly be affected by the alteration which has been made. The gentleman from Ohio speaks of a company that was not organized until 1st July; well, it could not have been constituted either; for constituted and organized in this connection must mean the same thing; and it does seem to me to be very immaterial whether we say "constituted and organized," or "constituted or organized." This I say in reply to so much of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] as represented a great fraud as having been committed by the officers of the House, or somebody. It seems to me that the alteration, under the circumstances stated in the report, might have been deemed immaterial, and made without subjecting the persons concerned in the least degree to any imputation of wrong. The committee has exonerated all parties.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the parties themselves regarded it as immaterial, why did they go to the extent of procuring an erasure and change in an enrolled bill of this House? The question is this: If the parties to this transaction regarded this thing in the light in which you do, as immaterial, why did they go to the extent of having the word "or" erased from an enrolled bill of this House, and inserting in its place the word "and"?

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not know that "the parties" did it. I know nothing of the parties, or any parties.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Somebody did it. Somebody procured it.

Mr. STEPHENS. From the evidence which has been read here, I understand that a member upon this floor, who had the bill in charge, moved this amendment, or verbal alteration, in committee, which was carried, and he supposed that it was so read in the House. He may have regarded it as a very immaterial matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no doubt that the gentleman who procured the alteration to be made after the bill left the House, may have regarded it as immaterial; but, on the other hand, I have no doubt that the outside influence that sought to make the erasure did regard it as material.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am not speaking of outside influences, for I know nothing about them. The gentleman speaks of "parties," but I do not think that we should consider the position of any "parties" who may claim benefits under the act. I look to the record before us. On and from that I speak when I say that the alteration seems to me to be verbal and immaterial. If I were to go beyond this record, and speak of what I hear outside, I am inclined to think that the whole of this affair has been got up by some parties outside of this House, and whose object is to break down this bill and get the land hereafter themselves.

Mr. CAMPBELL. A committee was appointed to investigate all the facts and circumstances connected with this matter; and they have done it laboriously and to the best of their ability, in the short time they have had.

Mr. STEPHENS. What does the report state above any outside influences?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is expressly stated in one of the reports that Mr. Billings, one of the corporators under the charter granted by the Minnesota Territory, was here before the bill went to the Committee on Public Lands seeking to get it couched in such a manner as to carry the grant to that particular company, and in such terms as to give no power over the grant to future Legislatures.

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, sir, there is no evidence that I have heard that he succeeded in his wishes. I know nothing about him, however, or any other members of that or any other company which wishes an interest in the grant. But my object in rising was to call the attention of the House to the character of the alteration which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] calls a "great fraud."

The gentleman argued as if "constituted" was the same thing as "incorporated." And, inasmuch as a particular company had been incorporated, but not "organized" at the time the bill passed, he argued that the alteration was made for their benefit. If constituted be equivalent to incorporated in this connection, then "or organized," in the original draft of the bill, was nothing but sheer nonsense. The words are "any company heretofore constituted or organized." The use of the words "or organized" here must have been resorted to for the purpose of being more explicit in the meaning of "constituted," and not for the purpose of designating another class; for suppose it had read "any company heretofore incorporated or organized, who does not see that with this reading "or organized" is perfect nonsense? No company could have been organized before it had been incorporated. And if "constituted" means in this bill "chartered" or "incorporated," then "or organized" makes like nonsense. But read, as I suppose the draughtsman meant it should be, it makes good sense.

I make these observations, Mr. Speaker, to show the perfect immateriality of the alteration, as it seems to me the reports of the committee remove all blame or fraudulent intent from any person connected with it. This is my understanding of their reports. The only other question is, whether anybody has been injured by it? I think not; for, in my opinion, it is perfectly immaterial whether the words in the bill were "constituted and organized," or whether they were "constituted or organized." They mean the same thing, so far as I can understand.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I may state to the gentleman from Georgia, in regard to other influences, that it is proved that after the bill was printed in the Senate, and after the word "or" was discovered to exist in it instead of the word "and," Mr. Billings, one of the corporators of this company, did go to a Senator and appeal to him to have this alteration made; and that is the origin of the suggestion, so far as the committee have it in evidence. It came from one of the corporators of this company to a Senator, who, doubtless not supposing that there was anything improper in it, applied to the Clerk of the Senate to know whether the alteration could be made, and then they came round to the Clerk of the House, and the alteration was procured. The desire to have the alteration is traced by the evidence to Mr. Billings, one of the corporators named in the charter. He must have a purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have already stated that I know nothing about Mr. Billings or any of these corporators. I know nothing of the evidence on that point—I understand the report—I spoke of that. But the statement of the gentleman amounts to this, that Mr. Billings requested a Senator to have a change of verbiage made in—I suppose—a parliamentary manner. This it seems it was thought had been done in the committee in this House, and the change was made before the bill passed the Senate. But it does not concern me how the alteration was made, as it was not made for the purpose of fraud, nor, in my opinion, contains fraud in it. There is no man, I suppose, in the House, who would not have given his consent to the alteration, if his attention had been called to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit me, I will explain that the alteration could not have been made in a parliamentary way, for this reason: It was then about the 28th of June; this charter would have become void on the first of July. If the word "and" had been substituted in a parliamentary way in the Senate, the bill would have come back to this House with an amendment. It would have gone to the Speaker's table, and the first of July would have elapsed before it became a law.

Mr. STEPHENS. Again the gentleman is assuming all his facts. If the "and" had been substituted for the "or" in the Senate, I question if there is a man in this House who would have failed to have given assent immediately to the correction. Because I defy any gentleman to look into it, and say whether there is any difference between the two words, in the connection in which they are used. I make these remarks to show that—as I think—there has been "great cry and no wool" in this matter. So far as I am concerned, I have no doubt in the world that the bill would have been passed as readily with one word in it as with the other.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am very much inclined to believe, with the gentleman from Georgia, that the substitution of the word "and" for the word "or" is quite as immaterial as he supposes it to be. But whether it be material or immaterial, it seems to me that it is impossible for us to act on this subject any further than to order the reports of facts made both by the majority and minority of the committee to be printed. Now, that is the very thing that I think the House ought to do. It is very uncertain as to what the effect of the alteration is. It seems, from the opinions of the majority and minority of the committee, that the gentleman who originally reported the bill, intended to have reported it with the word "and" in the connection in question. He supposed—or some of those having interest in it supposed—that it would be a material alteration. The gentleman who had the bill in charge believed the word "and" to have been in the bill. And I suppose there are not three members on the floor of the House who knew, at the time the bill was passed, whether it contained the word "and," or the word "or" in this connection. Nor do I suppose that there are three gentlemen on the floor who cared whether it was one or the other word, or to what company the benefits or advantages of the grant should inure.

But if there is a material difference in the bill by the substitution of the word "and" for the word "or," I beg the House to remember that by the passage of this act, and by the subsequent or prior action of the Legislature of the Territory of Minnesota, rights may have been derived under that grant. Obligations may have been assumed, money may have been paid, innocent parties may have come in and been deceived by the passage of this law. If so, I hold it would not be right, and it would not be in the power of this House, to withdraw that grant. I do not know how these things are, but it has been said here, upon the floor of this House, by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. BARRY,] and by others, that the original corporators in that act are not the parties now interested in the grant which has been made by Congress. Do you know, does this House know, has the committee examined the fact, whether this grant has passed into the hands of innocent purchasers, or whether its benefits inure to the original corporators, or to the parties who have been implicated in procuring this fraud?

Sir, it is doubtful whether fraud could be implied against any persons in reference to this matter, when it is shown, upon the floor of this House, that a member of this House, acting upon his own belief as to the immateriality of this alteration, and designing to carry out the object of the committee, made this alteration innocently, and when the reports of both committees exonerate all parties of any intention of fraud. It seems to me that if any correction is to be made in this bill, it ought to be made according to the intention of the committee which reported the bill, when the intention of the House did not appear to be one way or the other, except that the bill passed the House in a condition not intended by those who reported it to the House. I think, sir, in order to perfect the examination of this question, the passage of those bills—if they are to be passed at all—ought to be postponed until they are deliberately examined; and, therefore, I shall move, at the proper time, to refer this matter to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I was going to inquire, in advance of that proposition, and in order to dispose of this matter, that we may proceed to the other pressing business before the House, whether the motion pending is not that the reports be printed, and that the committee be discharged?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Then I insist upon it, and call the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that unanimous consent was given to take up first the bills and resolution reported before that motion was made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand it. The Chair stated that the pending question before the House was the proposition made by the committee through their organ, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] to discharge the committee, and print the report and evidence. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Kentucky as suggesting any other question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No sir.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I do not propose to make any motion now; but when it shall be in order to do so, I shall move to refer this subject to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in order that it may be postponed until the next session, when it can be deliberately examined.

ERROR IN FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. One of the members of this House, upon the enrolling committee, has called my attention to an error which has, by some means, crept into the fortification bill. The amendment which was adopted by the House, appropriating $20,000 to preserve the fortification sites, &c., not mentioned in the bill, is, by the omission of the word "not," made to apply to the fortifications included in the bill, and to which the appropriation was not intended to refer. It now reads: "For contingent expenses of fortifications herein mentioned." It should have read: "For contingent expenses of fortifications not herein mentioned." The object was to preserve the sites, and keep in repair such fortifications as we had made no specific appropriations for in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it the unanimous consent of the House that the bill shall be correctly enrolled?

Mr. GIDDINGS. I object.

[Cries of "Too late."]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the objection comes too late, and will direct the correction to be made.

ALTERATION OF THE RECORD—AGAIN.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. While I think the time of the House is exceedingly precious at this period of the session, and as I trust that Congress will not prolong its session beyond to-morrow morning, as I believe we can transact the necessary business of the House by that time, with proper diligence, I move the previous question upon the proposition before the House.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire of the Chair if the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is divisible, so that the question may first be taken upon the motion to print, and then upon the motion to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the subject? I am willing that the reports and testimony shall be printed, but I am not willing that the committee shall be discharged without further investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, if the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee prevails, and the matter is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the committee will not be discharged from the consideration of the subject.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not understand the gentleman from Tennessee as making that motion.

Mr. STANTON. I have not made any such motion. I gave notice that when the bills reported by the committee came up for consideration, if I could get the opportunity, I should move to refer them to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but I have no wish to give the reports that direction.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask the Speaker, that the House may correctly understand the condition of the business before us, if the motion pending is not that submitted by myself, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the reports and testimony be printed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the motion now pending.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. What will be the effect of the previous question upon the motion?

The SPEAKER. It will be to bring the House to a direct vote upon the matter under consideration.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Will the ordering of the previous question bring the House to a vote upon the bills reported by the committee, as well as upon the reports and testimony reported therein?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote must be first upon disposing of the reports and testimony, and the House will decide as to its action upon the bills when they come up.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Certainly, the bills will be brought before the House as soon as the reports are disposed of.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put, being upon Mr. BRECKINRIDGE's motion to discharge the committee, and to print the report and testimony.

Mr. CAMPBELL demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STUART, of Michigan, and WESTBROOK were appointed.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were ordered—forty members voting therefor.

Mr. SKELTON. If the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, will the bill be brought before us for our action?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair may not be presiding when that question arises. The bill is not now before the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would ask the Speaker whether, if the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and the reports be ordered to be printed, it is not in the power of the House to act on the bill which is proposed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated several times that he may not be presiding over the body when this question arises. His opinion, however, is that the bill is not before the House, and that it can only get in by unanimous consent, or a suspension of the rules, because it is not within the provisions of the resolution creating and fixing the duties of the committee. The Chair may be wrong, but that is his decision.

The question was then taken on Mr. BRECKINRIDGE's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 95, nays 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bliss, Boock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chastain, Chisman, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Curtis, John G. Davis, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edgerton, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Green, Greenwood, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Latham, Lindsley, Macdonald, McDougal, McMullin, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Nichols, Oids, Orr, Packer, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Russell, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stanton, Straub, David Stuart, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walsh, Wells, Westbrook, and Hendrick B. Wright—95.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskey, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Cullom, Dick, Eastman, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Farley, Faulkner, Flagler, Giddings, Goode, Goodrich, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hill, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, John Perkins, Powell, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Rufin, Sabin, Sage, Simmons, Skelton, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Wade, Walley, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—73.

So the motion was agreed to.

REPEAL OF THE MINNESOTA LAND BILL.

The SPEAKER, (who here resumed the chair.) The Chair is of opinion that the bills reported from the majority and minority of the committee are before the House, and in this shape: Without objection a bill was reported from the majority of the committee, and without objection the minority made a report, and moved a substitute for the majority's bill. Under the operation of the previous question, the question will first be on reading the bill reported from the majority of the committee a second time.

Mr. ORR. Does the previous question operate on the bills which have been reported from the committee?

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put, the second reading of the bill reported from the majority is under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. BARRY. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee was discharged from the further consideration of this subject, and by which the reports and accompanying testimony were ordered to be printed; and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I agree entirely with the Chair that the two bills are properly before the House, they being portions of the majority and minority reports; but I did not suppose that the previous question operated on the bills. I rose for the purpose of moving to strike out the second section of the bill reported from the majority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been read a second time. By unanimous consent, both reports were made, and each, among other things, contained a proposition in the form of a bill. The bills were read the first time, but neither of them has been read a second time. The gentleman from Ohio has moved his as a substitute for that reported by the majority.

Mr. ORR. Then, when the bill is read a second time, the previous question will be exhausted?

The SPEAKER. It will.

The bill was read a second time.

Mr. ORR. I understand that the substitute moved by the gentleman from Ohio is now before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ORR. It is in order to move an amendment to the bill reported by the majority.

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. ORR. Then I move to strike out the second section of that bill, so that the bill formerly passed may be left in the condition in which it passed this body, and so that if any fraud has been perpetrated, those who have perpetrated it will derive no advantage from it. I make the motion, and I demand the previous question upon it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What will be the effect of the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The effect of it will be to bring the House to a vote, first upon the amendment to the original bill as proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] and then upon the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL.]

Mr. CRAIGE. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I will withdraw the demand, if the gentleman from North Carolina promises to renew it.

Mr. CRAIGE. The only object I have in asking the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw the demand for the previous question is, that I may be allowed to make an inquiry. I desire to ask the Chair if the amendment of the gentleman is adopted, whether it will be in order to offer another amendment, or whether the previous question would still apply, because I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the bill reported by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and to insert in lieu thereof the bill originally drawn by my friend from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER], to repeal the Minnesota land bill.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to make a suggestion. It is apparent, from the various amendments proposed from different sides of the House, that there is considerable contest about this matter. We are now within twenty-four hours of the close of the session, and it seems impossible to investigate this matter properly, and it ought, therefore, to go over until the next session. I desire to make a motion to refer the whole subject to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina give way for such a motion?

Mr. CRAIGE. I do not yield the floor for that purpose. The object I had in view was, that this matter might be placed in such a shape that the House could vindicate its own character and its own legislation. It must be perfectly apparent to the House, that both committees were agreed that a wrong had been perpetrated. In the language of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL], a great fraud has been committed. Who committed that fraud, the committees have not apprised us? In order that we may vindicate our own honor, and place this matter where it was before the falsification of the record took place, I desire to have a direct vote upon the question of repealing this bill, thus indirectly casting censure upon those who did really perpetrate the fraud. In accordance with my promise to the gentleman from South Carolina, I renew the demand for the previous question. But before I take my seat, I move to strike out the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL], and insert in lieu thereof, the bill originally reported by my friend from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER], which is as follows:

"That the bill entitled an act to aid the territory of Minnesota, in the construction of a railroad therein, which passed this House on the 20th day of June, 1854, and approved by the President of the United States, the 29th day of June, 1854, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered to be put, being first upon striking out the second section of the original bill, as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That, in no event, by virtue of any act heretofore passed by the said Territorial Legislature, shall the governor, auditor, or treasurer of such Territory, have power to designate the company or companies to whose benefit the grant shall inure."

The question was taken; and on a division, there were—ayes 43; noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment to the substitute, as offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CRAIGE.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. PECK. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and PECK were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—ayes forty-nine, (more than one fifth of the members present.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 105, nays 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Banks, Barksdale, Bennett, Benson, Boock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Bugg, Carpenter, Caskey, Chastain, Chisman, Cobb, Cox, Craige, Cullom, Curtis, Dawson, Dick, Dowdell, Edmunds, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Goodrich, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hibbard, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsley, McNair, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Packer, Parker, Peck, Peckham, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Rogers, Rufin, Sage, Shannon, Shaw, Skelton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—105.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Barry, Bell, Bliss, Breckinridge, Campbell, Caruthers, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cumming, John G. Davis, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Edgerton, Giddings, Greenwood, Andrew J. Harlan, Hendricks, Henn, Hughes, Johnson, Roland Jones, McCulloch, Macdonald, McMullin, Macy, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Oids, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Pennington, Phelps, Pratt, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Alexander H. Stephens, David Stuart, Thurston, Upham, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, and Wells—59.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAIGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the substitute, as amended; and it was agreed to.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read a third time.

Mr. CRAIGE. I demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill, as amended, was then passed.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The title was then read, as follows:

An act declaring the true intent and meaning of an act approved the 2d of June, 1854, entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein."

Mr. CRAIGE. I move to amend the title so as to make it read:

An act to repeal an act entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," approved the 2d of June, 1854.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF JOINT RULES.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to suspend the 16th and 17th joint rules, so that this bill may be sent to the Senate and approved by the President.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to suspend the rules. Mr. HOUSTON. If I am not mistaken, a resolution has been sent to us from the Senate proposing to suspend those rules for the remainder of the session. I ask the Chair if there is not such a resolution upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. There is such a resolution from the Senate.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask that it may be read.

It was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the 16th and 17th joint rules be suspended, so far as relates to bills which have been or may be passed during the present session.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to amend that resolution, so as to make it apply only to bills which have been passed. It is the usual custom to suspend the rules only for bills which have been passed, and not to suspend them altogether.

The SPEAKER. The Senate resolution will be considered as before the House, unless objected to.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to say that I shall object to this resolution being taken up, and that I shall object to any business being done out of order until the river and harbor bill has been taken up and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. JONES. I submit that the objection of the gentleman from New York comes too late. The resolution had been taken up from the Speaker's table, and read without objection.

The SPEAKER. It is due to the gentleman from New York to state that he was upon the floor addressing the Chair—the Chair did not know for what purpose—before the resolution was taken up. The Chair, however, recognized the gentleman from Tennessee. He now decides, therefore, that the objection comes in time; and the question will be upon the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to suspend the rules, for the purpose of moving to suspend the 16th and 17th joint rules, so far as this bill is concerned.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

The motion to suspend the 16th and 17th joint rules was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HUNT obtained the floor.

Mr. DAWSON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table, in order that the amendments of the Senate to the homestead bill may be taken up. I may move further to amend, so as to more securely preserve the rights of actual settlers.

Mr. HUNT. I am entitled to the floor, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would ask the gentleman, before he states his question of privilege, to allow me to make a motion in regard to the business of the special committee, which reported this morning, in order that it may be closed up.

Mr. HUNT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that that committee be authorized to certify to the claim of the clerk employed by it, and that he be paid.

There was no objection; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUNT. The question of privilege which I now feel it my duty to offer to the consideration of the House, inasmuch as no action on the subject has been proposed on the other side of the House, is embraced in the following resolution:

Resolved, That John W. Forney, the Clerk of this House, by directing and causing to be made the alteration of House bill No. 342, entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," mentioned in the report of the special committee of this House, has falsified a record of this House in violation of the parliamentary law and of his sworn duty, and that the said John W. Forney, Clerk of the House of Representatives, should be, and is hereby, removed from the office of Clerk of this House.

Mr. DISNEY. I rise to a point of order. My point is simply this: A question, to be a privileged one, must relate to some right or privilege of the member raising it, or of some other member of this House in whose behalf, or against whom, the question is raised. A matter impeaching an officer of this House is not a privileged question by parliamentary law; and therefore I hold that the gentleman is not entitled to the floor as moving a privileged question.

Mr. HUNT. This is a matter which concerns the honor and character of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order which has been raised by the gentleman from Ohio. In the opinion of the Chair, the question of the gentleman from Louisiana is a question of privilege.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, this is a question concerning the integrity of the proceedings in which you participate. The personal honor of every member, and the character of this House, and of this nation, are involved in its consideration.

Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, the Clerk of the House of Representatives is an informed and experienced officer. He knows well the parliamentary law, and thoroughly understands the duty and the business of the Clerk's office. With this knowledge and this experience, we find that he has knowingly and deliberately directed and caused to be made, an alteration falsifying the proceedings of this House in the bill to which I have referred, and that to such a degree, that the House has felt it to be its duty immediately, and with an almost unanimous voice, to repeal the act in question. It is said, in one of the reports from the special committee, that the Clerk has not been actuated by a corrupt motive in this matter—that he has not been bribed.

Sir, I do not look to the motive of the Clerk, which I do not know in this case. I look to his act—to his act, which has just made you feel it to be your duty to repeal the altered act. I look to the character of this House—to the integrity of our proceedings, and to the maintenance of the parliamentary law confided to us by our constituents; and I say that we owe it to our individual honor, and to the character of this House, and of this nation, to maintain and preserve the integrity of our proceedings—to uphold the parliamentary law, and to remove him from office, who, having falsified the record, is unworthy any longer of the confidence of this House and of this nation.

Sir, my reason for presenting a resolution looking directly to the Clerk, is, because he is fons et origo mali, the head and front of this offending; because, if he had done his duty, the shame and the reproach of a falsification could not have been cast upon the records of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I was well pleased to hear the concluding remarks of one of the reports read this morning; and as they are so apposite to the present occasion, so just applicable to the case before us, and should not fail to exert a wholesome influence on our judgment and conduct, I will beg leave of the House to read them in the present connection:

"If such a system [such action as has taken place in the present instance] prevails, there can be no certainty or reliability in congressional action. There can be no safety to members under such a practice, because it falsifies the votes they give under the solemnities of their oath, by making them appear as voting for measures which they would have opposed. It brings odium upon Congress, and destroys public confidence in congressional proceedings.

"The sanctity of the record should always be preserved, and those charged with it, should be held to the most rigid accountability."

I have acted in this matter upon the suggestions of my own understanding and feelings, regulated by my views of right. Finding that no one had come forward to offer such a motion as I deemed called for, and concurring in the honorable sentiments uttered by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CRAIG], who addressed you in relation to the repeal of the altered act, I have thought proper to submit the resolution, which is now before the House, for its consideration.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. After hearing the reports of this committee, I think that there is no necessity on the part of the House, nor is it our duty to take the action indicated by the resolution of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. HUNT.] Both of these reports state conclusively, if I did not misunderstand the reading, that there was no proof before the committee showing any culpability on the part of any individual having any connection with this matter whatever. However improper the committee may have considered the act, and however improper the House may consider it, if there was no improper motive, no improper intent—and this committee have so considered it—the House should not and ought not to take the course indicated by the gentleman from Louisiana. I think, as I stated when I was up before, that the facts disclosed by the majority and minority reports show that there was not the slightest intention upon the part of any one of the gentlemen named to commit a wrong, much less a fraud. I have not seen in the facts as reported by the committee any evidence that there was any intention on the part of these gentlemen to commit even an impropriety. Why should this House sanction the course which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] has indicated, and remove the Clerk? Has anything been disclosed which warrants an impeachment of his motives, or an imputation upon his character and integrity? The gentleman from Louisiana says in this resolution that the Clerk has falsified the records. Sir, I do not so understand it at all. I do not consider, from the reports of the committee, that the Clerk was guilty of any falsification of the record. If in the original bill the word had been inserted in the character "&," and if the subordinate clerk had asked him, "Shall I write the word and instead of the character?" and he had been told to write it out "and," would that have been falsification of the record? And yet the facts disclosed show no more intention of committing a fraud upon the country, making a falsification of the record, than if this very thing had been done. Or again, if a word had been written in figures in the original bill, and if the subordinate clerk had asked the Clerk, "Shall I write it out?" and he had written it out, it would have been the same as in this case, so far as the intention or motive is concerned. In such a case the act might be improper—the Clerk might have no right to make the alteration of his own record—yet where there is no criminal motive, where there is no intention of fraud, where there is not even the consciousness of any impropriety, how could a party be charged with falsification, and why should this House take such a course as that indicated by the gentleman from Louisiana? I think it is time to stop this affair. We have already gone too far, in my opinion. I think there is no propriety in our going further. I am utterly opposed to the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Louisiana. Amongst the first and greatest duties we owe to ourselves, and the country, is to do justice to all parties, and to deal unjustly towards none. To cast censure where there was no bad motive or improper intent, would, in my opinion, be an act of gross injustice on our part.

Mr. ORR. The reports that have been made by this special committee exonerate entirely not only the honorable gentleman from Michigan, who reported the bill, but the Clerk also. The testimony states, distinctly, that the member of this House who originally reported this bill from the Committee on Public Lands, which has given rise to this controversy, went to the Clerk of the House to have the required alteration made, supposing that such alteration was immaterial. The Clerk then declined to make it until he would have conferred with a Clerk of the Senate who had much more experience in such matters than the Clerk of the House. And inasmuch as the Clerk of the Senate told the Clerk of the House that it was customary to make these alterations, he directed it to be made. Now, I have no doubt that the parties who went originally to Mr. STEVENS to get him to make the alteration, had a fraudulent purpose to subvert; and I have as little doubt that the honorable gentleman, [Mr. STEVENS], and the Clerk of the House, were entrapped into making the alteration, supposing that it was an immaterial one.

Besides that, if it were proper that action should have been taken on the subject, I think that the honorable gentleman from Louisiana should have offered his resolution as a substitute for the resolution offered by the committee. It would have been then appropriate; it would have been then in order for him to have moved his resolution. If the committee had felt or seen anything in the testimony which would have at all justified the proceeding against the Clerk, that committee, as honorable men, would have felt themselves bound to report to the House, and to recommend the removal of the Clerk. They did not so recommend. But the honorable gentleman from Louisiana proposes his resolution at this time. He does not allege that there was any corrupt intention or improper motive in making the alteration. He believes there was a wrong done—and it is a great wrong—upon the House. It was an impropriety in the Clerk; it was an impropriety in those who made the change. It was the duty of the Clerk to have the bill engrossed exactly as it passed the House, whether it made sense or not. But when he had before him the testimony of the Senate Clerk that this was a customary thing, when there is not a particle of testimony implicating his honor or integrity in the least degree, I think it would look very much like persecuting the Clerk of the House if we were to prosecute the investigation any further; and, therefore, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. HUNT. I hope the gentleman from South

Carolina will not do that; it is not just nor generous. The gentleman has—I do not consider in an offensive light—reproached me for not having been quicker in my action upon this matter. Why, sir, it is only a few minutes since these reports of the special committee were read. I had known nothing of what they contained. I—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The question is not debatable.

Mr. ORR. If the gentleman from Louisiana desires to make any explanation I will allow him to do so before I insist on my motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. HUNT. Certainly it is my purpose to make a personal explanation, and I will not abuse even the poor privilege which the gentleman allows me. It is a personal explanation to account for my conduct in this matter. I felt it my duty to act upon this matter as soon as I could. It is not five minutes since the reports were read, and I knew nothing of their contents previous to the reading. My remarks are in order, and are not precluded by the action of the House upon the reports. The reports recommend a repeal of the altered law. That repeal has been made. I have my own views of the conduct of the Clerk, and of the penalty which should fall upon him. As soon as I had an opportunity, after the repeal of the altered act took place, I rose in my place and offered the resolution which I had hoped would have come from some gentleman on the other side of the House.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. HUNT. A thousand, sir, if you please.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I ask the gentleman whether both reports do not exonerate every one connected with this business?

Mr. HUNT. The gentleman asks me a question which answers itself upon the record before the House; he asks me argumentatively, and I must be allowed to reply argumentatively. I reply, first, by saying that I am an independent gentleman and legislator; and that if he, and all the friends connected with him in politics, or by social intercourse, were of one mind, and I was of another, I should feel it my duty to express my independent opinion. Is that an answer?

Mr. CHURCHWELL. It is not.

Mr. HUNT. Well, sir, the gentleman may be controlled by the judgment of others. I judge from the facts as disclosed. I did not say that I believed the Clerk had been bribed. There is no evidence upon the subject. This rule of law is charitable: De non apparentibus, et non existentibus eadem est ratio.

The presumption is that he has not been bribed; and I do not know what influences have been brought to bear upon his mind. But I think the integrity of this House is involved in this matter, and so regarding it, I have brought it to the attention of the House.

Mr. ORR. I have no doubt that the honorable gentleman from Louisiana would adopt exactly the course he has indicated, if he felt himself standing alone, and all the rest of the House against him. I think, however, that the House will be prepared to sustain the report of both the majority and minority of the committee that there is nothing in the testimony or circumstances going to show that there was any fraud, direct or indirect, upon the part of either Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan, or the Clerk of this House. Therefore I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. HAVEN. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to give me a moment?

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Question!"]

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise with earnestness to ask the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw his motion for a moment. His motion is doing injustice to his friend.

Mr. ORR. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes from Mr. Forney's own town, and differs with him in politics, I withdraw the motion to lay the resolution on the table, that he may be heard. But I ask him to renew the motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to appeal to the House in behalf of—

Mr. SEWARD. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the gentleman from South Carolina had no right to withdraw his motion to lay upon the table after the yeas and nays were called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had the right to withdraw his motion, no action having been taken upon it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to defend the Clerk of this House; because I do not know anything of the circumstances of the case, more than has been stated in the reports. I listened with interest to the reports, both of the majority and the minority of the committee, and I was compelled to believe that an error—a gross error—has been committed—one that calls for the deliberate consideration, and, perhaps, the censure of the House.

But, sir, the proposition is now made to strike down a man before he can be heard. If I understood the statement of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STEVENS,] the other day, he fully, clearly, and distinctly relieved our Clerk from any appearance of any intention to do anything wrong, if wrong was done. And if I understand the report of both the majority and minority, he stands acquitted of intentional wrong by the whole of the committee.

Mr. HUNT. The Clerk must be presumed—although he is seldom seen here—to know what is going on in the House. He must have known that this investigation was going on. Now, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee who had the matter in charge, whether Mr. Forney was notified in relation to this matter, and whether he was called before the committee?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I am not a political friend, scarcely a personal friend, of this officer of the House. We are antagonistic to each other in our politics. The peculiar position of antagonism of political men in the city in which we live, is such as to give rise to no feelings of special friendship between us. But, sir, I speak this word as a man. I speak it as one who asks that, before the blow be struck, the man at whom it is aimed shall have the opportunity of being heard. "Strike, but hear."

Our laws punish no man without trial. And, sir, if the blow is to be struck, it must fall first upon the honorable gentleman from Michigan. Not that I impute to him any wrong, if any wrong has been done. But if there is to be any censure passed upon any one, honorable gentlemen must know that it will fall first, however it may be aimed, upon the gentleman from Michigan. Who does not know that, if we are to strike this blow, before it can reach the Clerk of this House, it must fall with triple implication upon our comember?

Mr. HUNT. I can hear the gentleman very imperfectly in the confusion. Do I understand him to cast an imputation upon me for not first instituting proceedings against Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly not. The honorable gentleman knows that I deem him an honorable man. But it is but right that he should deal honorably, justly, and even mercifully with any man before he would strike him down; before he would press a proposition which carries with it an imputation, placing him in a position, the atmosphere of which will hang around him all his life. The suspicion of intended wrong is of itself a horrible punishment for an error.

I repeat it, sir, I do not say the Clerk of the House has not committed error. I do not say that he ought not to receive the rebuke which, in a modified form, this resolution will carry with it. But I say that the very defense which is forced upon his friends is of itself almost a sufficient punishment for the error. That we should preserve purity, integrity, and correctness in our documents, is something which needs no argument to prove, it requires no consideration. But, sir, the character of our body for justice, the character of our institutions demands that we should be pure as the parchment upon which we record our acts.

I say, therefore, that I would rather not see the question put in the form in which the honorable gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Orr] has presented it to the House, viz: To lay the resolution upon the table. Let the previous question be called, and then let us have a direct vote on the resolution. If I vote to lay the resolution upon the table, it may be said that I voted to stifle inquiry. If I do not vote to lay it upon the table, it may be said that I am expressing myself against the Clerk.

• Mr. ORR. I hope, then, that the gentleman, instead of renewing my motion, will call for the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope that the gentleman will do no such thing. I would hate, in addition to what has taken place, to have it go out to the country that the floor is farmed out among the friends of the accused, and that nobody else can be heard.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not stand upon this floor as the friend of the Clerk. I do not stand here as his advocate or defender; I only stand here as the asserter of justice, and of the proper mode of procedure. I ask that the House shall inquire before it passes censure. I ask it to consider, first, all that has been so candidly and satisfactorily said by gentlemen of the committee. I ask that we should not distinguish the termination of this session of Congress by an act which we cannot recall—an act which becomes injustice, even if the error is sufficient to it. The punishment becomes injustice by the manner and temper in which it is administered. I do not wish to withhold any man, whoever, or wherever he may be, from the well earned censure to which he may have exposed himself. If he is guilty, let him be punished. If he has erred, let there be correction or commination; but, before we do one or the other, let him be heard. Let him present the matter to the House by his friends; and, more than all, let us pause before we strike the blow. Between the accusation and the trial, let there be time to deliberate and sober down our thoughts; and, between the sentence and the blow, let there be something to distinguish our justice, and show that we only seek our rights.

Mr. HUNT. Allow me a word before you move the previous question. It has been said by the honorable gentleman, that a hearing should have been granted to the Clerk. Does the honorable gentleman recollect the nature of this proceeding? This was an investigation into the conduct of the Clerk and others. It was well understood, and well known by the Clerk, and every man upon this floor. The committee called the Clerk before them and heard him. He testified under oath. Is the honorable gentleman prepared to say that we have not the full evidence in regard to this matter from the Clerk's statement, as well as the testimony of the other witnesses? It was so full, sir, that the committee asked for no further time to prosecute this investigation. The committee did not believe that he was bribed, or governed by a corrupt motive; but they had a full knowledge of his participation in the matter of alteration. It appears to me, therefore, that the argument that he has not had a hearing is unjust. And, sir, does the House of Representatives owe nothing to its own character and to the country? That is the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I know, sir, that the gentleman has not uttered, but he has continually insinuated the charge of bribery on this floor, by repeatedly saying that he had not made it.

Mr. HUNT. The gentleman is mistaken in my character. I do not believe that the Clerk has received a quid pro quo. It does not appear, and I do not believe it. I do not charge it, and I never insinuate. The gentleman knows my character too well, and he will do me the justice to say that I am accustomed to speak right on, and call things by their right names. I judge of the Clerk's act by the surrounding circumstances and his official character.

Mr. CHANDLER. I only wish that other members of the House understood the gentleman's character as well as he imagines that I do; for it cannot have escaped gentlemen that that was the undertone of his remarks.

Mr. HUNT. Does the gentleman mean, after my disavowal, to repeat such a thing as that?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not. Exactly the contrary. I only mean to express regret that the gentleman should have found it necessary to make such a disavowal.

Mr. HUNT. God knows what his motives are. They are known only to the great Searcher of hearts.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish simply to say, that all we know of this matter is, that a member of this House declared upon his honor—and that was sufficient for us—that he was instructed to make such alteration by the committee; that he thought he had made it; and when it appeared after the passage of the bill that one word was omitted, that he went to one of the engrossing clerks and asked to have it altered; that he declined to act until Mr. Forney had looked into the matter; who, doubtful in regard to it, although unable to see what material effect it would have, appealed to others of more acquaintance and experience in these matters, and gathered from them that it was “within the line of safe precedent.” That seems to be the history of the case. The honorable gentleman from Louisiana asks whether the House of Representatives does not owe something to its sense of justice in this matter. Sir, it is one of the first duties which this House owes to itself to avoid injustice.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield me the floor for a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will request my friend from Ohio to be as brief as possible, not in regard to myself, but to the time of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman who has yielded to me the floor for a moment has certainly farmed it out to no friend of Mr. Forney. In politics I am his antipode. I differ from him, I believe, on every great issue before the country. I have always voted against him when he has been a candidate for the office of Clerk of this House. Socially, I have had no intercourse with him. I believe that the whole amount of my conversations with him during the entire term I have served in this House—now five years—would not make up the space of thirty minutes, and then exclusively on business matters. In short, sir, I may say, to be frank, I do not like the man. But I do undertake to say, nevertheless, with great respect to the opinions of my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. HUNT], that I think, under all the circumstances of the case, it would be an act of injustice for us to take any hasty action on a resolution calculated to affect the reputation of this officer. He is no friend of mine; but, sir, I should deserve the scorn of all honorable men were I not, as a member of this House, incapable of doing aught, willfully, to blast the honor of any political or personal foe, without full proof of guilt, and calm, impartial, and deliberate investigation. Now, Mr. Speaker, I had the honor of being on the committee who reported this morning; and although not agreeing with the majority upon all the points, yet, after a most careful and laborious investigation, my mind was impressed with the conviction that this alteration—so far as we were enabled to learn from the testimony which, in a short time, we were enabled to bring before us—was, so far as the Clerk and the gentleman from Michigan were concerned, rather the result of a disposition to accommodate friends, or of a neglect in not looking into the legal effect of the change, than any corrupt or selfish purpose. No impropriety is yet disclosed, other than that which was the result of the hurry or negligence of the occasion. Certainly there is nothing in the testimony which should now induce us to stigmatize him with acting from corrupt motives. I have risen for the purpose of making a suggestion, and I hope it will be adopted by the common consent both of the friends and opponents of the Clerk; and I make the suggestion for the reason, that if a vote is now taken, the members of the House will be compelled to vote in the dark, until they have read the testimony now ordered to be printed. If gentlemen will allow the consideration of this resolution to be postponed until sometime in December, the testimony will have been printed; and every member will then be able to make up his mind upon the facts contained in that record. It will be much better for the Clerk, if he is to be exonerated, that it should be done by a large vote, after full investigation; and if, on the other hand, this House shall then find that it is necessary for the protection of its integrity, after examining all the proof, they can declare him guilty then, and turn him out of office. I make that suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the gentleman who have participated in this proceeding, will, by common consent, allow it to go over. We are now upon the eve of the session, and if this House finds it necessary to have a new Clerk, they can act upon the matter more understandingly at the opening of the next session.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hold in my hand one of the reports which has been made to this House, and both of them exonerate Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan, and every officer of the House, and we are asked here to give, what the lawyers call, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. I do not wish to say anything more except to reiterate for myself, what has been said by the gentleman of Ohio, relating to the Clerk of this House, and that is, that I am not on intimate terms with, and do not stand as the advocate of a social friend, but that I stand here as a man for a man, and in behalf of justice, and nothing more. I took the floor at the kindness of the gentleman from South Carolina, with the promise that I would renew his motion; and I therefore call the previous question, on the motion that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. HAVEN. Is the previous question demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HAVEN. Then I ask him to withdraw it?

Mr. CHANDLER. I took the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] and I have discharged my duty, and I give back the subject to the gentleman from South Carolina. The floor is his and not mine.

Mr. HAVEN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania dare not take the responsibility, and I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw it?

Mr. CHANDLER. I dare not take the responsibility of doing what I have promised not to do.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman from South Carolina dare take the responsibility, and remembering how he was treated by the gentleman from New York the other day, he declines to withdraw it.

[Loud cries of “Good!”]

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to move to postpone this matter until the second Tuesday in December next?

The SPEAKER. It is not, as the previous question is pending.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot have them upon the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HAVEN. Very well. I will wait until I can have them.

The previous question was then seconded.

Mr. HAVEN. Can the yeas and nays be demanded properly upon ordering the main question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can demand them upon that question.

Mr. HAVEN. I do demand them then.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 136, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Mr. ORR demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

So the resolution was not agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bills and joint resolutions; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the Chair appoint two additional members on the Committee on Enrolled Bills? It becomes necessary, the Chair understands, on account of the mass of business on hand.

No objection was made; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. SAPP and STRATTON such additional members on the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

THE COLT PATENT CASE.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to what I suppose is a privileged question. As chairman of the select committee raised to investigate the influences brought to operate upon members of Congress in reference to the Colt case, and in reference to other cases, I am now ready to report. I have a report to make, signed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. EDDY,] the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. RUFFIN,] and myself. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER,] and the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. THURSTON,] have another report; and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZOLLCOFFER] has another report; and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] still another report. [Laughter.] The reports are accompanied by the evidence taken before the committee.

At this late period of the session, I do not propose to have all these reports read, unless it should be requested by some member of the House; but I ask that the reports and accompanying evidence may be laid upon the table and printed. Before that is done, however, I desire to inquire whether by this disposition of the reports, the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the subjects committed to them, or whether this investigation will extend into the next session?

The SPEAKER. Do the committee desire to be discharged from the further consideration of the subjects referred to them?

Mr. LETCHER. No, sir. They ask in their reports that they may have liberty to make further investigations the next session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is competent for the committee to report in part, but whether the committee would hold over until another session without an express order of the House to that effect, is quite questionable.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, I move that the reports and testimony lie upon the table, and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I ask that the committee have leave to hold over until the next session.

Mr. DISNEY. I object.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. DAWSON. I claim the floor.

WASHINGTON AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD.

Mr. McMULLIN. I rise to a privileged question. I have a report to make from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to make the report.

Mr. McMULLIN. The committee of conference appointed to confer upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill authorizing the extension of the Alexandria railroad into the District of Columbia, have instructed me to make the following report—

Mr. GOODE. I desire to say that if I have the right to object to the reception of that report, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the report is properly before the House.

The report was then read, as follows:

The committee of conference upon the disagreement of the two Houses in reference to the bill entitled "An act authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, and conferring certain privileges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company," have had the subject under consideration, and recommend that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and that the said bill, as it passed the House, be adopted, with the following additional section:

Provided, however, That this section shall remain suspended for two years from the 1st day of January, 1855; and if, at the end of that time, the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company shall not have completed a railroad to Alexandria, and have the same in good running order, in pursuance of the requirements of the preceding section of the act, then the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall have the privilege of extending their road by either of the routes authorized by this act: And, provided further, That if said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall not have executed so much of the provisions of this act as relates to their company, by the 1st day of January, 1859, then this act shall be void.

FAYETTE McMULLIN,

HENRY MAY,

JOHN KERR,

Managers on the part of the House.

J. D. BRIGHT,

J. TOUCHY,

HAMILTON FISH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SEWARD. Do I understand the committee of conference propose to add an additional section to that bill; a section not considered and acted on either by the House or Senate?

Mr. McMULLIN. I was just about stating that the committee of conference have agreed to a suspension of the following provision, put in the bill by the House, until 1857:

SEC. 4. And be it further, enacted, That the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct and extend the Washington branch of said road, according to such route as may be most convenient through the said District, to some point on the Potomac river, opposite to, and near the city of Alexandria, in Virginia, for the purpose of forming a connection with said river, and the lines of railroad running south, subject to the provisions of its present charter; and the said company are hereby authorized to locate, construct, and operate the said extensions hereby authorized through such parts of the city of Washington or public reservations as the corporate authorities thereof, or the President of the United States, may consent to; and also to build a bridge or bridges over the eastern branch of the Potomac river, at some point above the navy-yard: Provided, however, That the same shall not obstruct the navigation thereof, and said company shall have power to locate and establish a depot, and erect the necessary buildings thereon, and also to erect such wharves and piers into said river as may be necessary: Provided, The same shall not obstruct the navigation thereof: Provided, further, That the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be subject to the same conditions and restrictions in extending their road through any part of the city of Washington as are prescribed for the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company.

The amendment of the committee of conference meets with the approbation not only of the friends of the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company, but also with that of the friends of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. It is of great moment, as all will admit, that this link of the connection between the North and the South by railroad should be completed. The House fully understand the question, and I call the previous question on the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee: Is it understood by the proviso now reported, that if the Alexandria and Georgetown Railroad Company make their road, that this other one shall not be constructed? If that be so, then it will be a monopoly, and no other road can be constructed.

Mr. McMULLIN. The report of the committee of conference is, that if the Alexandria and Washington city Railroad Company shall have completed their road to Alexandria within two years from the first day of January next, that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall have no right to extend their road.

In the event of the failure of the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company to extend their road, then the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company have the right to extend their road to the Potomac; and if they fail to extend their road within two years thereafter, then this act is null and void, and Congress may confer the same power upon any other company.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am very much opposed to monopolies; and I move to lay the whole concern upon the table.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to present this question of order to the Chair. Can a committee of conference substitute an independent section not embraced either in the Senate amendment or the House bill, and legislate in that kind of way?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the committee cannot agree to and incorporate an independent and separate amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit to the Chair, that it is a proviso to the section of the bill which was in disagreement between the two Houses. I suppose the committee of conference might propose to amend that disagreeing vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is a modification of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his motion. Not a friend of this bill has ever said one word upon this subject, and I beg that he will allow an explanation to be made in regard to this bill.

The question was taken upon Mr. JONES's motion; and, upon division, there were—ayes 11, noes not counted.

So the House refused to lay the report upon the table.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I feel very much inclined—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The previous question is pending and debate is out of order.

Mr. SMITH. I ask my colleague to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The amendment upon which the two Houses disagreed will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk then read the fourth section of the bill, as printed above.

Mr. SEWARD. I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. GOODE. Is the amendment in order to be voted for after the gentleman from Georgia has withdrawn his point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard any objection at all to the report. It has been received without objection, and it is doubtful whether the objection now made is not too late.

Mr. GOODE. Exactly; on the ground that the report of the committee is not to the bill of the House or to the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the report of the committee to change the original bill; but it does modify and come to an agreement on the amendments of the House which were made to the bill, and on which the two Houses disagreed.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put; and under the operation of the previous question, the report of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. McMULLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HIBBARD took the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dawson] is entitled to the floor. He has twice yielded it already.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to make a motion which will not occupy the House a moment. It is in relation to the Post Office appropriation bill, which has come down from the Senate.

Mr. DAWSON. What motion does the gentleman wish to make?

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to move to take up the Post Office appropriation bill just sent from the Senate, for the purpose of having it referred to a committee of conference.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Has that bill, with the amendments, passed through the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? The House has not passed on the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. HIBBARD. No; but I propose to move to disagree to the amendments, and to ask a committee of conference at the same time.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; let it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HIBBARD. There are but two amendments. I move to take up the bill which is now upon the Speaker's table, for the purpose of referring it to the Committee of Ways and Means. The motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. DAWSON. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table, for the purpose of taking up the homestead bill, as amended by the Senate.

Mr. TWEED. I object.

Mr. DAWSON. Then I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. We have had no morning hour. The gentleman and the House will remember that the whole day has been spent, not only with privileged questions, but with questions of privilege, and therefore no part of the morning hour has been consumed in receiving reports from committees.

Mr. DAWSON. Is not the morning hour running yet?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. DAWSON. It is hardly necessary to move the suspension of the rules, but yet I am willing to try it once more. I make the motion.

Mr. COBB. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. BRIDGES. I appeal to my colleague to allow this bill to go over until the next session. It is too late at this period of the session to perfect such a bill before the adjournment. The tendency of the bill is to sweep away the public lands.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot debate the motion.

Mr. DAWSON. I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 70, nays 92; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Barry, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Caruthers, Chastain, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, English, Florence, Goode, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Ingersoll, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, Macy, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Noble, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Peckham, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Richardson, Sapp, Singleton, George W. Smyth, Hestor L. Stevens, Straub, Trout, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Wells, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—70.

YAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bridges, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskie, Chandler, Chrisman, Corwin, Craige, Crocker, Curtis, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Millson, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Russell, Sage, Seward, Shannon, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zollicoffer—92.

So (two thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. PHELPS said: I desire to know whether the vote granting the Committee of Ways and Means leave to sit during the sessions of the House also included leave for the members of that committee to vote upon questions taken by yeas and nays, at any time before the result is announced, whether they were in the Hall when their names were called or not? It seems to me they should be entitled to that privilege, otherwise they will be deprived of the privilege of voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the members of a committee, under such circumstances, have the right to vote as the gentleman suggests. Such, in the recollection of the Chair, has been the practice upon former occasions. The Chair hopes that there will be no objection to the members of the Committee of Ways and Means being permitted to vote.

Mr. PHELPS. I have only raised the question now, so that in future we might know what our rights really are.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I say that any member of this House who is absent from the Hall on any committee, by order of the House, has the right of voting, and he has that right whether his vote will change the result or not.

Mr. HENN. I made the motion the other day by which the members of that committee were allowed to vote; and when it was adopted there was no understanding that they should not vote, if their votes would change the result. The understanding was that they should be allowed to vote if they came into the Hall before the result was announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. BOCK.) The Chair so holds, and deems that to be the proper and natural understanding.

Mr. JONES. Does the Chair decide that he cannot vote in the case specified?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that the members of the Ways and Means have the right to vote if they come into the Hall before the result is announced.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HIBBARD. I desire to report back to the House from the Committee of Ways and Means the Senate amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MATTESON. I object.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move a suspension of the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. MATTESON. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. ORR. I would ask the gentleman from New Hampshire whether this is not one of the appropriation bills which it is necessary we should pass to carry on the Government?

Mr. HIBBARD. It is.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I shall object to all the appropriation bills until the river and harbor bill shall have been considered.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. HIBBARD's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 93, nays 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bock, Bridges, Caskie, Chasrain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Craige, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Everhart, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Hibbard, Hill, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland

Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Lilly, McDougall, McMullin, McQueen, Macy, Maxwell, Millson, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Orr, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Rufin, Shannon, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—93.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Bennett, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Cook, Crocker, Cumming, Dawson, Dick, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Goodrich, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Howe, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, John G. Miller, Morgan, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Preston, Pringle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zollicoffer—64.

So the House refused to suspend the rules, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

GILLIS'S REPORT.

Mr. RIDDLE. Mr. Speaker, almost two weeks since, the House ordered the printing of seven thousand five hundred and twenty copies of the report of Lieutenant Gillis to be printed; but they did not order it to be illustrated. Accompanying it are some valuable maps and plates; and in order that they may be engraved and printed, to be included in the work, for distribution to members at the next session I am instructed by the Committee on Engraving to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Engraving be, and they are hereby, authorized to contract for the engraving, or lithographing, and printing of the maps and plates accompanying the report of Lieutenant Gillis, so lately ordered to be printed by the House of Representatives.

The question was taken; and the resolution was adopted.

DANIEL STEENROD.

Mr. KIDWELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up and consider House bill No. 182, "An act for the relief of Daniel Steenrod." This bill passed the House a few days since, and went to the Senate, where it was passed, with a few unimportant amendments. I feel great interest in its passage, and I hope there will be no objection to taking it up and considering it at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was then taken up and read, as follows:

That the petition of Daniel Steenrod, with the accompanying documents and depositions, be referred to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, and he is hereby authorized to appoint a commissioner to take evidence in the city of Wheeling or elsewhere, and ascertain and report what is justly and equitably due the said petitioner therein; and if such report is approved by the said Comptroller, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to direct to pay such sum of money out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided further, That said commissioner shall be selected out of any such persons now in the employment of the Government, for which services no extra compensation shall be paid.

First amendment:

After the word "the," where it first occurs, strike out the words "First Comptroller of the Treasury, and the," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "Secretary of War, who."

The amendment was agreed to.

Second amendment:

After the word "to," where it first occurs in the same line, strike out the words, "appoint a commissioner to take evidence in the city of Wheeling and elsewhere, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Third amendment:

In line nine, after the word "ascertain," strike out the words "and report."

The amendment was agreed to.

Fourth amendment:

After the word "and" strike out all to the word to, including the word "direct," in the twelfth line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Fifth amendment:

In line thirteen, before the word "out," strike out the words "of money," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "as may be found due."

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixth amendment:

After the word "appropriate" strike out all to the end of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

CHARGES AGAINST HON. T. H. BAYLY.

Mr. WALLEY. I rise to a privileged question. I am instructed by the select committee upon the charges preferred against the Hon. THOMAS H. BAYLY, to report in part from that committee, and I move that the report be laid upon the table, and printed. I offer a resolution with reference to the payment of a clerk, similar to those reported by the other investigating committees.

Mr. BAYLY. I ask that the report may be read.

[Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. BAYLY. It is a question of privilege, and I insist upon it.

The resolution was reported, as follows:

Resolved, That the committee appointed by the House to investigate charges preferred against the Hon. THOMAS H. BAYLY be authorized to employ a clerk, from the 21st ultimo; and that the committee be authorized to audit his bill.

The question was put; and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WALLEY. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] desires to have the report read. It is a very short one, and I hope his desire may be gratified.

Mr. BAYLY. I insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that there will be no objection made.

Mr. BAYLY. It is a question of privilege; and I insist upon the report being read.

The report was accordingly read, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, August 3, 1854.

The select committee appointed by the resolution of the House of Representatives of 21st July, 1854, to investigate the charges preferred by Ben E. Green against the Hon. THOMAS H. BAYLY, ask leave to submit the following report:

The committee have diligently attended to the duty imposed on them by the passage of this resolution, but have been unable to arrive at such a result as will enable them to report in full at this time.

The complainant having made oath to the charges as preferred, proceeded to adduce testimony in support of the first charge, and offered record and documentary evidence in support of the second charge and specifications.

The evidence was not all submitted until after the adjournment of the House on the 2d instant; and the complainant submitted his argument this day. Mr. BAYLY offered an affidavit, stating what he could prove by certain witnesses, but rested his case upon the testimony of the complainant, without calling any witnesses, or submitting any argument.

Under these circumstances, it must be obvious that the committee cannot, by possibility, report in full at the present session. They, however, are satisfied that the complainant failed entirely to establish the first charge. In relation to the remaining charge, they express no opinion, inasmuch as the complainant relies (mainly, if not entirely) upon record and documentary evidence, which your committee have had no opportunity of examining, or even reading.

Your committee therefore report all the evidence which has been submitted to them, and reserve to themselves the privilege of reporting in full at a future day.

All which is respectfully submitted.

For the committee:

SMITH MILLER,
JACOB SHOWER,
SAMUEL H. WALLEY,
H. H. JOHNSON,
SION H. ROGERS,

The report was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a privileged motion. I believe that the motion to suspend the rules to allow the committee to report back the Post Office bill has not been agreed to.

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. ORR. Well, I move now to reconsider the vote by which that bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And I move to lay that motion on the table, unless the gentleman will agree to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ORR. And if the gentleman will consent to take up the homestead bill, he can get up the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. This is not a debatable question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask if there is not an appropriation made in that Post Office bill?

Mr. ORR. I do not know whether there is or not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. A motion has been made here to suspend the rules to take up the land bill. It does seem to me that those who have charge of the bill, the friends of the measure, should be satisfied with the action of the House, and that the House should now permit a motion to be made to take up the river and harbor bill; and if that fails, I think the advocates of that measure should be satisfied, at least, until after the disposition of the appropriation bills.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to say that I shall take every opportunity to get up that bill, as it is ahead of all other appropriation bills.

Mr. JONES. I make this remark to the gentleman from Ohio. He knows that the Government does not stop, that the operations of the Army, the Navy, or the civil service of the country do not stop by the failure of the river and harbor bill at the session of Congress, but that they must all stop if the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill does not pass.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will say to the gentleman that there has been but one river and harbor bill for fifteen years, and the friends of that bill intend that it shall go through this session, if possible.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to make a single suggestion. It is this: go to the Speaker's table, and all these bills can be reached.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays upon the pending motion.

Mr. ORR. I withdraw, for the present, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, with a view to enable the friends of the river and harbor bill to move to take it up; and if they fail in their motion, I hope, then, they will adopt the same course, which, perhaps, the friends of the land bill have done.

EXTRA COMPENSATION TO PAGES, ETC.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the usual extra compensation be paid to the pages, folders, and such other employees who have heretofore received the same, and who have not and shall not hereafter receive the benefit of the joint resolution approved July 20, 1854.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That resolution has once been presented and rejected. I object to it. It is not in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit this question to the Chair and to the House. The joint resolution which has been passed in relation to the compensation of the employees of the House, provides for the increase of all the persons embraced in that resolution, and we cannot repeal that joint resolution by a simple resolution of this House.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will say to the House, that the resolution provides for those who do not take advantage of the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Exactly; but the joint resolution applies to all, and they cannot waive the right.

Mr. FLORENCE. This resolution provides that they may not be included in that resolution. I earnestly pray that the sympathies of this House may be excited for those poor folder boys, and that they may be provided for. I move that the rules be suspended, to enable me to introduce the resolution.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. FLORENCE. I demand tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DAVIS, of Indiana, and STUART, of Michigan, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 32.

So (two thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

Mr. FLORENCE. I now offer the resolution, and call the previous question upon its adoption.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the resolution.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is it in order to submit a few words on the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The call for the previous question having been sustained, debate is not in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KERR and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the resolution; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 50; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Aiken, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Claiborne, Churchwell, Crocker, Cumming, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Disney, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Fulton, Florence, Gannett, Giddings, Goodrich, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Keitt, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Lilly, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Smith Miller, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Peckham, Pennington, Pringle, Puryear, Riddle, Robbins, Rogers, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shower, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, and Hendrick B. Wright—88.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Barksdale, Barry, Caskey, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cook, John G. Davis, Dick, English, Faulkner, Fuller, Greenwood, Gray, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kittredge, Leitcher, McMullin, McQueen, Matteson, Millson, Morgan, Murray, Noble, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Reese, Rufin, Sage, Shaw, Singleton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Wells, and Daniel B. Wright—50.

So the resolution was passed.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY TO EXTRA PAGE.

Mr. KEITT. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That Charles P. Coe, who has been acting as a page on the floor of the House of Representatives during the present session—since 5th of December last—be paid the same amount of pay and compensation as shall be paid to the regular pages for the same session.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to that resolution. We have too many pages already here.

Mr. KEITT. This page has been here during nearly the whole of the present session working like the other pages, and unless this resolution passes, he will not be entitled to one dollar of pay. He is one of nine children, and his mother is in straitened circumstances.

Mr. JONES. I would ask the gentleman from North Carolina by what authority a page more than the regular number was appointed?

Mr. KEITT. He was appointed by the proper officer.

Mr. JONES. No officer of this House has such power.

Mr. KEITT. I move that the rules be suspended, in order that I may submit the resolution.

The question was taken; and the rules were suspended.

The resolution was then adopted.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to take the river and harbor bill from the Speaker's table, in order that it may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If the reference be allowed, I shall pledge myself not to move to go into committee to consider that bill until ten o'clock to-night. I speak in behalf of the friends of that measure, and I should be sorry if they were to break my pledge. If they attempted to do it, I should oppose them.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman's proposition agreed to?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I object.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move a suspension of the rules, for the purpose which I have indicated.

The question was put; and, on a division, there were—ayes sixty-seven—

Mr. WENTWORTH. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and HUGHES, were appointed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is known to both sides of this House that I am as much opposed to the river and harbor bill as any gentleman in or out of it can be; but I am willing to meet the question, and I am willing, for one, to take the bill up, and let a majority of this House vote upon the amendments of the Senate. If a majority are for it, let it go to the President, and let him veto it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. DISNEY. I renew it.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 52; not two thirds voting.

Mr. CAMPBELL demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 76, nays 57; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Appleton, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchwell, Clark, Cook, Cox, Crocker, Culom, Dick, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, English, Farley, Flagler, Florence, Giddings, Goodrich, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henna, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, McDougall, Matteson, Maurice, Morgan, Noble, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, Riddle, Rogers, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Watley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, and Tappan Wentworth—76.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Boeck, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Caskey, Chastain, Clingman, Cobb, Craig, John G. Davis, Disney, Edmundson, Everhart, Faulkner, Fenton, Gannett, Gray, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Hibbard, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Leitcher, Lilly, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Macy, May, Smith Miller, Millson, Murray, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Rufin, Shaw, Singleton, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Straub, John J. Taylor, and Daniel B. Wright—57.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

Pending the call of the roll, Mr. MAXWELL stated that he had paired off upon all questions affecting this bill with Mr. BALL, of Ohio, who was called home by sickness in his family.

NATIONAL HOTEL COMPANY.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to enable me to make a report from the Committee for the District of Columbia.

A MEMBER. For what purpose?

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to have one bill put upon its passage, and a few others to be referred merely.

I wish to report and have put upon its passage, the bill to incorporate the National Hotel Company of the city of Washington, and I desire to say this one word. I have tried for two weeks past to get the floor for the purpose of introducing this bill for Mr. HAMILTON, the chairman of the committee, who is confined at home by severe indisposition, and is unable to get here. I have risen half a dozen times for the purpose of getting the bill before the House, and now I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce it, and have it put upon its passage.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Withdraw your objection.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill is accompanied by an amendment.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I have not withdrawn my objection.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move to suspend the rules, so as that the bill may be put upon its passage.

The question was taken; and the rules were suspended.

The bill was then read by the Clerk in extenso.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee for the District of Columbia, were then read:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That each of the stockholders in the said National Hotel Company in Washington city, shall be held liable in his or her individual capacity for all the debts and liabilities of the said company, however contracted or incurred, to be recovered by suit, as other debts and liabilities, before the courts or tribunals having jurisdiction of the case.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That it may be lawful for Congress hereafter to alter, amend, change, or repeal the foregoing act.

The question was taken upon the amendments; and they were agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I call for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill, and I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question recurring upon the passage of the bill,

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. HUGHES and STRAUB were appointed.

The question was then taken on Mr. Davis's motion; and the tellers reported less than a quorum voting.

Mr. PRESTON. I move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. Mr. ENGLISH. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order, but the motion to adjourn must take precedence.

Mr. COBB. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn. Let us take the yeas and nays, and by that time a quorum will be present.

The yeas and nays were not ordered. Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand tellers upon that motion.

Tellers were not ordered. The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. PRESTON. I rise to a question of privilege. The motion to adjourn is always in order, and I believe a motion to fix the time of adjournment takes precedence of that motion. I move that when this House adjourns it adjourn to meet at eight o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule which will authorize the motion to adjourn to a particular hour to be made at all.

Mr. PRESTON. I then move to suspend the rules to permit me to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The House is already acting under a suspension of the rules, the House having suspended the rules to enable the gentleman from Indiana to report certain bills. That business had not been disposed of when the House found itself without a quorum. The question now is upon the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. As several committees of conference are now absent from the House, if it is the unanimous consent of the House that the House take a recess until seven o'clock, I will withdraw the motion that there be a call of the House, and substitute that motion.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I object to the motion for a recess.

Mr. PRINGLE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McMULLIN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion, so that I may move to suspend the rules in order that the House may take a recess.

Mr. PRINGLE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The House is now acting under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Unless there was unanimous consent to taking a recess, I did not withdraw the motion that there be a call of the House. And on that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, and BRECKINRIDGE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the House refused to order a call of the House, the tellers having reported—ayes 28, noes 96.

The question then recurred on the passage of the bill to incorporate the National Hotel Company.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I desire to make a short statement in regard to this bill before a recount is had. I will not occupy the time of the House five minutes. This is a Senate bill to incorporate a company in the city of Washington for the purpose of building a hotel. It was referred, some four months ago, to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and the committee unanimously agreed to report it with an amendment introducing the individual liability clause. It is a bill in which I have no earthly interest. It is drawn up in the usual form of bills of incorporation, and it expressly provides that this company shall not engage in banking, or the issue of any bills in the shape of money for circulation. The amendment of the committee, to which I desire to call the attention of the House, and which, I think, will prove satisfactory to the House, introduces the individual liability clause. The stockholders of this company are individually liable in their own individual capacity for all the debts of the company in whatsoever manner they shall be contracted. And, further, Congress reserves the right to repeal, alter, modify, or change this charter at pleasure. I think that is sufficient to warrant the passage of this bill, knowing, as I do, that members desire a good hotel in Washington where they can get something good, clean, and nice to eat.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I desire briefly to give my reasons for opposing this bill. I am satisfied that special legislation is generally wrong, although, perhaps, there may be an exception in this case, although I doubt it very much. This bill merely amounts to this: that we are going to build a palace hotel where rich members of Congress and rich men who come here can stop, and pay three dollars a day. By establishing a hotel of this kind, you will break down all the other hotels.

[Cries of "They ought to be broken down!"] Mr. JONES. I do not know whether I am in order or not; but I hope the House will indulge me.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I understand from the gentleman who reported the bill, that there is a provision in it that no member of Congress shall be charged more than his daily pay. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. I look upon this question in a practical light. I do not intend, however, that it shall affect my pocket at all, for the hotel will not be built until I am at home, where I ought to be. [Laughter.] I know that the effect of sending splendid steamers and floating palaces across the Atlantic to Europe is to drive off all competition. It is the same with these grand hotels. I know—and I think that the common sense of every member of the House will bear me out in the opinion—that if we encourage the building of a palace in Washington, as large as this one is to be, we drive away all competition. [Laughter, and cries of "That is what we want!"]

The question being on the passage of the bill, Mr. JONES call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HUGHES and COX were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 45.

Mr. McNAIR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were demanded upon the passage of this bill, and they were refused by the House, no quorum appearing in the House. The Speaker counted, and there was no quorum. In fairness, the Chair believes the call for the yeas and nays to be in order.

The yeas and nays were not ordered. So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that they had concurred in the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill authorizing the extension of the Alexandria railroad into the District of Columbia.

UNITED STATES ARMORIES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War; which was read, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, August 3, 1854.
SIR: I have the honor to submit the inclosed papers in reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 31st ultimo, requiring information in relation to the application by either of the commissioners who visited Springfield armory under the act of March 3, 1853, for the office of superintendent of either of the national armories, or any recommendation by either of said commissioners for the appointment of any other person to that office; also, in relation to any application by or in behalf of any of the witnesses from Harper's Ferry or Springfield, who testified before the select committee of the House, to whom was referred the question of the expediency of employing military officers for the supervision of said works, for any officers in either of said armories, or any recommendation of either of said witnesses for any such office; also, in relation to any application by either of the members of said select committee, in their own behalf or in behalf of any other person or persons, for the appointment to any office connected with the prosecution of any of the various public works which are the subject of inquiry by said committee. From these papers it appears, that of the four civil commissioners who visited Springfield, one is a candidate for the superintendency of that armory, being recommended by the other three for that post; and that one of the latter has been recommended for the superintendency of Harper's Ferry armory; of the nine witnesses from Harper's Ferry and Springfield, who testified before the select committee, that three were candidates for the office of superintendent, and two for offices in said armories. Of the select committee, that the chairman was an applicant for the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings, when it included the supervision of the Capitol extension—a work referred to in the resolution—and that one of the members has recommended persons for office in the Harper's Ferry armory. Very respectfully, yours,

JEFF DAVIS, Secretary of War.

HON. LINN BOYD, Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the communication be laid upon the table and printed. It was so ordered.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. By unanimous consent, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill (No. 16) "to suppress the circulation of small notes, as currency, in the District of Columbia."

Referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. D. also, from the same committee, reported the following bills; which were severally read, the first and second time by their titles, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

A bill for the condemnation of land, &c., for the Washington aqueduct;

An act allowing the Metropolitan railroad to extend into the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

An act authorizing the corporate authorities of Georgetown to impose additional taxes, and for other purposes.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I ask leave of the House to present three or four reports from the Committee on Commerce, some of which I should like to have put upon their passage, and the rest to be referred; but if the House should order them all to be referred, I shall be content.

Leave was granted.

PROLONGATION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose that every gentleman upon this floor is satisfied that we cannot get through with our business by tomorrow, at twelve o'clock. I have a resolution proposing to extend the time until Monday next, at twelve o'clock, m.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. WENTWORTH then reported back, from the Committee on Commerce, the following Senate bills and resolution; which were referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

An act for the relief of Thomas Butler;

An act for the relief of the West Feliciana and Georgia Railroad and Banking Companies; and Joint resolution for the relief of Charles W. Morgan, William R. Rodman, and Edward Menan.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I now propose to report, and have put upon its passage, the bill of the Senate (No. 219) constituting Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. HENN. Do I understand the intention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to be to put that bill upon its passage?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman so stated.

Mr. HENN. I object to any bill being put upon its passage, unless the gentleman will also move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the first bill reported by the Committee on Commerce, and also put that upon its passage. I will not consent that one bill reported by that committee shall take precedence of another in the action of the House upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the objection comes too late. The gentleman from Massachusetts stated distinctly when he asked leave to make a report, that his purpose was to put some of the bills upon their passage.

Mr. HENN. If it is too late to object, I move to amend the bill by what I send to the Clerk's table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not embarrass the passage of this bill. It is merely to constitute Cairo a port of delivery. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. HENN. I presume there will be no objection to my amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But if the bill is amended it must go back to the Senate, and the whole will be lost.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I have not yielded the floor. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HENN. I think I have the floor legitimately, and have indicated my purpose to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did recognize the gentleman from Iowa, because he supposed the gentleman from Massachusetts had yielded the floor altogether. If the gentleman, however, claims the floor for the purpose of moving the previous question, the Chair will decide that he is entitled to it.

Mr. HENN. I claim the right to object to the bill. I did object distinctly before the title had been read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question presented by the gentleman from Iowa, upon the ground that the gentleman from Massachusetts twice distinctly stated that he had two bills which he desired to put upon their passage, and several others which he wished to have referred.

Mr. HENN. Well, sir, I will withdraw all objection, and allow the bill to pass without opposition from me.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. WENTWORTH, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back Senate bill No. 200, constituting San Pedro, in the State of California, a port of entry and delivery; which was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I should like to know something of the character of these bills.

Mr. WENTWORTH. They are drawn up in the usual form, and are recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury as necessary to the wants of commerce.

Mr. WENTWORTH, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

An act to provide for the establishment of a marine hospital at Shreveport, in the State of Louisiana, and Galena, in the State of Illinois.

Mr. MAXWELL. There is a bill which the chairman of the Committee on Commerce wishes to report, and I trust the gentleman will also include it in his report, as he has the floor.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Very well. I report back from the Committee on Commerce, Senate bill (No. 178) constituting Pilatka and Bayport, in the State of Florida, ports of entry and delivery, respectively.

Mr. HENN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to move, as an amendment, a provision constituting Keokuk and Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, ports of delivery. It has met with the approbation of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Gentlemen say that I have no right to offer amendments under the rule which has been adopted. Without the consent of the House I cannot do it. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HENN. The gentleman will force me to object to the bill. I will state for the information of the House, that this was one of the first bills reported from the Committee on Commerce, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I offer it as an amendment to this bill, and desire that it may be acted on, in order to save time.

The SPEAKER. If exception be taken to the bill, it cannot be received.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I desire to state that I am in favor of the bill of the gentleman from Iowa, and I am willing to accept it as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the introduction of the bill is not objected to, the question will be upon reading it the third time. If objected to, the bill cannot be received.

Mr. HENN. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consider the amendment as before the body.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

That Keokuk and Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, be, and hereby are, constituted ports of delivery within the collection district of New Orleans; and there shall be appointed a surveyor of the customs for each of said ports, who shall be residents thereat. Said surveyors shall perform the duties and receive the salary and emoluments prescribed by the act of Congress approved on the 2d day of March, 1831, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places."

Mr. HENN. I move the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object to that amendment. It is the entering wedge for custom-houses upon the Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked whether there was any objection, and paused, but heard no objection, and the amendment was sent up to the Clerk's desk. The Chair thinks that the objection came too late. The Chair is very well aware that misunderstandings will grow up when there is so much confusion in the Hall. The question now is upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the bill, with the proposed amendment, be laid on the table.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—ayes 28.

The SPEAKER. Not half of a quorum.

[Cries of "Count the other side!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ascertain whether there is a quorum in the House.

After a count, the Speaker announced that there were one hundred and twenty-nine members in their places.

So Mr. LETCHER's motion was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the demand for the previous question, the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to; and, under the further operation of the previous question, the bill was ordered to a third reading. It was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENN moved to amend the title by inserting the word "Keokuk and Dubuque," in the proper place.

The title of the bill was so amended.

Mr. DISNEY took the floor.

CHARGES AGAINST HON T. H. BAYLY.

Mr. MILLSON. I rise to a privileged question. The special committee which was charged with the investigation of certain complaints against my friend and colleague, [Mr. BAYLY,] have made a partial report, in which they absolve my colleague in the most absolute and unqualified manner from the first matter of complaint alleged against him; they report, however, that as respects the second allegation, involving some matters which I do not myself—and which, perhaps, the House will not deem of very great importance, they have not had an opportunity of investigating the subject, requiring, as it does, the examination of the Congressional Globe, as to certain speeches made by members of the House. They therefore ask that they may reserve to themselves the right to report upon that branch of the inquiry at a future day. But, as after the session terminates, their powers will be at an end, and having the most absolute assurance that the rest of their investigation of that matter will be what it has been in reference to the part of the inquiry which they have considered, and reflecting, as I am sure I do, the wishes of my friend from the Accomac district, [Mr. BAYLY,] I move that the committee have leave to continue their investigation at the next session of Congress.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a privileged motion, and one which I make in view of taking a recess. Most of the members came here early this morning, and are very much fatigued; and as we cannot take a recess under the rules of the House proper, and for the purpose of enabling the House to take a recess under the rules, I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. DISNEY] was regularly recognized by the Chair before the gentleman, and he is, therefore, entitled to the floor in preference, and the gentleman cannot submit the motion unless his colleague yields to him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask my colleague to yield to me to enable me to make that motion?

TITLE TO LANDS GRANTED TO STATES.

Mr. DISNEY. I cannot yield. I desire to ask the consent of the House to take up and pass three several bills, each of which is of great importance, and to each of which I imagine no objection will be made.

The first is a Senate bill, rendered necessary by a decision of the Supreme Court at its last session, by which were pronounced as invalid the title to all the lands granted by the General Government to the different States of the Union by the act of 1831; which lands have passed into the possession of the different States, and from them into the hands of innocent purchasers, and by them now held, without a title, according to the decision which I have referred to. The whole transaction has been carried on in good faith on all sides. Congress supposed the title valid, the Land Office supposed the title valid. The lands were taken possession of by the States and sold to innocent parties. By a recent decision of the Supreme Court, it has been held that all grants couched in the language "shall be granted," possessed no title whatever. I ask, therefore, the House to take up that bill of the Senate and put it upon its passage.

Mr. PRINGLE. Read the bill for information. The bill was read by its title, as follows:

An act to vest in the several States and Territories a title in fee to lands which have been, or may be, certified to them.

Mr. DISNEY. I move to put the bill upon its passage, and desire to say a solitary word upon it. [Loud cries of "No!" "No!" "Let it Go!" and confusion.]

Mr. DISNEY. Very well; if the House are satisfied, I am.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DISNEY. I now desire to report two bills, from the Committee on Public Lands, which are of the same character, both of which I desire to have put upon their passage. The first is Senate bill (No. 259) to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the lands to which said State is entitled, under the act of 8th of August, 1846, for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers.

The bill was read in extenso.

It was then ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DISNEY. The other is Senate bill (No. 19) to authorize the State of Illinois to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled, under the act approved March 2, 1827; to aid said State in opening a canal to connect the waters of the Illinois with those of Lake Michigan.

The bill was read through.

Mr. DISNEY. This bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands. I only desire to state—

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. DISNEY. If the House will pass the bill, I certainly do not desire to explain it.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would propose that a half hour be set apart for receiving reports from committees of the House for the purpose of reference only. If it be agreed to, it will relieve the House and Speaker a great deal.

[Cries of "I object!"]

PROLONGATION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the joint resolution of the two Houses directing the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to adjourn their respective Houses at twelve o'clock, m., Friday, the 4th of the present month, be rescinded; and that said officers adjourn their respective Houses at twelve o'clock, m., on Monday, the 7th of August.

Mr. MATTESON. I object.

Mr. JONES. I move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

Mr. MATTESON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. JONES's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 60, nays 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Belcher, Boccock, Boyce, Caskie, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Culom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Everhart, Florence, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, McDougall, McMullin, Macy, Maxwell, May, Smith Miller, Millson, Olds, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Rogers, Sapp, Shannon, Showers, Singleton, William Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Walker, Westbrook, and Daniel B. Wright—60.

NAYS—Messrs. David J. Bailey, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bridges, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Chandler, Christian, Cox, Craig, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dowdell, Edmunds, Ellison, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsley, McCulloch, McNair, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, John G. Miller, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Peck, Pennington, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Seward, Shaw, Simmons, George W. Smyth, Andrew Stuart, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, and Hendrick B. Wright—82.

So the rules were not suspended, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to report some bills from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I will say to the House that I shall not ask that any of them shall be put on their passage, but merely that they shall be referred.

Mr. HOWE. I hope that the Chair will again put his proposition to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition submitted by the Chair that a half hour be devoted to receiving reports from committees for reference?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the balance of the session be devoted to receiving reports from committees, the appropriation bills cannot be passed.

Mr. BAYLY. The bills which I have to report will not consume much time. One of them is to execute the reciprocity treaty; but I do not propose to put it on its passage at this session.

Mr. HOWE. I have endeavored to make some reports from the Committee on Military Affairs, and have always been met with objection. I object, unless the proposition of the Speaker be adopted, and we shall all have a fair chance.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose indicated.

The question was taken; and the rules were suspended.

RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Mr. BAYLY, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill "to carry into effect a treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed the 5th day of June, 1854," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAYLY, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back Senate bills and resolution of the following titles; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

An act for the relief of the personal representatives of William A. Slacum;

An act to make compensation to Henry Cronchey for extra services;

An act for the relief of Hiram Paulding;

An act for the relief of the representatives of Thomas D. Anderson, deceased, late consul of the United States at Tripoli;

Joint resolution manifesting the sense of Congress towards Commander Edward Marshall, commanding her Britannic Majesty's ship Virago, and the officers and crew who were detached by his order for the relief of the surveying party under the command of Lieutenant J. G. Strain; and

An act for the relief of William Duer.

Mr. COBB. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House that the House proceed to receive reports from committees. I have no reports to make myself. If there be objection, I shall move a suspension of the rules.

NATIONAL ARMORIES, ETC.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I move to reconsider the vote by which the communication from the Secretary of War, received this morning, was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed, so that I may be afforded an opportunity to correct some mistakes made therein, concerning myself as a member of this House. The communication is in answer to a resolution of this House adopted a few days ago, the object of which was to ascertain whether or not either of the six gentlemen appointed by the President some time ago to visit the Springfield armory had recommended anybody to office as superintendent of either of the national armories. It was the design of the resolution, I have no doubt, to discredit the reports of some of these gentlemen, with a view to defeat the measure in regard to the armories, now pending in the Senate.

The Secretary was further called on for information as to whether either of the gentlemen who had testified, on oath, before the select committee, on the subject of the superintendency of the national armories, had, at any time, been applicants for position in any one of those armories. The design of this part of the resolution is equally apparent, and also grows out of an earnest desire to defeat the armory measure, by discrediting testimony given by respectable men, under the solemn obligations of an oath. The resolution further required the Secretary of War to communicate to this House the fact whether any member of the select committee had made application for any office connected with the works named in the resolution, under which it was created, either for themselves, or in behalf of others. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] and myself were the members to which reference was made. The Secretary of War says that the chairman of the select committee—myself—was an applicant for the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, when it included the supervision of the Capitol extension, and that the gentleman from Virginia had recommended persons for office at Harper's Ferry armory. So far as I am referred to, the Secretary of War communicates to this House what is not true, as I never made application for Commissioner of Public Buildings, when that office "included the supervision of the Capitol extension." The mistake, no doubt, arises from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, who writes to the Secretary of War and communicates a note written by me on the 31st of March, 1853, at the request of several gentlemen of this city; and the most urgent in requesting me to write it was the late General Armstrong.

The note referred to related to the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings. I stated in it to the Secretary that I had been importuned by many of the citizens of Washington, because of some supposed fitness which they imagined I possessed for that post, to seek for the office of Commissioner. I did not ask for the appointment, nor did I really desire it. I only stated that if it were conferred on me, I would endeavor to discharge its duties. But in a very short time after I published a card declining to have anything to do with it, and refusing to be considered as seeking or desiring the office. The Secretary of the Interior says:

"The extension of the United States Capitol is the only civil public work the subject of inquiry by the special committee of the House of Representatives with which this Department has any connection. By order of the President, issued on the 1st of April, 1853, the charge and supervision of this work was transferred to your Department. Previous to such transfer it had been under the immediate supervision of the Commissioner, an officer of the Department, who acted in the capacity of disbursing agent."

Now, sir, here is a very great mistake, which I am sure must be unintentional by Mr. McClelland. You can readily see the effect of it. The idea conveyed is, that I sought the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings in order that I might have the disbursement of the fund appropriated for the extension of the Capitol; and as a member of the select committee, my conduct had been controlled by motives of disappointment. I had met with no disappointment, and any inference that my course has been directed by such motives is absolutely false. Why, sir, the Capitol extension was not under the specific direction of the President of the United States; and the very law which put it under his direction, required that he should appoint an architect, who was charged with the disbursement of the money. At the time the late Administration went out of power, the architect who was in charge of the work had the disbursement of the fund, gave bonds, and settled his account regularly every month at the Comptroller's office. The Commissioner of Public Buildings had no more connection with the work than you, Mr. Speaker. He had nothing whatever to do in his official capacity with that work. His duties were confined to other objects. It is all a gross mistake.

It will be recollected that at the close of the last session of Congress a law was passed relieving the architect from the disbursement of the funds at the Capitol, and authorizing the President to appoint an agent for that purpose. The history of that enactment is this: An amendment was offered to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill in the Senate authorizing the Commissioner of Public Buildings to disburse that money. This was before the 4th of March, 1853—a month before my note was written. When it came into this House, I went myself to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and requested him not to agree to the amendment of the Senate, with that provision in it, and the words "Commissioner of Public Buildings" was stricken out, and the words "a disbursing agent" substituted at my request, by the chairman of the committee. And the law passed the House in that shape, giving the President the power to appoint a disbursing agent other than the Commissioner. It could not, therefore, be true that the work was under the immediate supervision of the Commissioner. The letter of mine to which the Secretary refers was written a month after that law came into operation. The fact is, the Commissioner of Public Buildings, from the time of the first appointment of the architect, never had anything to do with the disbursement of the money at the Capitol, as the reports to Congress and the laws and records of the Government will show. The Secretary has no doubt been misled, and I am satisfied has not knowingly lent himself to this unjustifiable and disreputable effort to prejudice the armory question by misrepresenting and assailing myself and others.

Now, I have written a letter to the Secretary of the Interior calling his attention to the errors contained in his letter to the Secretary of War, and do not doubt he will cheerfully correct them; and I ask that the printing of the communication of the Secretary of War may not be ordered until I can receive the answer of the Secretary of the Interior. I want the antidote to go with the poison.

Mr. FAULKNER. When the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DICKINSON], some days ago, submitted his resolution asking the information now furnished by the War Department, it was objected to by my friend from Maryland, [Mr. VANSANT], and also by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. CHURCHWELL]. At my request they withdrew their objections, and the resolution was adopted. I thought the inquiry a very small affair, and scarcely worthy of the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts, or of the consideration of Congress. Still, as the statement had gone abroad, and been widely circulated, that some of the commissioners engaged in the investigation at Springfield had been applicants for the place of civil superintendent; as that statement had been denied, and as many unfounded and exaggerated reports had gained currency on that subject, I thought it better that the facts should appear before the country in some authentic form, that those concerned in the inquiry might fearlessly confront the accusation, and have justice done to their character and motives. The inquiry was, in many respects, objectionable in principle, but it did not become the friends of these gentlemen to oppose any obstacle to the full development of the truth. So, when the response of the Secretary of War was received a few moments ago, and partially read at the Clerk's table, I asked that its further reading be dispensed with, and printed.

My friend from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] now asks that the motion to print be reconsidered; and in his remarks sustaining his proposition he has informed the House that my name is alluded to in the report of the Secretary of War, and that a letter of mine is among the papers ordered to be published. Sir, the Secretary of War, or any other Secretary, is at perfect liberty to publish any letter of mine addressed to him officially or privately, so far as I care. Certain it is that no letter of mine will be found in any Department of this Government presenting my name for any Executive post or appointment. No, sir; I have the proud gratification to say before this House, that at no period of my life, nor under any Administration which has ever exercised power in this country, has my name, directly or indirectly, been presented to any President or Cabinet Minister for office. The letter written by me, and now to be published, is one recommending a most excellent and competent mechanic to the post of master armorer at Harper's Ferry. I made that recommendation, not only from my own sense of its propriety, but because urged and instructed to do so by a large body of my constituents. That letter has been eviscerated from the files of the War Department, where it has been permitted to slumber for more than twelve months, and is now laid before this House for the avowed and sole object of detracting from the great weight and influence of the evidence of Adam Rhuleman, by seeking to show that he was interested in the change of superintendency at Harper's Ferry.

I cannot see how this fact can support the conclusion sought to be drawn from it. His application for the post was made, and his testimony given, under the military superintendency. He did not come forward as a volunteer to testify. He was brought before the committee by the stern mandate of this House, and his evidence is marked by all that clearness, force, and caution which distinguishes an honest and truthful witness. I know Mr. Rhuleman well, and I know him to possess a reputation for truth not excelled by any of his assailants. I feel proud of the interest which I have taken in his advancement. I desired him to fill the place of a man at Harper's Ferry, who had by his partisan conduct rendered himself unworthy of the post. The Secretary of War, in my judgment, erred most grossly in permitting him to remain in office one hour after he had himself pronounced a severe official judgment upon his conduct; and I here assert that the interests of the Government could not have been better subserved than by the appointment of Mr. Rhuleman to the place to which I recommended him, and which he is so eminently qualified to fill.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I did not intend to convey any such impression.

Mr. KEITT. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to engage in any discussion upon this subject again this session. The information just communicated to the House by the Secretary of War, in conformity with a resolution of this body, I have not had time to examine. I desire, however, to have it printed, as it throws light upon the evidence submitted to the special committee as to the change of superintendence of the armories. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Dickinson] submitted his resolution to me before offering it to the House. I concurred in the propriety of getting the information called for in it, as it would hereafter enable the House to act with more deliberation, and with more fullness of knowledge. I had heard that most of the witnesses who testified before the committee, had been dismissed for good cause from the armories, and were again applying for admission into the armories, or were applying for offices in it, and if employed, were making applications for higher offices. I understood, too, that some of the commissioners who had been appointed to examine into the condition and management of the armories, and who had conducted an examination into the one at Springfield, had made application for the superintendency of one or more of said armories. This information I desired the House to be put in possession of. In every civilized community a witness is ruled from the stand who has a personal and specific interest in the issue. The House adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Stanton], as I conceived, upon the testimony of these witnesses, and the report of these commissioners. Now, sir, if it appeared that all, or nearly all of these persons, upon whose statements and advice this change was made, were personally interested in the issue of the cause in which their testimony was given, might I not expect or hope that the House would review its decision?

Mr. VANSANT. Does the gentleman from South Carolina say all the witnesses were applicants?

Mr. KEITT. I am not sure, but I think all were.

Mr. VANSANT. Mr. Hobbs was not; he left the army because of vile oppression.

Mr. KEITT. I am sick, sir, sick of this cry of oppression—oppression. Oppression has been rung in our ears with as much sobbing tenacity as Ophelia cried "Willow, willow." I should like to hear or see some proof of the oppression, apart from declamation. My friend from Maryland [Mr. VANSANT] is honest, perfectly honest; but I cannot agree with him that oppression has been proved in any case. I may be mistaken, sir, in saying that every witness was an applicant, but I have heard that nearly all were. However, sir, the communication from the Secretary of War will show everything.

I was saying, sir, that if all, or nearly all, of those upon whose statements or advice the change in the management of the armories was made, were interested in the result, would not the House regard their testimony as biased and unreliable, and its own decision, thus influenced, as unwise? I repeat, sir, that in every civilized community a witness is ruled from the stand, if he has a personal interest in the issue of the case he proposes to testify in, unless he releases such interest. These witnesses, it is said, have such interest, and have not released—it will they be unprejudiced witnesses? Interest, sir, unconsciously warps. I did think, sir, that with these material, important, and flagrant facts brought to the attention of the House, its decision would be reviewed. I thought so, because it was a matter of prime interest with us all—with each of us. All of our constituencies are interested in the profitable and economical management of these armories, and in the efficient and skillful manufacture of arms. They are interested in their profitable management, because they pay the taxes out of which they are supported, and they are interested in the skillful manufacture of arms, because their sons and kinsmen, or friends and neighbors, may commit, in battle, their lives and honor upon their efficiency. I did think then, sir, that the House would review a material change like this, when the testimony upon which it made it was destroyed. Here, too, I may say that I have heard, and other members have heard, of threats and rumors of expulsion, when this change has been consummated.

It will be remembered that, when the change was under discussion, I told the committee that it would inure to the benefit of the politicians. Yes, sir, in a struggle, the "spoils" will go to them. Sir, I believed that behind the "masked battery" of the "mechanics," they were firing upon the public interest and the Treasury. This belief has been deepened by recent rumors. We have been told here that intriguers for the change in the management of the armories, and for putting them under the control, as it is said, of "civilians," have threatened the expulsion of every mechanic who did not aid and cooperate for the procurement of this change. Yes, sir, these "mechanics," whose interests are so dear, are to be sacrificed, unless they belong to the agitating and intriguing portion of them. If they dare to uphold the public interest, if they dare to uphold the most profitable management of the armories, if they dare to refuse participation in a scheme of agitation to change an existing law, they are to be sacrificed. Yes, sir, in a scheme of agitation, those who will not share in the plot are to be offered up as a holocaust to appease the vengeance of the intriguers. And this is protection to the "mechanical interest." If this be protection, then God save the mark!

Let me ask the House, sir, to look this matter in the eye. It is said that the mechanics in the armories, who refused to agitate for the change, in the event of the consummation of such change, are to be dismissed. Sir, I fear that this is a prelude to a political saturnalia. I fear you will make these armories political shambles. Threatenings of these expulsions have already come to us; and when the change is made, the shrift will be short, and the death warrant quickly made out. Sir, can it be that the only men in our land trained up by special instruction to superintend the manufacture of arms, are to be excluded from such office? Can it be, sir, that the Administration is to be excluded in the selection of its agents from that class specially instructed to the performance of the duties involved in the office to be filled?

Mr. Speaker, I will not trouble the House further. I desired to invoke its attention to the fact that many of the witnesses were interested.

Mr. VANSANT. If you want disinterested witnesses, where will you get them?

Mr. KEITT. Sir, I will only say that one of the witnesses came from my own State, [Major Huger.] His family is one of revolutionary renown. His name one which gems the brightest page of the history of my own State. He won laurels, too, in the Mexican war. He had been superintendent at Harper's Ferry, but was not when examined before us. He told me he went there as a matter of duty only, and it was regarded by all the officers as unpleasant duty. He received no compensation as superintendent, and was subjected to continual annoyance and persecution. Sir, he was a disinterested witness.

Mr. CRAIGE. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will send up to the Clerk's desk and have read the letter written by him to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STANTON. Certainly; I have no objection. The letter was then read by the Clerk.

Mr. STANTON. I am ready to say, and repeat what I said before, that this was the only document, in reference to this matter, which went to the Department; and this was written at the request of General Armstrong. I make the motion to reconsider, in order to afford the Secretary of the Interior an opportunity to correct the error which I am sure he has unintentionally committed, with respect to this matter. I want but the facts as they really existed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 40, noes not counted.

So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was then taken upon the reconsideration; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 35, noes not counted.

So the House refused to reconsider the vote.

The rules were then suspended; and it was Ordered, That for half an hour reports be received from committees for reference only, and that should not give rise to debate.

Mr. HIBBARD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred Senate bill (No. 380) "to authorize the coinage of gold pieces of the value respectively of ten eagles and five eagles, and for other purposes," reported the same back to the House with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. McDUGALL asked the unanimous consent of the House to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. ORR objected.

Objection being made to the passage of the bill, it was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HIBBARD. The Committee of Ways and Means have also instructed me to report back House bill No. 336, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1855." There are seven amendments to the bill, adopted by the Senate, in two of which the Committee of Ways and Means recommend concurrence. Those two are Nos. 1 and 4. In the rest of the Senate's amendments the committee recommend non-concurrence. I hope the House will now proceed to consider these amendments.

The Senate's amendments make appropriations. With the consent of the House, we can act upon them without referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. If objection be made, the bill and amendments must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAVEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the bill and amendments must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAVEN. Is the bill so referred now?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HAVEN. By what process?

The SPEAKER. By the order of the House that bills should be reported by the committees, and reported without debate. By the unanimous consent of the House the rules were suspended for that purpose.

Mr. HAVEN. Well, I ask the Speaker how this bill was put in the position that the Committee of Ways and Means could report on it?

The SPEAKER. It was referred to that committee this morning.

Mr. HAVEN. I beg pardon of the Speaker.

I understood that the friends of the river and harbor bill would have allowed no such business to be done. [Laughter.]

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLER, of Missouri. I am instructed by the Committee of Claims, to report back Senate bill (No. 361) "for the relief of Frederick Vincent, administrator of James Le Caze, survivor of Le Caze & Mallet," with an amendment. I hope it will be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. MILLER. Then I ask that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

I was so ordered.

Mr. RUFFIN, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Isaac C. Lockwood; also, adversely on the petition of Archibald M. Kitzmiller; also, adversely on the petition of Benjamin M. Sayer; which reports were severally ordered to be laid on the table, and printed.

Mr. VANSANT. It is evident that there is a determination upon the part of the minority of the House not to take up any appropriation bills; and as I feel fatigued, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Before that motion is put, I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Territories.

The SPEAKER. There is an order that the committees shall make reports for half an hour, and in that time all the reports can be got in.

Mr. VANSANT's motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FENTON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back House bill (No. 395) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for recording the evidence of vessels, and for other purposes," passed July 29, 1850. Referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. F. also, from the same committee, reported to increase the compensation of the inspectors of customs; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of James Holstein; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. H. also, from the same committee, to which was referred a bill to provide for the sale of the public lands in the Territory of Nebraska, and to establish a land office therein; and a bill to provide for the survey and sale of the public lands in the Territory of Kansas, and to establish a land office therein, reported back the same, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, on the ground that the objects of the bills had been accomplished by another act.

It was so ordered.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill for the relief of William Case; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. S. also, from the same committee, to whom was referred Senate bill (No. 194) to provide a place for a post office in the city of Philadelphia, and for the courts of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, reported back the same, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, on the ground that the object of the bill had been accomplished by another bill.

It was so ordered.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to regulate the salaries of the district judges of the United States; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. PARKER. I ask the permission of the House to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. PARKER. Then I move to suspend the rules to enable me to do so.

The SPEAKER. The motion cannot be made, as we are now acting under the suspension of the rules.

Mr. PARKER. Then I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WALSH. I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. PARKER. Then I withdraw the bill. No objection being made, the bill was withdrawn.

Mr. NICHOLS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported the following Senate bills; which were referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

An act authorizing the legal representatives of Antonio Vasquez, Hypolite Vasquez, Joseph Vasquez, and John Calligan, to enter certain lands in Missouri.

An act for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of William Weeks.

An act for the benefit of the heir-at-law of Lieutenant C. A. Wickliffe.

Mr. NICHOLS. I now desire to report, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, a Senate bill "appointing commissioners to ascertain certain facts relative to certain private land claims in the State of Michigan." It is to ascertain all the facts that can be ascertained as to what law these claims are under, whether they have not expired by limitation, &c. It is important that the bill should be passed during the present session. There can be no reasonable objection to it, and I ask the unanimous consent of the House to put it upon its passage.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. NICHOLS. I appeal to the gentleman from New York to withdraw his objection. It is of very great importance that it should be passed.

Mr. WALSH. I do not withdraw my objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. I have another bill from the same committee which I am also very anxious should be put upon its passage. It is Senate bill (No. 297) for the relief of Sylvanus Culver. I hope no member of the House will object. It is a revolutionary claim. The claimant, I know, is a very worthy person, and the claim is a just one. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to put the bill upon its passage.

There was no objection; and the bill was read in extenso by the Clerk.

It provides for granting one hundred and twenty acres of land to Sylvanus Culver.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. NICHOLS. On Friday last, under a misapprehension of the state of facts as to the action of our committee, Senate bill No. 336 was laid upon the table. I ask now that that bill may be taken up and placed upon the Calendar, or, if I can have the unanimous consent of the House, put the bill on its passage.

Mr. MACDONALD. I object to the bill being put on its passage.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman from Maine understood the circumstances under which this bill was laid upon the table the other day, I think that he would withdraw his objection to the bill now.

Mr. MACDONALD. I cannot withdraw my objection.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GREENWOOD, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back Senate bill (No. 233) for the relief of Susan Coody and others, with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed:

A bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of John Randon, deceased.

Mr. H., from the same committee, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

A bill for the relief of Captain Isaac D. Beauregard.

Mr. EDGERTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to put that bill on its passage.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAIGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report the following bill:

An act to authorize the extension and completion of the Treasury Buildings; and also the construction of a building for the War, Navy, and Interior Departments.

I ask the unanimous consent of the House to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. CRAIGE. I hope gentlemen will allow me to make a short statement in regard to the necessity of the passage of this bill. I have been trying to get the floor for the last ten or twelve days, and have sought it again and again for the purpose of making this report. The bill has already passed the Senate. Every Administration, from the days of General Jackson down to this time, has recommended the erection of these buildings; and every head of the Department, from that time to this, has recommended it. At this particular time, I am informed, that the public archives of the country are actually in the greatest danger. The records of the Treasury Department and the State Department are exposed to destruction for the want of a suitable place in which to deposit them.

Mr. WALSH. My objection is not withdrawn.

Mr. CRAIGE. I move that the rules be suspended.

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order, as the House is now acting under a suspension of the rules.

On motion by Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, it was Ordered, That Jacob Benner, of Ross county, Ohio, have leave to withdraw papers filed by him, in order that he might present them to the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories to report the following bill:

A bill declaring the southern boundary of New Mexico.

I ask that the bill may be read for the information of the House, with a view of putting it upon its passage, in accordance with the recommendation of the committee. I ask that the bill may be read, so that every gentleman will see at once the necessity that exists for its passage.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope there will be no objection; and that the bill will be allowed to pass.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHURCHWELL, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

An act in addition to an act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February 3, 1853.

Mr. PHILLIPS. In relation to the bill just reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, I ask that the rules be suspended, with a view of having that bill sent to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, joint rules 16 and 17 will be suspended in this particular case, and the bill will be sent to the Senate.

There being no objection, the rules were suspended.

Mr. EDMUNDSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the following bill, with a recommendation that it do not pass:

An act for the relief of Nancy Payne and Sarah Laramee.

Mr. E., from the same committee, presented an adverse report on the petition of Ellen A. Schmuck.

Mr. E., from the same committee, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

A bill for the relief of Jephtha L. Heraminger. Mr. E. I am instructed by the same committee to report adversely on the petitions of Esther Bartlett, and another, inasmuch as one of the general bills passed covers the cases.

The petition and reports were laid on the table.

Mr. E. I am also instructed, by the same committee, to report back, under the same circumstances, a bill for the relief of certain widows and orphans.

Laid on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That joint rule No. 16 be so far suspended as to receive from the Senate a bill changing the name of the brig Glamorgan.

There being no objection, rule No. 16 was suspended for the purpose indicated.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is there not on the Speaker's table a joint resolution of the Senate proposing to suspend joint rules Nos. 16 and 17?

The SPEAKER. There is, to suspend them generally.

Mr. JONES. Then I propose we take up that resolution, and act upon it.

The SPEAKER. The House is now acting under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HIBBARD. I ask if the thirty minutes, for which the rules were suspended, have not expired?

The SPEAKER. The time has expired.

Mr. STRAUB. Although the time has expired, I hope the balance of the committees will be permitted to go on and make their reports.

The SPEAKER. There are but three or four committees more, and the Chair hopes they may be permitted to report.

No objections were made, and

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred Senate bill (No. 191) for the relief of Thomas B. Parsons, reported back the same, and asked to put it upon its passage.

Mr. WALSH objecting, the bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAIL, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate bill (No. 276) for the relief of Mrs. Ann W. Angus, reported back the same, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. V. also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate bill (No. 192) for the relief of Amos Knapp, reported the same back to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid upon the table.

Mr. STRAUB, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which were referred the petition of William Jacob, a soldier in the war of 1812, for a pension; the petition of Adam Hays, late a surgeon in the United States Army, for back pension; the petition of William Clark, asking arrears of pay as an invalid pensioner; and the petition of John Fullins, asking for a pension, made adverse reports upon the same respectively; and they were ordered to be laid upon the table.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred Senate bill (No. 245) to amend the provision of the fifty-sixth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," approved March 2, 1779; reported back the same, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. FULLER. I ask that the bill may be put upon its passage now.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMANDS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Lot Davis; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDGERTON, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Putnam.

Mr. E. I ask to put that bill upon its passage. No objection being made, the bill was read a first and second time.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was subsequently read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. WALSH,] consents to withdraw his objection to the Senate bill which I reported a short time since, and I now move that the bill be put upon its passage. It is Senate bill (No. 145) to amend the provisions of the fifty-sixth section of an act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," approved the 2d of March, 1799."

The bill was read in extenso.

It was then ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

PAY OF THE EMPLOYEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. SMITH, of Va. I have a resolution for the introduction of which I ask the unanimous consent of the House, and to which I am sure there will be no objection. I desire to offer the following:

Resolved, That a select committee be appointed to report to this House at its next session, the amount received by each of its employees from all sources for the services performed by them during the present session; the amount they will be entitled to receive under the existing laws at the next session; and also the time each is actually and necessarily employed during the present Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman that he specify the number of his committee.

Mr. SMITH. I will say five.

There was no objection, and the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the vote by which the resolution was adopted be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to suspend the 16th and 17th joint rules, to enable the bill, which has just been passed, to be sent to the Senate and be signed by the President.

Mr. WALSH. I object. We have had enough of this sort of business. I shall object to anything out of the regular order.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill more effectually to provide for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. PRESTON. I will ask the House to put that bill on its passage. There is no statute in our books to punish the forgery of land warrants or assignments. Forgeries have been committed, and the culprits have escaped. The bill provides a remedy, and I think that it ought to be passed before we adjourn.

Objection was made, and the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed:

A bill for the relief of Edward Burcher.

Mr. FENTON asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The bill is entitled:

An act in relation to the employment of apprentices in the merchant service of the United States.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to procure a report from F. W. Lander, civil engineer, of a railroad route from Puget's Sound, by Fort Hall, to Great Salt Lake and the Mississippi river; and that he cause a copy thereof to be furnished to this House.

Resolved, further, That the reports of surveys for a railroad to the Pacific made under the direction of the Secretary of War, also the said report of F. W. Lander, be printed for the use of the House during the recess.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose indicated.

The question was taken; and the rules were suspended.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The question was put; and there were only thirteen in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. There are only one hundred and four members in the Hall.

Mr. ORR. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. ROBBINS. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to have tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts, and CHAMBERLAIN, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 23, noes 103.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. ORR. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from California [Mr. McDOUGALL] if the survey of Puget's Sound, by Fort Hall and Salt Lake City, to the Mississippi river, has been already made?

Mr. McDOUGALL. It has been made, and the engineer who made it is now in Washington.

Mr. ORR. Then I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. The survey has been made, I believe, for a private company; and the object of this resolution is to get Congress now to pay for the expense of it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and Mr. McDOUGALL. Not at all.

Mr. UPHAM. If it be in order, I should be glad to state to the House, briefly, the facts of the case. Mr. Lander was employed as the chief civil engineer accompanying Governor Stevens in his explorations to Puget's Sound last winter. At the request of the Legislature of the Territory of Washington, and under their auspices, he started for Puget's Sound with but four men. He explored a country never before explored—a country full of dangers and difficulties. And he has ascertained a perfectly practicable route for a railroad from Puget's Sound, to a point in intersection with the central route of the Pacific railroad. He also explored the country from the mountains to Council Bluffs. And his explorations are known to be of great value. He is a competent and experienced railroad engineer, and was acting, as I have said, under the auspices of the new territorial government of Washington. And if this House is to act next winter, on the great question of the Pacific railroad, it will be of extreme importance to have the facts which he has collected brought before them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the resolution; and it was adopted.

THE POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HIBBARD. For the purpose of acting on the general post office appropriation bill, I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PRESTON. I object.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the motion will not be agreed to.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—ayes 71, noes 72.

So (two thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PRINGLE. I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHURCHWELL and MATTESON were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, (a sufficient number;) and the yeas and nays were ordered.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 133.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, David J. Bailey, Banks, Belcher, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caskie, Chamberlain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, John G. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Latham, Letcher, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Macy, Maxwell, May, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Nichols, Noble, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Riddle, Robbins, Ruffin, Shower, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Bennett, Carpenter, Chandler, Cook, Corwin, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Giddings, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Knox, Lindsley, Matteson, Morgan, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Wade, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, and Tappan Wentworth—45.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is the consideration of the Senate amendments to the Post Office bill. The amendments will be reported.

First amendment:

Page two, after line nine, insert the following:

For compensation of post routes, as contained in the bill passed at the present session of Congress establishing routes, $1,000.

To enable the Postmaster General to purchase the patent of the "clam-shell padlock," should he be of opinion that the public service requires it, the sum of $10,000.

Mr. HIBBARD. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment. I will not detain the committee by debating it, as it recommends itself.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

At the end of the bill add the following section:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That hereafter the Postmaster General be authorized and directed to continue the mail service between Charleston, Key West, and Havana, during August and September, by a competent steamer, as it is now being performed during ten months of the year; and that to enable him to do so, $10,000 are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HIBBARD. The route referred to in that amendment is not now recognized by any law, and the amendment establishes, therefore, a new route. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Third amendment:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there be allowed and paid to the postmaster of Washington city, District of Columbia, out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, a commission of one mill per pound upon the aggregate weight of public documents printed by order of Congress, and deposited in the office of said postmaster to be mailed; the said allowance to commence with the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1853, and to be computed for the first year for the ascertained weight for the month of January, 1854. And that the said postmaster be required to pay out of the said commissions to the clerks and other employees of his office, a sum not exceeding $250 each, per annum, as compensation for the extra labor performed by them in the assortment and mailing of said documents; and that he be required to account for, and settle with, the Post Office Department, for the disbursement of these commissions, and any surplus that may remain, in the same manner as is now required in the settlement of his other accounts.

Mr. HIBBARD. The Committee of Ways and Means being of the opinion that the adoption of that amendment would produce a great and unnecessary expense, recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. VANSANT. I hope that the recommendation of the committee will not be agreed to, but that the House will concur in the Senate amendment in that particular. I have had some experience in connection with the Post Office Department in this country, in one of our largest offices, and I know something of the nature and extent of the services required to be performed by the clerks in that Department. I know, of my own observation, that the clerks in that department of the service perform more labor, and work more hours, than do the clerks connected with any other department of the General Government, and they are generally poorer paid than the clerks in any other office of the General Government; and I do hope this amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Maryland tell me what officer of this Government is not poorly paid, and worked to death, at that? [Laughter.]

Mr. VANSANT. That question is not pertinent to the subject I am discussing. I am speaking of the labors of the clerks in the Post Office Department.

Mr. JONES. This amendment has no reference to the clerks in the Post Office Department. It is in reference to the clerks in the city post office.

Mr. VANSANT. I understand all that; but, sir, the clerks in the city post office belong to the General Post Office Department.

Mr. JONES. No more than those in the post office in the city of Baltimore do.

Mr. VANSANT. They are a part of the Post Office Department; and let me say, that I believe the clerks in the post offices, not only in the city of Washington, but in the cities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, are poorer paid and harder worked than the employees in any other department of the Government. This amendment, I believe, would give them about $200 each additional pay.

Mr. HIBBARD. It will give them about $250 each.

Mr. VANSANT. I presume the gentleman from New Hampshire is right.

Mr. HIBBARD. It proposes to pay one mill per pound upon all the matter which passes through the office.

Mr. VANSANT. Well, sir, I hope this amendment will be concurred in. I do not regard it as liberal. It is pure, sheer justice to the clerks in this post office.

The amendment to the Senate amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was then non-concurred in.

[The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that they had concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 178) to incorporate the National Hotel Company in Washington city; that they had concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 179) to constitute Pilatka and Bayport, in the State of Florida, ports of delivery respectively.]

The committee then resumed its session.

Fourth amendment:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the surviving late Vice President of the United States shall have, during his life, the same authority to frank letters and other mail matter, which he possessed while he was in office; and the same authority shall belong to future Vice Presidents, after they go out of office.

Mr. HIBBARD. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. ROBBINS. I demand tellers upon concurring.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WALSH and FLORENCE were appointed.

The question was put; and, on a division, there were—ayes 57, noes 63.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope we shall progress with the business without having constantly to drum up members.

Mr. ROBBINS. Let us have a recount.

[Cries of "Call the roll!"]

The roll was then called, and the following gentlemen failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Banks, Barry, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bissell, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Colquitt, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dent, Dickinson, Disney, Drum, Durham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Etheridge, Ewing, Flagler, Goode, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Hastings, Henn, Hester, Hillyer, Howe, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kittredge, Lamb, Lane, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Packer, Bishop Perkins, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Singleton, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, George W. Smyth, Sollers, David Stuart, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vail, Walker, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Yates, and Zollicoffer.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Post Office appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments thereto; and having found itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and had directed him to report the facts to the House, with the names of the absentees.

A quorum having answered to their names, the committee again resumed its session.

The amendment was again read by the Clerk.

Mr. STRATTON. I offer the following amendment:

And the same shall extend to all who have been members of either House of Congress, or who may hereafter be, but it shall not extend to those of the present Congress.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred upon the Senate amendment.

Mr. WHEELER demanded tellers.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wish to state to the Chair, that tellers were appointed, the question was taken, and the tellers reported, when the committee found itself without a quorum.

The tellers having resumed their places, the question was again put, and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Cranston Laurie a reasonable compensation for performing the duties of two desks in the Post Office Department, not to exceed half pay of a clerk for the time he was so employed.

Mr. HIBBARD. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know on what ground the committee have come to the conclusion to recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment. The facts with reference to this claim of Mr. Laurie's are succinctly stated in the words of the amendment itself. The Senate felt conscious that it was a claim of strict justice. Certainly nothing but justice is to be subserved by the amendment. The Senate adopted it almost without a dissenting voice.

I ask if this committee are ready to do injustice by refusing this claim. Sir, there is not a duty incumbent on us as representatives of the people higher than that of allowing just claims. Seeing as we see, and knowing as we know, that many persons in public employment are paid beyond their just deserts, it is a duty that we owe to the public, it is a duty that we owe to ourselves, to encourage the faithful in well-doing. This, sir, is precisely a claim of that nature; and I hope, therefore, that the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means will not be followed, but that this committee will concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the committee will do no such thing.

Mr. HIBBARD. I have but one word to say in reference to this amendment. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a non-concurrence in it, on the ground—as I understand it—first—

[Loud cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The question was then taken; and the Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be authorized and directed to establish a mail on the Mississippi river from Cairo to New Orleans, and from Keokuk, Iowa, to Galena, in Illinois, and that he contract for the same in one line, or in such divisions or sections, or both, as may be most compatible with the public service; and to facilitate the execution of this section, the Postmaster General may make immediate temporary arrangements for carrying said mail by the trip, and if he fails to obtain acceptable bids after advertising for thirty days, he may make private contracts for carrying said mail, and the said mail shall be carried daily from Cairo to New Orleans, but the Postmaster General is authorized, at his discretion, to restrict the delivery of the mail at all other points than Cairo, Memphis, Napoleon, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans, to three mails a week, each way, provided nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the rights of parties heretofore contracting for said service.

Mr. HIBBARD. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had signed a joint resolution, and bills of the House of the following titles:

Joint resolution directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, late pension agent at Portland, Maine;

An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855;

An act for the relief of Jesse R. Faulkner, of Missouri;

An act for the relief of James Walsh;

An act for the relief of W. D. Porter, of the United States Navy;

An act for the relief of the civil township of Marion, in the county of Mercer, Ohio;

An act for the relief of Benjamin Hammond, of the State of New York;

An act for the relief of Charlotte S. Westcott;

An act for the relief of Henry N. Halsied;

An act for the relief of John Frink;

An act for the relief of John McVey, and John F. McKneely, of Louisiana;

An act for the relief of Henry J. Snow, of Rome, in the State of New York;

An act to provide a pension for James K. Welch;

An act for the further relief of Albro Tripp;

An act for the relief of James M. Lewis;

An act for the relief of William H. Weirech;

An act for the relief of Rebecca Baggerley, widow of David Baggerley;

An act for the relief of Joseph McMinn;

An act for the relief of Mary H. Cushing;

An act to revive the act approved March 3, 1823, and the act approved May 26, 1824, supplemental thereto, in reference to the Rio Hondo claims to land in Louisiana.

The committee then resumed its session, and resumed the consideration of the Senate amendments to the Post Office bill.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Mississippi. I ask that the sixth amendment may be again read.

The amendment was accordingly read.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to get the attention of the committee to the amendment of the Senate. At this period of the session it is not to be expected that members will take the time to examine every proposition with scrutiny; and for this reason, and in view of the importance of the Senate's amendment to the interests of my State, I feel that I have some apology for asking the indulgence of the committee. The State of Mississippi pays a large sum annually into the Treasury. She bears this heavy burden without a murmur. The little benefit she receives in return is not in the shape of appropriations of money, to build great edifices to adorn her cities, nor in improving harbors and rivers, but in the mail facilities which are grudgingly extended to her people.

Sir, the importance of this department of the Government, which controls the mails, is much underrated. There is no function performed by the General Government in which so many persons are interested as in this matter of the public mails. Every man, woman, and child is interested in the administration of this department of the Government. Our highest social and intellectual enjoyments are dependent in a great degree upon it. The people watch its operations with jealous vigilance, and the slightest interruption or delay, in the regular transmission of the mails, is sure to bring forth complaint and censure. Politicians imagine that the minds of the people are absorbed in the schemes and plots which ambition coins for its own purposes. But let me assure gentlemen on this floor, let me assure all parties, that a blundering, partial, inefficient administration of the Post Office Department, produces more discontent among the people than any other cause of complaint.

Gentlemen may, in the exuberance of their fancy, suppose the introduction of some small hobby will beget for them a mammoth reputation, and link their names with immortality. Let me suggest to such it is not only a mistake, but a very silly blunder. The instincts of the masses are nature's philosophy. It seldom errs, and, in the end, seldom or ever misleads us. We have heard, in these Halls, much in reference to cheap postage, its effects upon the business of the country and the social relations of communities. I grant that it should be reduced to the lowest capacity of a self-sustaining machine; but when reduced below that, you defeat the object of its reduction. When you reduce the Department to the necessity of stinting the rural districts of the country in post offices and post roads, to make the Department sustain itself, you deal unjustly with its administration, and inflict a wanton injury upon the most worthy portion of our fellow-citizens. Under the present system, the large cities are the beneficiaries, and the farming and planting communities are the sufferers. What does the farmer or planter care whether his letters cost him three or five cents, when he has to send ten or fifteen miles to a post office, before he can learn the market value of his products? To him, at least, it is the system of a pennywise and poundfoolish policy.

I was much surprised when I heard from the gentleman, just now, that the Committee of Ways and Means did not concur in the amendment of the Senate; but I suppose it was because it appropriated $500,000, for the establishing of a mail line, upon the Mississippi river, from Cairo to our great southern metropolis. I have seen, since I have been here, vast sums of money appropriated to objects altogether local in their character, and partial in their benefits. Yes, sir, to objects of doubtful policy, and, in the estimation of some, calling for the exercise of a power as doubtful as is its policy. When I saw this, I took it for granted that a meritorious proposition would have decidedly a good time, and meet with universal commendation. I know that there were some gentlemen here, who, having no very distinct idea of any proposition, objected to all to make a show of wisdom. I doubted whether, upon a proposition as clear as this, there could be found a single objector. But in this, it seems, I was slightly mistaken. I had not quite learned the harness that was necessary to give a bill a safe passage through this body. If it had been started in some omnibus, in company with marble-fronted custom-houses, I think it would, in all probability, have made the trip. Or, if it had taken passage with some river and harbor appropriation, or with some ocean mail steamer, I think it would have floated through. But it is the misfortune of this amendment, that it started alone, standing on its own merits, upon its perilous voyage, and hence the danger of being wrecked. It has the misfortune not to have even the recommendation of the Postmaster General. If it had come within the range of the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury, I am inclined to think he might have favored it. His liberality on such subjects superinduces the belief. But unfortunately for it, it was not cradled in the circle of his official sphere. It is true, it has the approval of the Senate; but the Senate is not conservative, in the estimation of many worthy and talented gentlemen in this end of the Capitol, who doubtless think their places would be much better filled by themselves. But I am inclined to think, when the people of the great valley of the Mississippi come to look at this question, they will know how to appreciate its friends and reward its enemies.

Wise legislation adapts itself to the necessities of the case, and takes advantage of surrounding circumstances. The God of nature has placed on this continent a valley greater in extent than most of the European kingdoms, and richer in its products than the valley of the Nile. Through this valley flows the Mississippi river. Its length is eighteen hundred miles, and the waters that lave its shores pass through eighteen States of this Union. It bears upon its bosom their commerce—a commerce equal to, if not exceeding, $300,000,000 per annum. This river, with its tributaries, are to the Union what the main arteries are to the human system in a commercial point of view. Without them the commerce of this valley would be stagnant as the Dead Sea, and the energies of the proud and industrious people who inhabit it paralyzed and prostrated.

"Westward the star of empire takes its way;"

and gentlemen upon this floor should be careful how they undertake to rob this vast region of its just rights. As you stand upon some stately steamer as she plows the waves of this mighty river, cast about and compute, if you can, the untold commerce which flows in from the young and vigorous West. Look to the East, and she, too, comes with her products. Nor is my own "sunny South" wanting in paying her tribute to nature's laws. From the head of navigation to the Gulf stream there is an exhibition of one prominent fact; and that fact is, that there is more of marketable values that find their destination over this stream than any other in the world. Much of these commodities are exchanged by our own citizens, but much more finds a market in foreign countries. That which goes abroad is exchanged for foreign products. The duties raised from these importations supply our Government with the revenues which sustains and upholds it.

Now, I submit, if it is not just and proper that those who fill the purse might be permitted, occasionally, at least, to unloose the purse-strings. Yet gentlemen would recommend a non-concurrence, when the Senate proposes, after long delayed justice, to give to the people of this vast valley their undoubted rights in mail facilities, and an equal chance in the race of trade, by a knowledge of the market, whether at home or abroad. In their estimation it is proper enough to establish a line of ocean mail steamers to Shanghai. We could afford to give $850,000 to the Collins line, at a loss of something like $600,000 per annum, to promote our commerce with a foreign Government. Yes, we can afford millions to certain favorite lines of ocean steamers to promote our commerce with foreign people; but when half a million is asked for our own citizens, and that portion of them, too, which pays into the Treasury two thirds of its revenue, it is thought to be extremely prodigal. They think it right to give to the importer at the large cities upon our coast the advantage of a knowledge of the market abroad, but decidedly wrong to give to the planter, farmer, and artisan, who create the utilities in which the importer deals, the same information. I never entertained a very high opinion of that charity which sought its objects abroad; for, like the horizon, their generosity recedes as you approach it. I think our own people who produce the utilities in which exporters and importers deal, are entitled to a correct knowledge of their market value, and to give them this information, I would send them the mails. I have ever thought it the duty of this Government to distribute its favors with an equal hand, and when it fails in this, it is derelict in duty. A knowledge of the market can only come through such a medium, and when it is eked out to one, and showered upon another, it is not only favoritism, but the worst species of protection in disguise. The mails from this city, often, do not reach the section of country in which I reside for weeks, when they ought to be received in seven or eight days. Such a system may secure to itself a notorious notoriety, but its popularity is exceedingly problematical. Why send them around the southern route, some one hundred and fifty miles south of their destination? Is it because of railroad lines owned by soulless corporations or moneyed capitalists? Or is it because of the intervening of large commercial cities? I am inclined to the opinion, if we could lower our vision, and cease to gaze upon the marble palaces of the city millionaire, and look to the honest and laboring producer, we would subserve the purposes of useful legislation quite as well. Why not place the means in the hands of the Postmaster General, and enable him to employ steam packets plying on the Mississippi river? Nature has dictated the policy, and, unless we are blind, we will seize upon the suggestion.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would inquire of the gentleman whether there is any regular mail line on the Mississippi river?

Mr. WRIGHT. There is none. The law giving the contract to the lowest bidder, (except on certain pet lines,) is wrong in principle; for the mails ought to be transmitted on the speediest route.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I would beg to refer the gentleman to the law of August 31st, 1852, authorizing for the contracting for a daily mail from Louisville.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand that full well. I desire the necessary means placed at the disposal of the Postmaster General, and then, if the law is not executed, there can be no two opinions as to where the fault lies. I ask no special favors for any particular section of country, but insist upon equal and evenhanded justice. But who are to be benefited by this line? I might say that portion of the people who mainly bear the burden of the Government directly, and every other portion of the people indirectly, except those Shylocks who reside on the pet lines now in operation, and who, owing to their superior means for information, like harpies, prey upon those less favored. Gentlemen upon this floor, who have in some instances exhibited such a degree of prodigality in the expenditures of the Government, that some who desired to practice economy thought it almost criminal, may, by voting for this amendment, do much to relieve themselves from that obloquy and reproach which otherwise might attach to them. They have a choice opportunity to give a demonstration that if they are prodigal to a fault they are just to a tittle.

[Here a member of the committee interrupted.]

Mr. WRIGHT. I am not at all taken by surprise that gentlemen who have monopolized so large a share of the time of the committee, in what some thought useless and unprofitable discussion, in the hope of filling the public eye, and swelling themselves into an undue importance, should grudgingly yield a few minutes to one who has had the modesty, as well as forbearance, to sit in silence under their daily efforts. It is said that "modesty is a quality that highly adorns a woman." It is extremely doubtful whether it would bring its market value in this body, especially so with those who most need it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen had waited but for a moment, they might have saved themselves of all their trouble. I had not intended, when I commenced, to occupy the attention of the committee but for a few moments. I have already exceeded the time I had allotted to myself; but the importance of the subject must be my apology. I would, however, appeal to every member of this House, who resides within the limits of the Mississippi valley, to recollect their constituents and the duties of the Representative. If they do this, there will be but little uncertainty in the result of this issue. I would ask them to remember, that "charity begins at home."

Mr. HIBBARD. For the purpose of terminating debate upon this bill, I move that this committee do now rise, with a view of offering, in the House, a resolution to accomplish that object.

A MEMBER. "Oh, no! let us go on."

Mr. HIBBARD. Well, as it is suggested around me, that further debate may not be desired upon this amendment, on the part of any member, if the committee is ready to take the question upon it, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. GREY. I should like to say a few words, and I should like to have this whole matter fully understood.

Mr. HIBBARD. After we shall have terminated the general debate, the subject can be prosecuted under the five-minute rule, and it seems to me that that will afford ample opportunity to say all that is necessary to say upon it.

Mr. GREY. I think the committee will agree to that amendment if they fully understand it.

Mr. HIBBARD. I dislike to be discourteous to the gentleman, and prevent him from making a speech, but really we have not time at this stage of the session.

Mr. GREY. I will not occupy more than five minutes.

Mr. HIBBARD. Very well; I withdraw my motion.

Mr. GREY. I want but a few moments to explain the matter, for I am confident it is not understood by the committee and the House. The assertion that there is no mail upon the Mississippi river, from New Orleans up to the mouth of the Ohio, will astonish the members of this House. I ask gentlemen from New York what they would think, if this Government should deny to them a mail from New York city, up through their noble Hudson, on to the northern part of the State, and westward to the borders of the great lakes? Congress, in the session of 1852, became convinced that there ought to be a mail upon the Mississippi river, and in August of that year a bill was reported to the House, authorizing the Postmaster General to advertise and establish a mail from Louisville to New Orleans. That law is still in existence now, and we are inquired of, why ask any other law upon the subject? I will tell gentlemen, and tell the Committee of Ways and Means why it is. Under the provisions of that law, and according to the provisions of that law, the Postmaster General, Mr. Hubbard, advertised. Accordingly, the bids were received, and a contract entered into for the transportation of that mail. When Postmaster General Campbell, who succeeded Hubbard, came in, he annulled the contract, and told the parties that he could not carry out the contract with them. Why? Because he thought the bids were too high; and yet a contract, in pursuance of law, had been entered into with the lowest bidder. But that contract was annulled by the Postmaster General; and he negotiated with the contractors, and got them to take a less amount. Well, a new contract was executed by the Postmaster General, under the seal of the Government; but the very day that contract was to go into operation, he sent a special messenger on to Louisville, and annulled and repudiated that contract also. I want the House to understand that the Postmaster General has disregarded the law of 1852, and left us without a mail upon the Mississippi river.

And what has been his action since? The routes were advertised, and the matter was to have been acted upon last Thursday. Bids were in, but the Postmaster General thought all of them too high, and refused to accept any of them. In other words, he decided that that section of the country was not entitled to mail facilities if they cost so much; and, therefore, he disregarded a positive law of the Government, and refused to accept any of the bids.

Well, sir, the matter came up in the Senate. Senators from the West knew that he had repudiated the contract made for the carrying of that mail, and therefore brought the matter before the Senate for investigation. The subject was investigated by a committee of that body, and a report made upon it. And, sir, the Senate knew what they were about when they inserted a provision in this bill expressing the decided will of Congress that the Postmaster General should carry into effect the law of 1852, and establish a regular mail upon the Mississippi river. That law is now a dead letter, because the Postmaster General will not carry it out; and it will remain so as long as we permit the Postmaster General to disregard it. That law required the Postmaster General to advertise and to execute a contract for carrying the mail from Louisville to New Orleans.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the committee to remember that that whole extensive region of country, reaching from the Alleghanies to the Rocky Mountains is all interested in the establishment of this mail. Every portion of it sends their produce to the New Orleans market, and are deeply interested in receiving daily intelligence as to the state of that market. The Mississippi river is the central line for millions of dollars worth of produce. But the people of the Mississippi valley are not the only ones interested in the establishment of these mail facilities. The merchants of New York are deeply interested in it. They hear daily from Wisconsin, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and all the northern and western States, and it is of very great importance that they should also hear daily from New Orleans. Yet, sir, in defiance of law, the present Postmaster General, who is an eastern man, who knows nothing, and

I expect cares nothing, about the wants of the West, has been permitted to disregard those wants, while he has made contracts for carrying the mail in ocean steamers from the Atlantic cities at the cost of $2,500,000 a year. I hope the House will concur in this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HIBBARD. I think it is time that this debate should be closed, and for that purpose I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. PRESTON. I have but a word to say, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion. I desire to say something upon this question, and do not expect to trouble the House again. I hope the gentleman will withdraw for the present.

Mr. HIBBARD. I cannot.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

[Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act to constitute Pilatka and Bayport, in the State of Florida, ports of delivery respectively; and Keokuk and Dubuque, in the State of Iowa;

An act for the relief of Mrs. Helen Mackay, widow of the late Colonel Eneas Mackay, deputy quartermaster general United States Army;

Joint resolution for the relief of Brevet Captain J. H. Lendrum, United States Army; and

A bill making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes.]

Mr. HIBBARD. I move the usual resolution to close debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Senate amendments to the Post Office appropriation bill in five minutes after its consideration shall be again resumed.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Senate amendments to the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the law, as it now stands, authorizes the Postmaster General to establish this mail; but if, it be the object to make it imperative on that officer to do what the law now simply authorizes him to do, then I think that it is incumbent on this committee to agree to that amendment. Sir, it is a shame, an outrage on the rights of the western people, that they should want the mail facilities to be afforded by the adoption of this provision. Now, I happen to know the fact that the mails are sent on the Mississippi river by the boats which will take them at the lowest price, which are generally the slowest boats running on that river. Gentlemen leaving Memphis, Tennessee, have stopped at Natchez and Vicksburg, posted letters there, and, after stopping twenty-four hours at New Orleans, have returned home before their letters had reached there by the mails. In consequence of this state of things, the merchants do not send their letters through the mails; and I have been assured, by gentlemen who profess to know something of the matter, who ought to, and who, I have no doubt do, know the facts they state, that a very large proportion, even as much as three fourths, of the mail matter, is carried outside of the mails. The policy of cutting down mail facilities in order to increase the receipts of the Department is a very unwise and shortsighted policy; and the effect of it will be to defeat the very object in view. The only way to make the system productive is to extend mail facilities, and to send your mails upon the fastest possible lines, and pay whatever may be necessary to carry the mails from St. Louis or Louisville to New Orleans in the shortest possible time. If this amendment, as I suppose it does, makes it imperative upon the Postmaster General to establish this mail, whatever may be the cost, within the bounds of reason, after fair competition among bidders, then I am ready to support it, because I believe it to be my duty, by every consideration, to do what I can to secure additional mail facilities for that section of the country.

Mr. PHELPS. I move an amendment, to strike out the last six lines of the amendment under consideration.

I am opposed to the amendment of the Senate; for, as I understand it, it intends to take away from the Postmaster General that discretion which he exercises over every other postal route in the United States. For instance, the Postmaster General advertises proposals for carrying the mails upon the various routes, reserving to himself the right to refuse to enter into a contract with the lowest bidder, if the amount proposed for the transportation of the mails shall be unreasonable. Two years ago there was an attempt to coerce the Department to place a daily mail upon the route between Louisville and New Orleans. Proposals were invited, and the lowest amount that was then bid was something like $450,000 for the performance of that service daily. It was $40,000 additional for the performance of service from Cairo to St. Louis. Prior to that time the mails had been carried for so much per trip, the steamboats being required to stop at the most important points upon the river. That system seemed to work very well.

The amendment now proposed by the Senate changes the rights of the contracting parties. The Postmaster General, in his annual report, states, that upon the advertisement of his predecessor, Mr. Hubbard, the lowest bid was $460,000 a year for the whole service between New Orleans and Louisville.

There are $40,000 appropriated for the line between St. Louis and Cairo. On the 4th of March, 1853, the Postmaster General made a different regulation in regard to it; and proposals were received for transporting the mails between Louisville and New Orleans in seven days, each way; and for additional mail lines between Louisville and Cairo, &c., at a compensation of $279,569 per year, being the average amount of the lowest bids. This contract has been since executed, and the facilities which it affords are believed to be amply sufficient. It took effect on the 1st of December last, and is to remain in force till June 30, 1857.

One word more. There is an additional provision in this amendment, which requires that if the Postmaster General make a contract, as required in the preceding part of the amendment, he shall save the existing rights of all. That is what the committee propose to strike out.

Mr. GROW. There is some mistake about the mail on the Mississippi river. It is required now to be carried as it has been carried for years. The contract with Glover & Mather was made by Mr. Hubbard, before the present Postmaster General came into office. This contract required the mail service to be performed on boats without freight. They were simply to carry passengers and mails; but no freight. For this purpose the Government agreed to pay large rates of compensation. The contract was held by Glover & Mather, at $450,000 per annum. But when they came to execute that contract, in the last days of Mr. Hubbard's administration—when they came to perform the service of carrying the mails on the river—instead of carrying them on boats without freight, they took them on boats with freight, as they had been always in the habit of doing. As the contractors were not complying with the terms of their contract, the Postmaster General refused to pay the price stipulated, unless they should carry the mails in boats having no freight on board; because he could get the service performed in the same way at $279,000, and thus effect a saving to the Government of some $160,000 a year in this item. He therefore gave notice to the contractors that they should carry the mails according to the terms of the advertisement and of their contract, and if not, that he should annul it. The contractors found that they were unable to comply with the stipulated terms; and for that reason the contract was annulled, and an arrangement made to carry the mail between Louisville and New Orleans for $279,000 per year. The mail, therefore, has been since carried exactly as it previously had been. Advertisements calling for bids for carrying the mail between Louisville and St. Louis have been published. Whether the time for determining the contract has arrived or not I do not know, but I understood that last Thursday was the day.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state whether or not any mails have been carried under contract by that line?

Mr. GROW. The mails have been carried by Glover & Mather just as they had been carried for years, and just as they were carried before that contract was entered into. There is no regular contract now for the yearly transportation of the mails between these points. But, by a special contract with Glover & Mather, they are carried as they have been all the time. This contract for transporting the mails in boats, not carrying freight, was in order to save the time consumed in shipping and unshipping freight.

[The committee here rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the House for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.]

The committee then resumed its session.

Mr. GREY. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, I wish to make one remark. The gentleman states that the mail is carried from New Orleans to Louisville by the trip, just as heretofore. Sir, I tell the gentleman it was carried by the trip, but it amounted to a nuisance, and it was worse than no mail; and the Congress of this nation, becoming convinced of that, and seeing the necessity of other arrangements, passed a law authorizing the Postmaster General to advertise for, and let out a contract for, a regular mail by boats, to such parties as would give good bond and security for performing the work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. PRESTON. I believe that the amendment ought to be adopted, and I shall merely say a few words to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order, unless he offers an amendment.

Mr. PRESTON. Then I move to strike out the words "authorize and," in the seventh section. I believe this section should be adopted. It does simply one thing; it insures a mail between Cairo and New Orleans by sections, or stages—Cairo being at the junction of the Ohio and the Mississippi rivers. It then insures a mail between Keokuk, Iowa, and the lower parts of the river. Our mail service on the Mississippi river is in a bad condition at the present time. The carrying of the mail between the principal points will soon be done by railroads, but we require a regular mail upon our river for our way mails, and the Postmaster General is bound to give it. The Senate have put in this provision, and I believe it was by unanimous consent that it was put in. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WRIGHT] is correct in asking that we should concur in it, and not exclude it, in conformity with the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means.

One word more: For three years we have been struggling to get a mail. Postmaster General Hubbard let the last mail contract to Glover & Mather, and the trouble with the contract was this: There is no such word in the contract as "freight," but there was some such word in the advertisement for the contract. The Postmaster General insisted that the advertisement was part of the contract. The contractors contended that it was not. Why, $1,000,000 a year would not pay a man for running a line of boats from New Orleans to Louisville, unless they were permitted to carry freight. The advertisement was no part of the contract. Can gentlemen show me an instance where the advertisement enters into any part of the contract? The present Postmaster General altered Mr. Hubbard's contract, and that produced all the difficulty; and in the conflict between the Postmaster General and the contractors, the Postmaster General insisted that they should not carry freight, when every man who knows anything about it knows that $1,000,000 would not pay for running a line of boats to carry the mail, excluding freight. That interpolation produced the difficulty; and the result is, that we have now no mail upon the river.

I hope the House will concur in that amendment of the Senate, and make it obligatory on the Postmaster General to let that contract for carrying the mail. I concur with the gentleman from Mississippi, and with the gentleman who represents the Memphis district, [Mr. STANTON,] and, I believe, every man in this House, who represents any portion of the Mississippi river, believes that this mail ought to be established by this House.

Mr. ELLIOTT, of Kentucky. Is there any mail service in the United States where the carrying of freight is prohibited?

Mr. PRESTON. I do not know. I cannot answer the question. But, sir, any one who knows anything of the business of steamboating upon the Mississippi river, knows that it is impossible to maintain a line of mere passenger boats there.

The amendment to the Senate amendment was disagreed to.

The question then recurred upon the Senate amendment.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs STANTON, of Tennessee, and SEWARD, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 52.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MAXWELL. It was my misfortune, when this bill was taken up, to have been called to the Senate on business connected with bills in that body. I desire to say now, in justice to myself, that, at Key West, a place of three or four thousand inhabitants, and where an immense commerce passes annually, there is only a semi-monthly mail, with the exception of two months of the year. Many shipwrecks occur on that coast, and there ought to be speedy mail communication with all the commercial points of the Union.

Mr. HIBBARD. We have passed the subject to which the gentleman proposes to speak, and I object to his proceeding further out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the amendments of the Senate to the House.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the amendment of the Senate to the Post Office appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back, some with, and others without concurrence.

Mr. HIBBARD. I demand the previous questions on the adoption of the amendments.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The first amendment of the Senate, in which the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommended a concurrence, was agreed to.

Mr. LILLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Second amendment:

At the end of the bill add the following section:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That hereafter the Postmaster General be authorized and directed to continue the mail service between Charleston, Key West, and Havana during August and September, by a competent steamer; as it is now being performed during ten months of the year, and that to enable him to do so $10,000 are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. HIBBARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Third amendment:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there be allowed and paid to the postmaster of Washington city, District of Columbia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a commission of one mill per pound upon the aggregate weight of public documents printed by order of Congress and deposited in the office of said postmaster by mail, the said allowance to commence with the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1853, and to be computed for the first year from the ascertained weight for the month of January, 1854; and that the said postmaster be required to pay out of the said commissions to the clerks and other employees of his office a sum not exceeding $250 each per annum, as compensation for the extra labor performed by them in the assortment and mailing of said documents, and that he be required to account for and settle with the Post-Office Department for the disbursement of these commissions, and any surplus that may remain, in the same manner as is now required in the settlement of his other accounts.

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the surviving late Vice President of the United States shall have, during his life, the same authority to frank letters and other mail matter, which he possessed whilst in office, and the same authority shall belong to the future Vice Presidents, after they go out of office.

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Cranston Laurie a reasonable compensation for performing the duties of two clerks in the Post Office Department, not to exceed the half pay of a clerk for the time he was so employed.

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be authorized and directed to establish a mail on the Mississippi river from Cairo to New Orleans, and from Keokuk, Iowa, to Galena, in Illinois; and that he contract for the same in one line, or in such divisions or sections, or both, as may be most compatible with the public service; and to facilitate the execution of this section, the Postmaster General may make immediate temporary arrangements for carrying said mail by the trip, and if he fails to obtain acceptable bids, after advertising for thirty days, he may make private contracts for carrying said mail, and the said mail shall be carried daily from Cairo to New Orleans, but the Postmaster General is authorized, at his discretion, to restrict the delivery of the mail at all other points than Cairo, Memphis, Napoleon, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans, to three mails a week each way: Provided, Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the rights of parties heretofore contracting for said service.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole recommend a concurrence.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GREY and ROBBINS were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 91, noes 36.

So the sixth amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed the following joint resolution:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the time fixed by the resolution of the first of July for the adjournment of the present session of Congress be, and the same hereby is, extended to Monday, the 7th instant, at twelve o'clock, m.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act for the relief of Daniel Steenrod; and
An act to establish certain post roads.

BOUNTY LAND FOR OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. COBB. I desire to do an act for the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL] which he has not had an opportunity of doing for himself, but which ought to be done, and which I hope the House will give me their assistance in doing now.

By referring to the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it will be seen that the first bill in order, and the first we should consider if we were to go into committee, is House bill No. 8, to repeal the first proviso of the fourth section of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850.

I ask the House to take up that bill and pass it.

I will state to the House, that when we had under consideration originally the bill to grant bounty lands to officers and soldiers of the Army, it was supposed that we should be exceedingly hard run for votes; and in order to get the then members of Congress to vote for it, we added a proviso excluding all persons who were then members of Congress from the benefits of the act. There were then about six or seven members who would have been included.

It is but sheer justice now that we should repeal that proviso. They were gallant men; they rendered honorable service to the country; and I think it but justice to them that we should grant them the same privileges which are enjoyed by others who served with them in the Army. Colonel BISSELL reported the bill early in the session, and I ask that, in justice to him, the House will take up the bill and pass it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Alabama answer me one question?

Mr. COBB. I do not know whether I shall be able until I hear it.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman tell me by what vote the bill, to which he refers, passed the House?

Mr. COBB. I think it passed finally by a very heavy vote; but it is nevertheless true, that at one time we expected to be very hard run for votes. There were men in that House who were opposed to every measure that proposed to do justice to the old soldiers.

Mr. JONES. It is the first time I ever heard that the friends of the bill expected to be troubled for votes enough to pass it.

Mr. COBB. Well, I had more to do with the bill than the gentleman had. I introduced it, and it was under my guardianship during the entire time it was pending. It is true, as I said, that when the bill came to a final vote a large majority of the House voted in favor of it. But at an earlier portion of the session, the prospects for its passage were not by any means flattering. In this state of the case the persons then members of Congress, who had been in the Army, came forward and offered to sacrifice their own claims to justice, in order that justice might be done to others. This proviso was accordingly added, excluding them from the benefits of the law; and it is to do justice to these very individuals that I ask the House to pass this bill. I now ask the consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill, with a view of putting it upon its passage.

Mr. ROBBINS. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama whether the bill proposes to repeal the whole law to which he refers?

Mr. COBB. No, sir; only the proviso that excludes those who were then members of Congress from its benefits.

There was no objection; and the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. COBB. I move to put the bill upon its passage.

The bill was read in extenso.

It was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SUSPENSION OF JOINT RULES.

Mr. COBB. I move that the 16th and 17th joint rules be suspended, so that the bill may go to the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Senate sent us a resolution suspending the 16th and 17th joint rules for the remainder of the session; but we have, so far, refused to take it up for action. Then we suspended those rules in order to send that body the bill to repeal the Minnesota land bill; but it refused to suspend the rules, and the bill was returned to us.

A MEMBER. But they passed it.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; they did pass a bill on the same subject, but not the bill which we sent from here. They took a copy of it, and moved it as an amendment to a private bill. I now propose that we take up and pass the resolution of the Senate for the suspension of those rules.

Mr. COBB. I understand that before, when that resolution was proposed to be taken up, the gentleman himself objected. I have no objection to its now being taken up and passed.

Mr. HAVEN. I object.

Mr. JONES. I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. SAGE. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SMITH, of Virginia, and GREY, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 90, noes 42.

So the rules were suspended.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bills, which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled, under the act of the 8th of August, 1846, to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers;

An act authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, and conferring certain privileges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company;

An act to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington city;

An act to constitute Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery;

An act authorizing the State of Illinois to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled, under the act of the 2d of March, 1827, granting land to aid that State in opening a canal to connect the waters of the Illinois river with those of Lake Michigan;

An act to vest in the several States and Territories the title in fee of the lands which have been or may be certified therein;

An act for the relief of Sylvanus Culver;

An act to amend the provisions of the fifty-sixth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," approved the 2d of March, 1799; and

An act constituting San Pedro, in the State of California, a port of entry and delivery.

Mr. LETCHER obtained the floor.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask my colleague to yield the floor a few moments, to enable me to make a brief explanation due to an absent friend and member of this House. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB], in referring to a bill which passed a few moments since, designated it as "Colonel BISSELL's bill." It is true, Colonel BISSELL reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, and is one of the gallant officers of our Mexican army who will receive a land bounty by virtue of its provisions. Yet it is due to that distinguished gentleman to say, that the Committee on Military Affairs acted upon the subject in pursuance of a resolution adopted by this body; that Colonel BISSELL took no part in the deliberations or action of the committee upon that bill; and, I think, it was on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOWE] that he was instructed to report the bill to this House. I have deemed this brief explanation due to the character of that gentleman.

Mr. HOWE. The gentleman from Virginia has correctly stated the facts in connection with this bill. Colonel BISSELL behaved with remarkable delicacy in the matter. Knowing that, under the provisions of the bill, he would be entitled to bounty, as a recipient of the favors granted by the bill, he declined acting on the matter in the committee; and it was upon my motion that he was directed to report the bill to the House.

REPEAL OF MINNESOTA LAND BILL.

Mr. LETCHER. Is there a bill upon the table for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that there is such a bill on the table.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I shall do what I have not done here for some three years—move to take up a private bill for consideration.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to return my thanks to the gentleman from Virginia for calling up a bill for the relief of one of my constituents. [A laugh.] I desire to have it passed.

Mr. ORR. I should like to have the bill read before unanimous consent is given—the entire bill, with amendments.

Mr. WALSH. I shall do what I very seldom do; that is, object. [Laughter.]

Mr. LETCHER. Then I move to suspend the rules, in order to enable me to submit a motion to take up the bill.

The bill, which was read through, simply provides for the payment of a pension to the individual named therein.

The Senate amendment, which was also read, was as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the bill entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," which passed the House of Representatives on the 20th of June, 1854, and which was approved by the President of the United States on the 29th of June, 1854, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The question being on the motion to suspend the rules,

Mr. COOK demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were, on a division—yeas 101, noes 26.

So the rules were suspended, two thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. LETCHER. I now move to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move the previous question on the adoption of the amendment.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered to be put.

The question being first upon the Senate amendment,

Mr. HENN said: I move to lay the bill upon the table. I want to find out if there are any railroad men in the House.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay the bill and amendment upon the table was not agreed to.

The Senate amendment was then agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. There is an amendment in the title to make it conform to the bill.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the title the words "and to repeal the act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," so that the bill, as amended, would read:

An act for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh, and to repeal the act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. LETCHER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRESTON obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to give way for a moment, to allow me to ask the consent of the House to take up the resolution from the Senate extending the session until Monday next. It is evident that we cannot dispose of all the business before us before twelve o'clock to-morrow. I hope the House will pass that resolution, and then adjourn for the night.

Mr. PRESTON. I cannot give way for that purpose.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. DAWSON. I ask the gentleman to give way to me for a moment.

Mr. PRESTON. For what purpose?

Mr. DAWSON. To enable me to move to postpone the further consideration of the homestead bill until the next session of Congress.

Mr. PRESTON. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I have made several ineffectual attempts to bring to the consideration of the House the homestead bill, as amended by the Senate. Had I succeeded in getting it before the House, I should have moved an amendment that would have restored fully the homestead feature of that bill. It is now evident that, at this late period of the session, it will not be possible to consider it; and I, with a view of placing it in a position where we can amend it and bring it to a final vote at the earliest moment, ask the consent of the House to offer the following resolution, to which I hope there will not be a dissenting voice:

Resolved, That House bill No. 37, with the Senate amendments thereto, be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order for the third Tuesday in December next, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. BRIDGES. I object.

Mr. DAWSON. I move to suspend the rules, for the purpose of enabling me to offer the resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the House will allow me, I will suggest that if they will consent to extend the session until ten o'clock on Monday morning, we can then dispose of that bill before we adjourn.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to make a proposition to all parties in the House whose bills have been conflicting with each other for the last two days.

[Renewed and prolonged cries of "Order!"]

The question was then taken upon Mr. Dawson's motion; and (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, notifying the House that that body insisted on its amendments to the Post Office appropriation bill, and asked a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses.]

Mr. PRESTON obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. HIBBARD. If there be no objection, I move that a committee of conference be appointed to meet the one appointed by the Senate, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I object, and shall object until the river and harbor bill is referred.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

Mr. PRESTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to take up and put on its passage Senate bill (No. 434) "to provide for taking charge of the Louisville and Portland canal, and to prevent the same from falling into bad repair." I will state its features, and, if allowed to do so, I do not think, when I have concluded, that any gentleman will object. The President has recommended that the Louisville and Portland canal should be taken in charge.

Mr. ENGLISH. I object.

Mr. PRESTON. Then I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose I have indicated. The same provision is made in the river and harbor bill as is made in this bill, but with the difference that in this there is no appropriation.

Mr. ENGLISH. As I understand it, it is not in the river and harbor bill exactly as it is in this one.

Mr. PRESTON. I think that it is; but I will not argue the question. I demand the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 91, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Breckinridge, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Churchill, Clark, Cox, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dunbar, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Elliot, Ellison, Everhart, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Knox, Lindsley, McDougall, Maurice, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Russell, Sabine, Sage, Sapp, Shower, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander II. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tweed, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu R. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Daniel E. Wright, and Zollicoffer—91.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Beacock, Bridges, Brooks, Caskie, Chamberlain, Clingman, Cobb, Craig, Dowdell, Eastman, Edmundson, English, Fuller, Giddings, Goode, Sampson W. Harris, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lilly, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Powell, Pratt, Payear, Rowe, Rudin, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, George W. Smyth, Stratton, John J. Taylor, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, and Wells—52.

So the rules were not suspended; two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

CAPTAIN DUNCAN N. INGRAHAM.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up House resolution (No. 7) "of thanks of Congress and presentation of a medal to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham," returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. DUNHAM, (in his seat.) I object.

Mr. ORR. I move that the rules be suspended for that purpose.

Mr. HENN. I do not believe that a gentleman has the right to object unless he rises in his place and makes it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Well, I rise in my place and object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina whether, if the rules be suspended in this case, the gentleman will support a motion for a suspension of the rules in order that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a bill relating to the conferring of the title of lieutenant general? If not, I object.

Mr. ORR. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ORR. As the objection is withdrawn, I call for tellers.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a privileged question. The Senate have sent down the Post Office appropriation bill, informing us that they insist upon their amendments disagreed to by the House. I move that we insist upon our disagreement, and that a committee of conference be appointed upon the part of the House, to meet a like committee on the part of the Senate, upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, in the chair.) The Chair does not consider that a privileged question.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Speaker so ruled today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is aware that it has been ruled to be a privileged motion for a committee of conference to report at any time.

Mr. HOUSTON. And also to ask for a committee of conference. The Speaker so ruled in regard to the civil and diplomatic bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Speaker so ruled this morning in relation to a committee of conference upon the civil and diplomatic bill, and will entertain the gentleman's motion.

The question was then taken; and Mr. HIBBARD's motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to disagree to the amendments of the Senate upon the river and harbor bill, and ask for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are amendments to the river and harbor bill which have never been before the House, and if taken up under the rules and practice of the House, they would have to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to disagree to the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This morning a committee of conference was asked for upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses in relation to the Post Office appropriation bill. In that case, it will be recollected that the Senate amendments to the Post Office bill were considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, were reported to the House, and that the House took action upon them. They have since been sent to the Senate, and the Senate insist upon their amendments disagreed to by the House, and ask for a committee of conference. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] asked that the message asking for a committee of conference might be taken up and agreed to, which was done; and in that condition of things it was ruled to be a privileged motion. The river and harbor bill, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] sees, is not in that condition.

Mr. ORR. That bill is not before the House, but is upon the Speaker's table.

CAPTAIN INGRAHAM—AGAIN.

The question recurred on Mr. ORR's motion to suspend the rules, for the purpose of taking up the joint resolution of thanks of Congress and presentation of a medal to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham.

Mr. WALSH demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. ORR called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WALKER, and HARLAN, of Indiana, were appointed.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-three; (more than one fifth of the members present.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Banks, Barry, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Craigie, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edgerton, Edmunds, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Fenton, Florence, Gamble, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Haven, Hendricks, Houston, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Lindsley, McDougall, McNair, McQueen, Macey, May, Smith Miller, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Rowe, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Shaw, Singleton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Vansant, Walker, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—109.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Caruthers, Cullom, Dunham, Farley, Franklin, Giddings, Goode, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hibbard, Hill, George W. Jones, Kerr, Macdonald, McMullin, Maxwell, Millson, Morrison, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Puryear, Reese, Riddle, Sabin, Simmons, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Stratton, John L. Taylor, Wade, and Walsh—34.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and joint resolution No. 7 was taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. ORR. I now ask that the Senate's amendments may be reported.

The Clerk reported the amendments, as follows:

First amendment:

Strike out the first section.

Second amendment:

Strike out the third section.

Third amendment:

Amend the second section by striking out all of that section after the word "in," in line thirteen, and insert in lieu thereof the words following:

Commander Duncan N. Ingraham, of the Navy of the United States, as a testimonial of the high sense entertained by Congress of his gallant and judicious conduct on the 2d July, 1853, in extending protection to Martin Kozsta, by rescuing him from illegal seizure and imprisonment on board the Austrian war brig Hussar.

Mr. ORR. The change that was made by the Senate in the resolution adopted by the House, was to vote a medal to Captain Ingraham in lieu of the thanks of Congress, which were provided by the resolution. On examination it was found that the House proposed to pay to Captain Ingraham a more distinguished compliment than had ever been paid, I believe, to any other of our naval officers. The friends of Captain Ingraham did not desire that he should be distinguished above all his peers. The Senate resolution, I think, meets entirely the views of the House. I hope, therefore, that the House will concur in the Senate's amendments. I ask the previous question.

The question being on the seconding the demand of the previous question,

Mr. ORR demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STRAUB and ROBBINS were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 40.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The amendments of the Senate were then concurred in.

The Senate also proposed to amend the title so as to make it read, "a resolution directing the presentation of a medal to Commander Duncan N. Ingraham."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICK obtained the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the gentleman to yield me the floor for a moment, to enable me to ask the House to take up a joint resolution.

PIONEER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. DICK. I wish to occupy the time of the House only for a moment myself, and then the gentleman may have the floor. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill (No. 49) "to incorporate the Pioneer Manufacturing Company, of Georgetown."

Mr. WALSH. Is it the gentleman's intention to put the bill upon its passage?

Mr. DICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Then I object.

Mr. DICK. I move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

The question was taken; and (two thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

Mr. DICK. I now submit the motion that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill I have indicated.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. DICK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TITLE OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL.

Mr. KERR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of Senate bill (No. 4) "authorizing the President to confer the title of lieutenant general by brevet for eminent services."

Mr. McMULLIN. Before that question is taken, I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WALSH. I object to the suggestion.

Mr. McMULLIN. Mr. Speaker, have I not the right to make a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot occupy the floor unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. KERR. Is there objection to the proposition which I have submitted, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir; I object to it.

Mr. McMULLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina to move a suspension of the rules, for the purpose of taking up the resolution of the Senate extending the session. When that is disposed of, we can act on the resolution which he has indicated.

Mr. KERR. I cannot yield to any gentleman, or for any motion, as objection has been made. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose I have named.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 71, nays 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Clingman, Cook, Cullom, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Edmunds, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Keitt, Kerr, Knox, Latham, McCulloch, McDougall, Matteson, May, Morgan, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, William R. Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Straub, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Zollcoffer—71.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bliss, Bocoock, Boyce, Bridges, Caskey, Chamberlain, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Craigie, Thomas Davis, Dowdell, Eastman, Edgerton, Ellison, English, Farley, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsley, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Macey, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Rufin, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Skelton, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Walker, Walsh, John Wentworth, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—82.

So the House refused to suspend the rules, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

Pending the above vote, Messrs. MILLSON, DAVIS, of Indiana, and BARKSDALE, stated that had they been present when their names were called they would have voted in the negative.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan, said: Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye," but I changed my vote to "no;" because I believe that the bill carries with it an annuity of $20,000.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the naval appropriation bill be taken from the table for reference.

Mr. HAVEN. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let the gentleman embrace the river and harbor bill in his motion, and it will be agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to suspend the rules to take up, and refer the general appropriation bill which I have indicated.

Mr. MATTESON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAVEN. I am as desirous as the gentleman from Missouri can be, to have all the general appropriation bills disposed of; and I am sure that if he will include the river and harbor bill, his motion will be carried unanimously.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Bridges, Caskey, Chamberlain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Craigie, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dick, Dowdell, Edgerton, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Houston, Hughes, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Macey, Maxwell, May, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Olds, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Rufin, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Skelton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—101.

NAYS—Messrs. Bennett, Benson, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Cook, Cullom, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Goodrich, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Morgan, Noble, Parker, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Reese, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, John L. Taylor, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Zollcoffer—56.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask leave to make a report from the committee of conference appointed by the two Houses on the disagreeing votes on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The report was submitted, and read by the Clerk, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill (H. R. That the Senate do recede from its twenty-third amendment, and concur in the original item, with an amendment, as follows: Strike out "36.9," in line twenty-four, page seven of the bill, and in lieu thereof insert "41.7."

That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to the forty-second, one hundred and second, one hundred and fifteenth, one hundred and fifty-sixth, one hundred and fifty-eighth, one hundred and sixty-first, and one hundred and sixty-fifth amendments of the Senate, and agree thereto.

That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to the ninety-seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree thereto, with an amendment, as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment, and in lieu thereof insert: "For extinguishment of private claims to the possession of the whole or any part of the custom-house lot in San Francisco, $10,000."

That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to the one hundred and forty-seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree thereto, with an amendment, as follows: Strike out all after the word "provided," in line eight, to and including the word "direction," in line eighteen, on page fifty-eight of the original bill, and in lieu thereof insert "that any officer of the Army or Navy who has been, or may be appointed hereafter, to disburse the money which is now, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the erection, alteration, or repair of any of the edifices, structures, or works for which appropriations are made in this act shall be subject to all the pains, penalties, and liabilities contained in the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the better organization of the Treasury, and for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue,' approved August 6, 1846."

That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to the one hundred and forty-ninth amendment of the Senate, and agree thereto, with an amendment, as follows: In line two of said amendment strike out "75" and in lieu thereof insert "15."

That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to the one hundred and sixty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree thereto, with an amendment, as follows: Strike out all after the word "enacted," in line one of said amendment, to the end thereof, and in lieu insert "that the Librarian of Congress shall receive $1,800, the Assistant Librarians $1,500 each, and the messenger $1,200 per annum, and the money is hereby appropriated to pay the same."

That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to the one hundred and seventy-seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree thereto, with an amendment, as follows: Add at the end thereof the words "Provided, That the said sum shall be in full of all compensation to be received by said chaplains."

That the House of Representatives do recede from its amendment to the one hundred and eighty-eighth amendment of the Senate.

That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to the thirty-third amendment of the Senate, and the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the thirty-fourth amendment of the Senate.

R. M. T. HUNTER,
J. D. BRIGHT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEO. S. HOUSTON,
S. G. HAVEN,
THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Pending the reading of the report,

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to dispense with the further reading of the report, as it gives us no information. If the gentleman explain it as he goes along it will save time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. It would be very difficult for me to explain all the amendments that were acted on in the committee of conference, as there were over one hundred amendments acted on by the conferees. There were, Mr. Speaker, one hundred and five amendments in issue between the two Houses, which were submitted to the conferees on this bill; and the action of the committee is as follows: The Senate recede from seventy-eight of their amendments. The Senate concur in the amendments of the House to ten more of their amendments. The Senate concur in the amendments of the House to three of the Senate amendments with amendments. The House recede from nine amendments; and recede from disagreement to five of the Senate amendments with amendments.

A MEMBER. What are these?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will pick out the nine amendments as I pass over them. I suppose the six are not so important. The first amendment, from a disagreement to which the House recedes, is the one hundred and second. This is the House provision:

For the annual repairs and fixtures of custom-houses of the United States $30,501 59, and for alterations and repairs of the custom-house at Baltimore heretofore made, and for rent of rooms during the repairs of said building, such sum as may by the Secretary of the Treasury be deemed reasonable and proper of said amount, not to exceed $5,501 59.

The Senate amended that by increasing the sum to $43,001 59. The evidence submitted to the Senate, and which came before the committee of conference from the Secretary of Treasury, satisfied the committee that a custom-house—I believe it was the one in Salem, Massachusetts—required repairs, and the Secretary had omitted it in making out his estimates. He asked that the appropriation should be increased to $43,000. The committee, therefore, have recommended a concurrence in that amendment.

The next amendment, from a disagreement, to which the committee recommend the House to recede, is the one hundred and fifteenth.

The clause, as it went from the House, I will read:

For salaries of fifteen keepers and twelve assistants, at an average not exceeding $600 per annum, $16,200.

That refers to the keepers and assistants of the light-house upon the California and Pacific coast. The Senate amended that clause by striking out "$600 per annum," and inserting in lieu thereof "$800 per annum," and then altering the amount appropriated, so as to make it correspond. By their amendment the salaries of those light-house keepers and their assistants, will be $800 per annum instead of $600. We agree to their amendment.

The next amendment, from a disagreement to which the committee recommend the House to recede, is the one hundred and fiftieth, as follows:

For completing the improvement of Pennsylvania avenue west of Seventeenth street, $9,000.

That is the portion of the avenue west of the War Department, and extending to Georgetown. In the estimation of the committee, it was thought proper to recede from our disagreement to that amendment.

The next amendment is on page eighty, and is numbered one hundred and fifty-five. It reads as follows:

For grading done by order of Ignatius Mudd, late Commissioner of Public Buildings, in reservation number seventeen, between Third street east and New Jersey avenue, $484 89.

The committee found this money was due, and, therefore, determined to pay it.

The next amendment is on page eighty-five, and is numbered one hundred and sixty-one. The Senate propose to insert the following:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed the following buildings:

At New Orleans, Louisiana, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $24,800; and when said hospital shall have been completed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the old hospital at New Orleans to be sold, and the proceeds thereof to be placed in the Treasury of the United States.

At Detroit, Michigan, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $75,000.

At Pensacola, Florida, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $30,000.

At Burlington, in the State of Iowa, a marine hospital, to cost not more than $15,000.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the several sums mentioned in the preceding section as the cost of the buildings therein authorized to be constructed, together with ten per cent. thereon to cover the compensation of architects, superintendents, advertising, and other contingent expenses, and so much as may be required to purchase suitable sites for said buildings, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned until a valid title to the land for the site of such building, in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until the State shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way assess said site or the property of the United States that may be thereon during the time that the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

This amendment was really concurred in by the House; but, owing to a mistake in the numbering, it was reported by the Clerk as non-concurred in. The committee have, therefore, reported that it be retained.

The next amendment is upon page ninety-one, and numbered one hundred and sixty-five. The Senate propose to insert the following:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the collections of the Exploring Expedition, now in the Patent Office, be placed under the care and management of the Commissioner of Patents, who is hereby authorized to employ one principal keeper of said collections, at an annual salary of $900, one assistant keeper at an annual salary of $750, one night watchman at an annual salary of $600, and two laborers at an annual salary each of $365.

Upon examination of that amendment, Mr. PEARCE, of the Senate committee, who is a member of the Joint Committee on the Library, assured us that these officers are now kept up and paid to have charge of this collection. The object of the amendment is only to relieve the Joint Committee on the Library from their responsibility concerning the matter. There is, I believe, an increase of one messenger, besides which it will cost no more money than under the present arrangement. The committee, therefore, report in favor of the House receding from its disagreement.

These are all the amendments from which the House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendments. There are five others, however, from which the House recede with amendments. The first of that class is on page seventy-eight, of the printed bill, and is as follows:

For completing the bridge over the Potomac river, near the Little Falls, $75,000.

The Senate committee agreed to strike out the "$75,000" and to insert "$15,000," which releases us from all responsibility in the matter.

The next of that class is on page ninety-one, numbered one hundred and sixty-four. It reads:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of June, 1855, the pay of the Librarian of Congress shall be $2,000, the pay of the two principal assistants each $1,800, and that of the third assistant $1,200, and that of the messenger, $1,200 per annum.

We have agreed to that amendment by amending it so as to increase the salary of the Librarian of the congressional library from $1,500 to $1,800 per annum, that of his assistants to $1,500, and of the messenger to $1,200. This will put them about upon a par with the other employees about the Capitol. I believe they are the worst paid officers in our employ.

The one hundred and seventy-seventh amendment is in the same category: It is the amendment proposing an increase of the compensation to the chaplains. The Senate receded from that amendment; but before the conclusion of our conference, we learned that the House had passed a resolution giving the chaplain of the House an amount of money which would make his pay equal to that proposed by the amendment. We were then appealed to on the part of the Senate. We were told that by a law which governed them they could not vote out of the contingent fund anything to increase the compensation of the chaplain of the Senate. We then agreed to reconsider, and to put both chaplains on an equal footing. However, we attached the following proviso, to prevent any misunderstanding in relation to the action of the House:

Provided, That the said sum shall be in full for the compensation to be received by said chaplains.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the amount?

Mr. HOUSTON. Seven hundred and fifty dollars. The chaplains have heretofore received by law $500 each, as salary; but at the termination of every session they have had the usual extra compensation of $250 each allowed them. So regularly had they received it, that they regarded it as a part of their salary. That terminates these amendments. Now, if the committee desire further explanation—

[Cries of "No! you have done well, and deserve the thanks of the House."] Mr. COBB. What has become of the water-works?

Mr. HOUSTON. The Senate have receded from them.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The question was taken; and the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. ORR. I move to reconsider the vote by which that report was adopted; and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROLONGATION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to take up the Senate resolution changing the day for the adjournment of the session.

[Cries all over the Hall of "I object!"]

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the rules be suspended, in order that that resolution may be taken up and considered.

Mr. MATTESON. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENN. I should like to say one word before the vote is taken. It is utterly impossible—

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. PHELPS. I hope that the gentleman may be allowed to make his statement. He is a member of the Enrolling Committee.

Mr. MATTESON. I object to any statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.) The gentleman from Iowa is a member of the committee which is charged at this stage of the session with more business than any other. Is it the pleasure of the House to hear what he has to say in regard to the business of that committee?

Mr. MATTESON. I object.

Mr. HENN. I will state to the House that it is utterly impossible for the Committee on Enrolled Bills—

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. McMULLIN. Let the gentleman make his statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that that being a privileged committee—it having the right to report at any time—the gentleman may have a right to make a statement of the condition of the business before it.

Mr. MURRAY. The Committee on Enrolled Bills merely desire to make a report, in order that the House may understand the condition of business.

Mr. HAVEN. Will the House allow me to say a word to my friends around me. I hope they will hear the gentleman from the Committee on Enrolled Bills. We all desire to know the condition of the business, and to do what is right.

Mr. HENN. It is utterly impossible for the Committee on Enrolled Bills to compare all the bills that the House and Senate are acting upon between this time and twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HAVEN. If it is the pleasure of the House to act upon all the appropriation bills, including the river and harbor bill, I have no objection then, whatever, to interpose to any course the House may see fit to take.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I will vote to extend the time.

REFERENCE OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was about to ask if it is the pleasure of the House to take up the appropriation bills which have been returned from the Senate with amendments for the purpose of reference. If there be no objection, the bills will be presented.

Mr. ENGLISH. I object.

Mr. PRESTON. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUGHES.]

Mr. HUGHES. I withdraw the motion I made, and move to suspend the rules to enable those appropriation bills to be taken up and referred.

Mr. GOODE. I desire to ask the Presiding Officer whether it is in order to take up more than one bill at a time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it is in order to move to suspend the rules to take up every one of them. It is in order to move to suspend the rules to go to the business on the Speaker's table, including everything on it; and the motion can be limited to any less number than all the business on the Speaker's table. The Chair thinks that the business which is included in this motion is sufficiently indicated by the character of the motion to enable the members of the House to vote intelligently.

The question is on the suspension of the rules; on which tellers have been demanded.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—ayes 105, noes 33.

So (there being more than two thirds in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

The question being upon Mr. HUGHES's motion that the House appropriation bills, with the Senate amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table—

Mr. GOODE. Do I understand the Speaker to decide that it is in order to take a vote upon a motion to take up more than one bill at a time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly, the Chair decides that the gentleman could move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up all of the bills upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. GOODE. Is it in order to take up two bills at a time and refer them?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move to take them all up, one at a time in their order. We never put two bills upon their passage at once.

The motion was then agreed to.

The following bill was then taken from the Speaker's table:

An act making appropriations for the repair preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Simultaneous with the announcement that the bill was so referred,

Mr. LETCHER said: Cannot the yeas and nays be ordered upon its reference?

The SPEAKER. Suppose you do not refer it. The Chair decides, however, that it is referred.

Mr. HAVEN. If the gentleman is willing to take a vote upon it without reference, we are ready.

Mr. LETCHER. I understand the Speaker to say that the vote has been taken, and that the bill is referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the rules require that bills making appropriations shall have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. LETCHER. Does the Speaker, then, decide that the yeas and nays cannot be had on the question of reference?

The SPEAKER. Any member of the House can move to refer it to a standing committee, and he can call the yeas and nays upon that motion. He can also move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and if the question were not already decided, perhaps he could call the yeas and nays upon that; but if he failed in referring it, he could not have it considered and put upon its passage.

Mr. LETCHER. I know it could not be considered; but I called for the yeas and nays upon the motion to refer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the call came too late.

Mr. LETCHER. The yeas and nays were called for before the decision was announced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear that call.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the result of the vote was announced before he heard the call for the yeas and nays, and from that decision the gentleman from Virginia appeals. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRESTON. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. BOCOCK. Does the Chair decide that it is too late to take an appeal after the question has been announced?

The SPEAKER. After the result of the vote has been announced.

The question was then taken; and decided in the affirmative.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

The following bill was then taken from the Speaker's table:

An act making appropriation for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1855.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

EXTENSION OF THE SESSION—AGAIN.

Mr. HUGHES. I withdraw my motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of allowing the appropriation bills to be referred. I now again ask the consent of the House to take up the joint resolution extending the session until Monday next. I am opposed to extending the session, but I want the question to be settled.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to move to take up that resolution.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the House will allow me to say just one sentence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HAVEN. I am aware of that, but I desire to say to the House that I am thankful for what it has just done, and that especially after the statement that has just been made by a member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, [Mr. HENN,] in reference to the condition of the business of the House. I shall interpose, and I hope our friends on this side of the House will interpose, no further objection to the extension of the session. If it is the will of the majority, I am willing to sacrifice three more days to accomplish the object we have in view.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. MATTESON. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 79, nays 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Appleton, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bugg, Caskie, Chamberlain, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, John G. Davis, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Faulkner, Florence, Goodrich, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Hunt, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Lamb, Letcher, McDougall, McMullin, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, May, Smith Miller, Millson, Noble, Olds, Orr, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rowe, Seward, Shower, Singleton, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—79.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Bennett, Bliss, Bridges, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chastain, Churchwell, Craige, Cumming, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dowdell, Dunham, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Kelt, Kidwell, Knox, Kurtz, Lilly, Lindsley, McCulloch, McQueen, Matteson, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, Parker, Pennington, John Perkins, Powell, Pringle, Reese, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Shaw, Skelton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Trout, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Israel Washburn, and Wells—78.

So (two thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. HENN said: As I made a statement some time ago which might mislead some gentlemen as to their votes, I will say, that upon consultation with one of my colleagues [Mr. GREEN] upon the Committee on Enrolled Bills, he gave it as his opinion that the committee could examine all the bills before the hour fixed for adjournment to-morrow, if the House will pass them. Such, however, is not my opinion.

Mr. GREEN. I desire to say, as a member of that committee, that I think the Committee on Enrolled Bills can examine properly all the bills, if the House will pass them, before twelve o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. PRESTON. As some gentlemen upon the other side of this House have intimated that if the session be extended until Monday, we can in the mean time take up and dispose of the river and harbor bill, I desire to know whether such is the understanding, and upon the answer will depend my vote upon this motion.

Mr. PHELPS. I will state to the House that, under the circumstances stated by my friend from Kentucky on my left, I am willing the river and harbor bill shall come up and receive a fair vote. I am opposed to the bill but I am ready to vote at once.

Mr. PRESTON. Then I vote aye.

The SPEAKER here resumed the chair.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled a joint resolution and bill of the following titles; which were signed by the Speaker:

Joint resolution directing the presentation of a medal to Commander Duncan N. Ingraham; and an act for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh, and to repeal the act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein.

Mr. PHELPS. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAVEN. Before that motion is put, I desire to offer a resolution closing debate upon the two bills which have just been referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PHELPS. That is not in order.

Mr. HAVEN. The Chair ruled the other day that such a motion was in order.

Mr. ENGLISH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn; there being, on a division, only forty-three votes in the affirmative.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HIBBARD. I am directed by the committee of conference on the part of the House, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses in reference to the Post Office appropriation bill, to report that, after meeting with the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, and a full conference, they have been unable to agree. They recommend that the House do insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate. If that be done, I shall then move the appointment of another committee of conference.

The question was taken; and the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the Post Office appropriation bill, and asked for a committee of conference.

Thereupon the SPEAKER appointed Messrs. OLDS, CHANDLER, and BOCK, as the managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken; and Mr. PHELPS's motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. McMULLIN in the chair.)

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question before the committee for consideration is the amendments of the Senate to the river and harbor bill.

First amendment:

Strike out " $18,000 " and insert in lieu thereof " $100,000," so that the paragraph will read:
For continuing the improvement of the Des Moines rapids, in the Mississippi river, $100,000.

Mr. HAVEN. I move a concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, demanded tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. GREY and McDUGGALL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 75.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

In line seven hundred and ten, after the words " New York harbor," insert the words " for continuing the removal of rocks at Hell Gate and Diamond Reef, New York harbor, including the amount expended prior to August 30, 1862, $20,000."

Mr. PHELPS. I propose to reduce the amount ten dollars. If I understand the history of the matter, it is this. Some citizens in the city of New York concluded that they would endeavor to improve the harbor of New York. A gentleman by the name of Maillefer was employed, I believe, to remove the rocks at Hell Gate. If it is the duty of the Government of the United States to reimburse to the citizens the funds advanced by them for improving the harbor of New York in this appropriation bill, it is also proper and right that they should reimburse to the citizens of Baltimore the amount of money which individuals have expended upon the harbor of that city.

It will be recollected that a bill passed the Senate proposing to appropriate $140,000 for the improvement of Cape Fear river, North Carolina; and it also contained another appropriation of $50,000 for the purpose of reimbursing the amount to the city of Wilmington which they had expended. An appropriation of $150,000 was also proposed for the purpose of improving the harbor of that city. The bill which we now have under consideration contains an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Dubuque. If it be right to refund this money to New York, it is also right to refund it to the private citizens or corporations of other towns and cities who have expended money for the purpose of improving the navigation of the rivers or bays on which such towns are situated.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. We have no time to lose. I, therefore, simply say that I oppose the amendment.

Mr. PHELPS. I withdraw my amendment. I only offered it for the purpose of making this explanation.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I desire to ask whether this appropriation is for the purpose of refunding money expended by the corporation of New York, or by any private individuals?

Mr. WENTWORTH. All that I can say is, that this amendment was added to the bill of the Senate, and that the distinguished Senator from the State of Michigan voted for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STUART. I do not care if all the Senators voted for it. I do not vote for it except I understand it to be right. I hope some gentleman will give me the information I want. I appeal to my friend from New York. If it is right, I shall vote for it.

Mr. HAVEN. Does the gentleman from Michigan inquire of me?

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAVEN. I can safely say to the gentleman from Michigan, in reference to this amendment, that although I have no information on the subject other than that derived from having heard the amendment read, and though it was not before our committee, yet, from the reading of the amendment, and from the knowledge that I have of the history of the case, I am aware that this sum includes some $6,000 or $8,000 which has been expended prior to the time mentioned in the amendment itself.

Mr. PHELPS. Nine thousand dollars.

Mr. HAVEN. Very well. And the balance, I suppose, is for the purpose of completing the work. That is what I suppose it to be. I cannot, on my honor, say how the truth of the matter really is; but I have no doubt that it is as I have stated.

Mr. STUART. Was the $9,000 expended under the direction of the Government of the country?

Mr. HAVEN. The $9,000, or whatever sum it was, as I understand it, was expended by some of the large forwarding merchants and ship owners of the city of New York, for the purpose of ascertaining whether this was a practical and feasible operation. Mr. Maillefer removed that rock, and opened this dangerous passage through Hell Gate, and thereby saved hundreds of thousands of dollars in shipping and property transported, which would be otherwise in danger of loss and destruction. I can make no further explanation.

Mr. CUMMING. I propose to amend the amendment of the Senate by increasing the appropriation $20,000. Sir, the merchants of New York do not come begging to Congress. I live myself on the other side of the river; but I take pleasure in saying so. They do not come here to beg an appropriation. They are willing, and their representatives are willing, to give large sums all over the South, East, and West, for the improvement of rivers and harbors. This appropriation is for the improvement of one of the most important entrances to the most important port in the United States—to the port which pours into your Treasury the very money which we are all quarreling about. These gentlemen had subscribed certain sums of money for the purpose of testing the feasibility of removing the rocks from Hell Gate. They proceeded to a certain extent, and found that it was a thing which could be done. They have already removed rocks from that place to an extent sufficient to enable any vessels to enter there—rocks upon which have been stranded hundreds of merchant vessels; and not only that, but rocks upon which frigates have been stranded, and innumerable lives lost. They have made that which was a terror to the navigators of Long Island sound, almost a plain open channel. Now they ask a small sum of money to enable them to complete that which they have so successfully commenced; though I do not believe they have begged for what the Senate have inserted here. They ask a small sum of money to make an open and plain channel of that which has been the Scylla and Charybdis of this country. I hope, therefore, that instead of refusing these gentlemen, if they ask it, this small sum, you will put the amount at twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars instead of $20,000.

Mr. FULLER. It is true that Hell Gate is one of the most dangerous places of navigation in our whole country. It is true that I regard the improvement at the point for which this appropriation is proposed, as one of the most important and valuable ones. And it is true that the merchants of New York, who tested the experiment of removing those rocks, through the agency of Mr. Maillefer, are entitled to great credit for their enterprise, and they had the satisfaction of seeing that the money in that instance did a great deal of good; for everybody knows that the result of their labors was the increase of the depth of the water from eight to eighteen feet. But I am opposed to the principle of refunding to private individuals, the money which they have subscribed for such a purpose. Perhaps the original contributors may have become insolvent, or may have died; and in such instances it would be utterly impracticable to refund the money to them.

Mr. WALSH. The merchants of New York are able to make their own improvements, and they do not want a cent refunded.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment:

And the amount which has been heretofore expended by any city or town for the improvement of the river or harbor upon which it is situated, shall be refunded, and be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. That amendment introduces a new item into the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and decides that the amendment is in order, as being germane to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. PHELPS. I am willing to yield any credit to the city of New York for the enterprise of its merchants. I know it is a city where the merchants are enterprising. I know they are wealthy, and are ready to do anything to promote the interest of the city, and I rejoice in the prosperity of the city. But when you undertake to legislate money into the pockets of individuals who have paid it out for these improvements in one portion of the Union, why not go to the other portions of the Union and refund the money which has been paid out for such improvements in the small cities and towns? When you undertake to refund this money to the city of New York, the great commercial emporium of the nation, why not do the same for the city of St. Louis, the city which I, in part, represent upon this floor?

Sir, the city of St. Louis has expended some two or three hundred thousand dollars in making improvements in her harbor, because the General Government would not remove the obstructions there; and the money has been raised from her citizens by taxation. They did it for the purpose of promoting the prosperity of the city. But if it be proper to refund those $9,000 to New York, because she comes here as a suppliant, it is equally right to refund to St. Louis the two or three hundred thousand dollars which her citizens have paid. It is right that the citizens of Wilmington should be paid for what they have expended in their harbor; and it is equally right and proper that the money expended by all the cities in the United States for such purposes should be refunded to them.

Mr. CUMMING. Has New York ever refused to vote to St. Louis, or any other city, what they have asked for improvements like these?

Mr. PHELPS. What I asked was, that St. Louis should be placed upon the same footing with New York in this bill.

Mr. CUMMING. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to place St. Louis upon the same footing with New York in this bill. I am willing to place Wilmington, North Carolina, upon the same footing. I am willing to place Baltimore upon the same footing. I am willing to place Boston, or any other city in the United States, upon the same footing with New York.

Mr. HAVEN. I fear we are taking up too much of the time of the committee in discussing these amendments. It seems to me we cannot well spend more without prejudice to other bills, which need the action of the House. I may be allowed to say, however, that I did not expect my friend from Missouri would be willing to go before the country as such an ardent advocate for refunding money paid out by private citizens for such improvements. For one, I am quite willing that this amendment should be non-concurred in. In fact, I am inclined to think the committee had better non-concur in it; but I hope, at all events, they will vote upon it without further discussion.

Mr. PHELPS. I am not a friend to these appropriations, but I am a friend to justice—justice to all sections of the Union.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order.

The amendment offered by Mr. PHELPS was then disagreed to.

Mr. HENN. I move to decrease the appropriation one dollar.

Mr. HAVEN. While I do not wish to interfere with my friend from Iowa, I must raise a question of order upon his amendment. The Senate amendment does not make any specific appropriation. It is to refund the money which has been paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa to move to decrease the appropriation for New York, and if that is his amendment, the Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. HAVEN. But there is no specific appropriation named in the Senate amendment, and, therefore, an amendment cannot be offered to reduce any amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will decide the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. HENN. I move to strike out the whole appropriation for New York.

Mr. HAVEN. Again I raise a question of order. There is no specific appropriation for New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then be compelled to decide the amendment out of order.

Mr. HENN. Well, sir, I move to strike out of the Senate amendment the words "including the amount expended prior to August 30."

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

Mr. HENN. I wish to say only two or three words, and not to consume the time of the committee. I wish to know whether the friends of the river and harbor bill are going to stand by each other? If they are, let us vote down this and every other amendment to the bill.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. ORR. The gentleman ought to confine himself to his proposition, and not lecture his friends here.

Mr. HENN. I wish to know whether the friends of the river and harbor bill desire to have it go back to the Senate or not? If we concur in all these amendments, it will not go back, and then we may save the bill. I wish to see all its true friends, then, try to save it. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

After this paragraph: "For continuing the reopening of a communication between the Albemarle Sound, in North Carolina, and the Atlantic ocean, $50,000," add the following:

In addition to the sum of $50,000 appropriated by the act of August 30, 1852, and this sum, as well as a former appropriation, may be used for a breakwater, or such other works as the Secretary of War may deem best adapted to accomplish that object.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope we shall non-concur in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

For the improvement of the Brazos river, in the State of Texas, $44,000.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I hope there will be a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Insert the words "and Passaic river, below the town of Newark and of Newark bay," so that the paragraph will read:

For continuing the improvement of the harbor at Newark, and Passaic river, below the town of Newark, and of Newark bay, New Jersey, $25,000.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I move, pro forma, to increase the appropriation one dollar.

I have only to say to the committee that this amendment of the Senate is proper and necessary to subserve the purpose for which the appropriation was originally put into the bill.

I withdraw my amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in, there being, on a division, only forty-nine votes in the affirmative.

Sixth amendment:

For the survey of the harbors of San Pedro, Santa Barbara, Monterey, San Francisco, Humboldt, and Trinity, in the State of California, and the rivers Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Colorado, and the harbor of Appalachicola, Florida, $50,000.

For a survey for a breakwater at Grace's Point, Block Island, $5,000.

Mr. McDUGALL. I wish to say if there is any part of the bill that is legitimate that amendment is.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

Page fifteen, line eight, after the word "bidders," strike out all to the end of the bill, which comprises the following words:

Provided, That all persons entrusted with the disbursement of the fund appropriated for the works named in this act shall be required to give bond and ample security for the faithful application of the same.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

Add at the end of the bill the following section:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract with the proper parties for the purchase of Grant's pass near the entrance of Mobile harbor, on the mail route from New Orleans to Mobile, and that he report said contract to Congress at its next session for approval.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. HAVEN. I move that the committee rise, and report the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the Senate amendments to House bill (No. 392) "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law," and had instructed him to report back the same to the House, with a recommendation that the House disagree to all said amendments.

Mr. HAVEN. I call for the previous question.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to lay the amendments on the table; and on that I ask the yeas and nays, if I am in time in doing so.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. Is it competent to ask a separate vote on the several amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, in the chair.) It is competent to do so.

Mr. STUART. Then I demand a separate vote on each of the amendments.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the Chair whether, if the motion to lay the amendments on the table prevail, it does not carry the whole bill with it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the amendments are laid on the table, they carry the bill with them.

Mr. LETCHER. I withdraw my motion to lay the amendments on the table.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. ORR. I ask the yeas and nays on the adoption of the first amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 70, nays 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bug, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Clark, Cook, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, DeWitt, Dick, Disney, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmands, Thomas D. Eliot, Eliot, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Knox, Latham, Lindsley, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Smith Miller, Morgan, Noble, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Simmons, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Yates, and Zollcoffer—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Boeock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chastain, Churchwell, Cobb, Craige, Dawson, Dowdell, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Everhart, Faulkner, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Houston, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Stuart, Straub, Andrew Stuart, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—76.

So the first amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the first amendment has been non-concurred in; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. HENN (at half past one o'clock, a. m.) moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. HENN. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. PHELPS. And I withdraw the motion that I made to reconsider the vote by which the first amendment was rejected.

The call of the House was not ordered.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is it in order now to move to lay the bill and amendments on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order to move to lay the amendments on the table.

Mr. SMITH. Then I move to lay the amendments on the table.

Mr. PRINGLE. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot do so. The motion for a call of the House is not in order when the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. PRINGLE, (at one o'clock and thirty-five minutes, a. m.) Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ORR. Is that the entertainment that our friend over the way invited us to?

[Laughter, and cries of "Order!"]

The question was taken; and the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question recurring on Mr. SMITH's motion,

Mr. PHELPS. I appeal to my friend from Virginia to withdraw his motion to lay the amendments on the table.

Mr. SMITH. Well, I do so.

Mr. WALSH. And I renew it.

Mr. BARKSDALE. On that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, nays 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Boeock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Caskey, Chastain, Cobb, Craige, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Dunham, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Everhart, Faulkner, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Houston, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, May, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Olds, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Rufin, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Stratton, Straub, Vail, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Banks, Bell, Benson, Bliss, Bug, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchwell, Clark, Cook, Cullom, Cumming, Thomas Davis, Dawson, DeWitt, Dick, Disney, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmands, Thomas D. Eliot, Eliot, English, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Knox, Latham, Lindsley, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Smith Miller, Morgan, Noble, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shower, Simmons, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Yates, and Zollcoffer—85.

So the House refused to lay the amendments on the table.

Pending the call,

Mr. MAXWELL stated that he had paired off with Mr. BALL.

Second amendment:

Page ten, line six, after words "New York harbor," insert the words "including the amount expended prior to August 30, 1852."

Mr. PHELPS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

Page eleven, line five, after the appropriation of $50,000 for reopening a communication between the Albemarle Sound in North Carolina and the Atlantic ocean, insert the following as part of the same clause:

In addition to the sum of $50,000 appropriated by the act of August 30, 1852, which sum is hereby reappropriated for a breakwater or such other works as the Secretary of War may deem best adapted to accomplish that object.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Page twelve, line five, after the appropriation for the improvement of the Colorado river, in Texas, insert:

For the improvement of the Brazos river, in the State of Texas, $44,000.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Page thirteen, line twenty-seven, insert the words "and Passaic river below the town of Newark and of Newark bay;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the improvement of the harbor at Newark and Passaic river below the town of Newark and of Newark bay, New Jersey, $25,000.

Mr. FENTON. I demand the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I call for tellers upon the question.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Page thirteen, after line eight, insert the following:

For the survey of the harbors of San Pedro, Santa Barbara, Monterey, San Francisco, Humboldt, and Trinity, in the State of California, and the rivers Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Colorado, and the harbor of Apalachicola, Florida, $15,000.

Mr. HAVEN. I call for tellers on that amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHAMBERLAIN and PRATT were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-one, (not a majority of a quorum.)

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

Page fifteen, line eight, after the word "bidders" strike out to the end of the bill, as follows:

And provided, That all persons intrusted with the disbursement of the funds appropriated for the works named in this act, shall be required to give bond and ample security for the faithful application of the same.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, to contract with the proper parties for the purchase of Grant's Pass, near the entrance of Mobile harbor, on the mail route from New Orleans to Mobile, and that he report said contract to Congress, at its next session for approval.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were non-concurred in, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I now move to suspend the 16th and 17th joint rules to allow the bill to go to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not necessary as those rules have been suspended for the remainder of the session.

Mr. HAVEN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HENN. I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw that motion to permit me to offer a resolution providing for paying the mail boys who are so constantly bringing our mail to us.

Mr. HAVEN. I cannot withdraw for that purpose.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill to provide for carrying into effect the late treaty between the United States and Great Britain was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ORR. I ask the Speaker if that motion is in order? Does not the motion of the gentleman from New York to go into a Committee of the Whole on the state of Union take precedence?

Mr. HAVEN. I only desire to say that I have no disposition to take any control over these matters. I am perfectly willing to leave the arrangement and disposal of the business of the House, to the gentlemen upon the other side of the House.

Mr. PHELPS. I hope the gentleman from New Hampshire will withdraw his motion.

Mr. HIBBARD. At the request of gentlemen around me, I will withdraw my proposition to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can have it entered, and taken up at any time.

Mr. McMULLIN. I think that it is certain, and must be well understood, that it will be utterly impossible for us to adjourn to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

The question was taken on Mr. HAVEN's motion; and it was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FULLER in the chair.)

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the committee do now proceed to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

First amendment:

That at the navy-yard at San Francisco the pay of the commander shall be $3,500 per annum; the pay of one storekeeper, $3,500; one civil engineer, $4,000; one draughtsman, who shall be clerk to engineer, $2,000; one clerk to storekeeper, $2,000; one navy agent, $4,000; one clerk to navy agent, $2,000.

Mr. PHELPS. An amendment similar to this was offered when this appropriation bill was last before us, and ruled out of order. I hope it will be non-concurred in.

Mr. McDUGALL. These are officers who have to discharge official duty in California, and their pay, as specified in the amendment, has been fixed in the estimates from the Department. The Committee of Finance of the Senate have reduced the estimates in almost every instance, and I am sure that the services required of these officers cannot be had in California for less than the amount stated in the amendment. Why should there be a non-concurrence?

Mr. PHELPS. I have this to say: At present, in California, you have a dry-dock and a pier constituting your navy-yard, and by the act of last Congress it was provided that that dry-dock may be leased out to dock the merchant marine. Then I do not see why we should have the personnel of a navy-yard there. The amendment provides for a commander, storekeeper, civil engineer draughtsman, and navy agent.

Mr. BOCOCK. It will be remembered that on a former occasion, when this bill was up, I moved an amendment similar to the one now under consideration. I had no opportunity to explain it, because it was ruled out of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have a dry-dock and pier in California; and under an act passed by a former Congress, a navy-yard distinct and separate was provided to be laid out. In order to have it laid out, it is necessary to send some one there to take charge and superintend the work. The Secretary of the Navy has already actually ordered a commander of the Navy to repair there for the purpose of that superintendence. Now, I would ask my friend from Missouri, can this commander, who has been ordered, and is bound to go there, live in California at a pittance of $2,500? The commonest of day-laborers get ten dollars a day there. The price of board is six dollars per day. If more officers are provided for in the amendment than are needed, move to strike some out. Some must go; some have been ordered to go there. Then pay those who are bound to go a proper salary. To pay a proper salary, we must make an increase of what is already received by these officers.

Mr. PHELPS. I look to the action of this House in reference to the navy-yard at San Francisco. The Committee of Ways and Means recommended that $200,000 should be appropriated for the building of a navy-yard at that place. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union agreed to the amendment; but when it came into the House, it was voted down. The Senate made an amendment to the bill appropriating for the same purpose the same amount which was recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means. Then, if the House refuses to concur in that amendment, of what use are all these officers?

Mr. SKELTON. Do not these officers get their regular salaries as naval officers besides?

Mr. PHELPS. This is to increase their pay.

Mr. BOCOCK. It is not in addition to their pay as naval officers.

Mr. McDUGALL. I move to increase the appropriation ten dollars. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Missouri whether the Committee of Ways and Means did not recommend an appropriation of $200,000 for the navy-yard at San Francisco?

Mr. PHELPS. I have already stated that the Committee of Ways and Means did recommend such an appropriation. I also stated that the House struck it out.

Mr. McDUGALL. It has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, by the Committee of Ways and Means of this House, and by the Finance Committee of the Senate. It is now added to the bill by the Senate, and I hope it will be concurred in by this body.

We have a navy agent at San Francisco. We have a naval storekeeper there, apart from, and not at all connected with, the navy-yard. They are both important offices, and the individuals who hold them are responsible for the disbursement of large sums of money in the transaction of important public business; and there must be an appropriation made providing for their payment. I contend that the sum appropriated in this bill for that purpose is not a fair and reasonable compensation; and it is less than bricklayers get in the city of San Francisco. If we are to have an administration of Federal officers there, let us give such a compensation as will secure good, fair, and respectable men—men who are fit to hold a responsible position. I consider that the amendment is a just and reasonable one, and I hope that the committee will agree to it. I now withdraw my amendment.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

Page two, line fifteen, after the word "dollars" insert: "Provided, Any naval officers who may be charged with the preparation, superintendence, or publication of the Nautical Almanac, shall receive no compensation for such duty beyond what he would receive whilst on duty at sea;" so that, as amended, the section would read:

For pay of the superintendents of naval construction, and all the civil establishments at the navy-yards and stations, $15,350: Provided, Any naval officer who may be charged with the preparation, superintendence, or publication of the Nautical Almanac, shall receive no compensation for such duty beyond what he would receive whilst on duty at sea.

Mr. PHELPS. I hope the committee will agree to the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment:

Page five, line two, after the word "other" strike out all to the end, and including the word "dollars," in line six, and insert in lieu thereof the words "improvements applicable to naval purposes, $10,000," so that the section, as amended, would read:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to test any improvements in steam boilers, or improvements applicable to naval purposes, $10,000.

Mr. PHELPS. It will be recollected that an appropriation of $10,000 was made for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Navy to test any improvements in steam boilers. The Senate have agreed to the amendment, providing that this sum should be expended for that purpose, or for any other purpose relative to improvement in naval affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. I move that the committee rise.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative.

So the committee refused to rise.

Fourth amendment:

In line twenty-six, after the word "tools," strike out the word "from," and insert in lieu thereof the word "for," so that the section, as amended, would read:

For quay wall, connecting with dock basin; completing engine house; machinery, tools for machinists and smiths; launching and hauling up water cisterns; for officers' quarters; extending ship-house number four; extension of ship-house, and launching slip, and repairs of all kinds, $63,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

Fifth amendment:

Page eight, line two, after the word "slip" insert "gas fixtures and pipes for lighting grounds and buildings."

Mr. PHELPS. This is a proposition to increase the appropriation for the improvement of the navy-yard at Norfolk $10,000, and for the purpose of introducing gas for lighting that navy-yard. I think we had better concur in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Line three, after the word "and" where it first occurs, strike out the word "fifty," and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty."

The clauses amended by the fifth and sixth amendments reads:

For completion of saw-mill, completion of ordnance building, completion of marine railway, extending boiler shop, converting old ordnance to machine shop, quay wall, removing shears, extension of ship-house and slip, gas fixtures and pipes for lighting grounds and buildings, filling in around foundry and laboratory, dredging channel, machinery, steam hammer and slanting machine, and repairs of all kinds, $162,281.

Mr. PHELPS. I recommend a concurrence in the amendment striking out the words "for continuing and raising the walls at Pensacola navy-yard and armory." The appropriation is for continuing the foundry and machinery for the same, and for the extension of the ship-house and improvements and repairs of all kinds, $152,281. The amendment proposes to strike out the word "fifty," and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty," so as to make the appropriation $162,281. This amendment is necessary in consequence of the expense of introducing gas into the navy-yard at Pensacola.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

Page eight, line four, after the word "wharf," strike out to, and including the word "dock basin," in line five.

The clause, as amended, reads:

For continuation of permanent wharf, engine and blast pipes for smiths' and machine shop, and repairs of all kinds, $143,500.

Mr. PHELPS. I recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

Page eight, strike out lines eight, nine, and ten, and insert as follows:

Navy yard, San Francisco: for continuing the blacksmith's shop, carpenter's shop, store house, wharf, officers' quarters, and other works, $200,000.

Mr. PHELPS. I recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. McDUGALL. On what grounds do the Committee of Ways and Means report against that amendment?

Mr. PHELPS. If the gentleman from California had paid attention to the proceedings he would have found that the amendments of the Senate to this bill have not been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. McDUGALL. Then I ask on what authority the recommendation is given?

Mr. PHELPS. I recommend on my individual responsibility. I never have stated that the committee made these recommendations.

Mr. McDUGALL. I understood you to say that they were the recommendations of the committee.

Mr. PHELPS. Never; never.

Mr. McDUGALL. The Committee of Ways and Means, when the bill was before the House, recommended an appropriation of $200,000 for improvements at San Francisco navy-yard; and I presume they would recommend the amendment reported from the Senate. I ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he can say the Committee of Ways and Means concur in that amendment?

Mr. PHELPS. I do not say that the Committee of Ways and Means either concur or non-concur.

Mr. McDUGALL. Have they acted upon it?

Mr. PHELPS. I have stated that they have not acted on any of these amendments. If the gentleman had only paid a little attention, he would have found that I stated that fact some four times.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. McDUGALL. I merely wish to be understood by the committee. This appropriation has been recommended by the Department. It was recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means of this House. It was recommended by the Committee of Finance in the Senate. The amendment containing it passed the Senate, and it has now come back here. It is rendered necessary for the purpose of carrying on improvements already commenced in California. The work has to be built some time, and if the appropriation be not made now, it will only cause the loss of a year. But I do not know why the appropriation should not be made at this session.

Mr. SKELTON. This is the very same proposition which was before the House, and was voted down when the bill was under consideration.

Mr. McDUGALL. It was voted down because nobody said a word about it.

Mr. PHELPS. I think myself that it is advisable the appropriation should be made, and that the amendment should be adopted after striking out the words "officers' quarters and other works."

Mr. McDUGALL. I consent to that modification.

Mr. PHELPS. I recommend that to be done. The amendment will then be restored to the way in which the Committee of Ways and Means originally recommended it.

Mr. McMULLIN, (at two o'clock and twenty minutes a. m.) I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I call for tellers upon that motion.

Tellers were ordered.

[The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, upon the bill of the House (No. 48) making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1855.]

The committee then resumed its session.

Mr. MILLSON. I rise merely to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Virginia, and it is this: It is very evident that a large proportion of the members present are opposed to an adjournment, and would not adjourn if the committee should rise. Now, if, upon the motion to rise, the committee should find itself without a quorum, we should be compelled to call the roll, and then go into the House. In the House, the result will be a call of the House, which will occupy us until near morning, so that the gentleman will not effect the object he has in view, an adjournment; and we shall lose a great deal of precious time if his motion is insisted upon. The Navy and other appropriation bills are still to be disposed of.

Mr. McMULLIN. I cannot withdraw my motion with justice to myself and to my constituents. [Laughter.]

Mr. STRATTON. I call for a division upon the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers have been ordered.

Messrs. BENSON and McNAIR were then appointed tellers.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 9, noes 121.

So the committee refused to rise.

[The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that they had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the bill of the House making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department, for the year ending June 30, 1855, and had directed him to ask that another committee be appointed.]

The committee then resumed its session.

The question recurred upon the amendment offered by Mr. PHELPS to strike out the words "officers' quarters and other works."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the Senate amendment, as amended.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move to amend by reducing the appropriation to $100,000.

This amendment of the Senate is to strike out entire the appropriation for Memphis, Tennessee, and to insert in lieu of it, an appropriation for the construction of certain works at San Francisco, California. There is another amendment proposed by the Senate, at the close of the bill, abolishing the Government works at Memphis entirely, and ceding the improvements made by the Government there to the city of Memphis.

Mr. Chairman, for the last nine years, ever since I have had the honor to occupy a seat in this House, I have advocated the completion of the works at Memphis as being necessary to bring the great resources of the valley of the Mississippi into use for the benefit of the United States. But, sir, the appropriations for the benefit of those works have been very small. From a navy-yard, the establishment has dwindled down to a rope-walk, for the manufacture of American hemp, and even there the spindles are not now turning for the purpose of spinning rope. But, sir, if this state of things is to continue, if hemp is not to be purchased for manufacture, if the money expended there is to be thrown away, and the establishment suffered to rot down, perhaps it may be well to make the change.

Mr. McDUGALL. I regard the amendment of the Senate as of the utmost importance, and again express my hope that it may be passed.

Mr. STANTON. No man is more deeply interested in the necessity for a navy-yard at San Francisco, and no man would have more liberally voted than myself.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am aware of the kind disposition of my friend from Tennessee. I submit whether the appropriation for the navy-yard at San Francisco is not of infinitely more importance. The gentleman himself says that the navy-yard at Memphis has been turned into a rope-walk; and whatever may have been the cause of that change, it is evident that that is not, at the present time, an important point for a navy-yard. One is now imperatively demanded for the Pacific coast. Appropriations have already been made for that purpose, and the construction of the yard is already in progress. The enterprise should not be embarrassed by a denial of these important appropriations. I hope that the recommendations of the Navy Department, the Committee of Ways and Means, and of the Finance Committee, may be adopted by this committee.

Mr. STANTON, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move pro forma to increase the appropriation one dollar.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment of the Senate. I will call the attention of the committee, and of my friend from Tennessee, to a little table, which I intended to present at an earlier period of the session. I believe that we require a navy-yard at San Francisco; but I do not believe that we require one at Memphis. I believe that we have too much of the matériel on shore, and too little of it afloat. To show how we have been distributing money among these navy-yards, I shall take the instance of Memphis. I take it because it is in my own section of the Union. The following is the result: We have expended there $1,017,616 34. We have at Memphis officers whose annual salaries amount to the sum of $19,360. Now, what have we to show for this million of dollars and more expended there, besides the annual expenditure of nearly $20,000 for pay of officers? Nothing on earth, as my friend from Tennessee will bear witness, except that they spin a little rope there from hemp furnished from Kentucky and Tennessee. This shows that there are no results at the navy-yard at Memphis at all answerable to the expenses annually being incurred there. I will vote in favor of the amendment leaving out Memphis, and making the appropriation recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means, with a view of establishing a navy-yard at San Francisco. That is a point where a navy-yard would be of some use to the country.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. It seems to me that we ought to consider this matter well before making this appropriation. There have been already large appropriations made for California in almost every appropriation bill before the House; and before we make an appropriation for a navy-yard at San Francisco, we should examine and consider the subject well to see if there is necessity for the establishment of such a yard there, or you may, as at Memphis, find that you have expended a great deal of money with but little result flowing from it. Whatever may be the final result, it seems to me that we should not attempt to do everything at once, and accomplish all that may be necessary to be done there in one short session of Congress. I believe that this appropriation had better be postponed until some future day, when we can act more wisely and intelligently in reference to its necessity. Every thing that is done in California is done at a vast expense. I believe that there are private yards at San Francisco, where repairs of the few vessels that sail upon that coast can be made.

Mr. LATHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman from Rhode Island this question, whether he is aware of the fact that there are continually at anchorage in the bay of San Francisco between three and four hundred vessels; and that there have been between fifty and one hundred vessels sunk in the harbor there, because it was absolutely impossible to undergo the expense of carrying them into navy-yards where they could be fully and completely repaired?

Mr. DAVIS. My object was to call the attention of the House to the great amount of appropriations which we are asked to make upon that coast for California, and I do it for the purpose of showing the House the necessity of a full and thorough investigation of this subject, which they cannot give to it at this late period of the session.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

The question was then taken upon the Senate amendment, as amended; and it was agreed to.

Ninth amendment:

Page eight, line fourteen, after the word "dollars," insert as follows:

And that the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of a naval depot on the right bank of the river Mississippi in descending, at the site now owned and held by the United States for that purpose, near the city of New Orleans, and for such buildings and improvements as may be judged necessary for the accommodation of the United States vessels of war in that quarter.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out $100,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $25,000. It would seem, from the way in which the amendment is worded, that it is proposed to commence a navy-yard in New Orleans.

Mr. HUNT. A naval depot.

Mr. PHELPS. You may call it a "naval depot," if you please; but this amendment is an old acquaintance of mine. I had occasion to examine it at the last session of Congress; and also to consider it while on a committee of conference on one of the appropriation bills during the last session of Congress. Then the question of an appropriation was originated for the purpose of establishing a naval depot on a tract of land belonging to the Government, in the vicinity of New Orleans; but as I understood it, it was really the commencement of another navy-yard. In fact, that was the object avowed by the Senator who then, in part, represented Louisiana.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate insisted upon their amendments disagreed to by the House to the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate's amendments; and I ask that a committee of conference be appointed, to meet a similar committee on the part of the Senate, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

It was so ordered; and Messrs. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, CLINGMAN, and PERKINS of Louisiana, were appointed managers of said conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bill, which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act to incorporate the Pioneer Manufacturing Company of Georgetown, District of Columbia.

The committee then resumed its session.

NAVY BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. PHELPS. I was remarking, Mr. Chairman, that one of the Senators from the State of Louisiana, at the last session of Congress, avowed to me that it was his expectation to have a navy-yard established at New Orleans, in the event of an appropriation similar to this being made. Now, it is the opinion of every one who has examined this question, that we have already too many navy-yards in this country.

Mr. HUNT. How many are there on the Mississippi river?

Mr. PHELPS. I believe there is one.

Mr. HUNT. There is not one.

Mr. PHELPS. There is one at Memphis.

Mr. HUNT. That is not near us.

Mr. PHELPS. But you have one comparatively near you—that at Pensacola. That one ought to be sufficient for the Gulf coast.

Mr. HUNT. And yet on the Atlantic coast you have navy-yards at Norfolk, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston.

Mr. PHELPS. Ask every Secretary of the Navy, and he will tell you that we have already too many navy-yards; and now it is proposed by this amendment to establish another at New Orleans. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the Senate. I had expected, and it was the expectation of the body, that the naval committee of this House was to have acted on this question before this, and been able to report at this session of Congress a bill to abolish some of these navy-yards. But, owing to the immense amount of business they had to transact, it was impossible for that committee to make a report on this subject.

Mr. BOCKOCK, (interrupting.) If the gentleman from Missouri will permit me, I will say, that I believe it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that we had too many navy-yards; but they were not able to agree as to which should be abolished.

Mr. PHELPS. Then we have the opinion, the unanimous opinion, of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who have charge of this and matters of a like nature, that we already have too many navy-yards in the country; and yet, if this appropriation is made, we shall find a navy-yard growing up at New Orleans.

Mr. SKELTON. I will remark, that the Committee on Naval Affairs were of the unanimous opinion that we have too many navy-yards; they were also of opinion that one upon the Gulf, and one upon the Atlantic coast, would be sufficient.

Mr. PHELPS, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. FLORENCE. I, for one, did not agree that one navy-yard upon the Atlantic coast would be sufficient.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, I was informed of this amendment only a few hours ago, and have had no opportunity of satisfactory preparation for its immediate discussion. But the Senator who gave me the information [Mr. SLIDELL] was kind enough to furnish me, at the same time, with a memorandum on the subject, which relieves me from the embarrassment I would otherwise, in a great measure, experience. The memorandum is written by a well informed and experienced officer of the Navy, and presents the reasons in support of the amendment so clearly, so briefly, and so conclusively, that I will take the liberty of reading it to the committee:

"Reasons for establishing a naval depot of equipment and of coal, and a rendezvous at New Orleans."

"New Orleans is a vast commercial mart, where are to be had all the personnel and the material requisite to equip a fleet.

"It is the chief point of assemblage of more than fifty thousand men engaged in the commerce of the valley of the Mississippi, and of some four to five thousand seamen of the ocean merchant marine.

"The material referred to is the production of the country, finding its first market at New Orleans, and can therefore be procured at the lowest possible cost.

"It is the region of live oak, yellow pine, and cypress, and near that of locust and red cedar, the best ship-timber in the world.

"The fuel for steamers (coal) will not be subject to the cost of transshipment, which is rarely less than one hundred per cent. The depth of the bar at the mouth of the Mississippi is sufficient for the largest class of war steamers, if properly muddled; and the channel from thence to New Orleans is always clear. The steamer would come to her coal instead of having the coal sent to her."

The position of New Orleans is eminently advantageous for defense; and it is most safely, suitably, and conveniently situated to equip the only description of force which the change in naval warfare has made adequate to the protection of our commerce in its passage through the Gulf of Mexico and Strait of Florida, viz: a steam fleet. All the means of constructing a steam fleet are at hand in the valley of the Mississippi. Already the operatives skilled in all the arts applicable to the construction of vessels and machinery build and put afloat some two hundred steamers per year. Some of these are of as much tonnage as the Pennsylvania three-decker; and the writer concludes with this recommendation:

"The depth of water on the bar of the Mississippi should be the limit of the draught of water of every steamer in the Navy of the United States; because that is about the standard depth of the entrances to most of our harbors south of the Chesapeake, from which the greater part of our naval force is debarked, and consequently rendered useless for their protection."

Mr. Chairman, I have been informed that the depot at Memphis has just been abolished. There is then no naval depot on the Mississippi.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, but—

Mr. HUNT. Then why do you do it?

Mr. STANTON. I will explain why I do it. The gentleman from Louisiana says the navy-yard at Memphis has been abolished. I have not seen that that navy-yard has been abolished.

Mr. HUNT. I understood that to be the effect of a previous amendment.

Mr. PHELPS. The amendment which has been concurred in by the committee was to strike out the appropriation for Memphis. There is a proposition at the close of the bill for abolishing it.

Mr. HUNT. If we have stricken out the provision for its support, I apprehend we have substantially abolished the navy-yard. But, sir, the House is in possession of the reasons, and, in my opinion, they are ample, for supporting the amendment.

From the commercial and natural relation of the Mississippi and the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea, it is clear there should be a depot on the Mississippi. Our commerce on the Gulf, and on that sea, now large, is, from our connection with the Pacific, increasing very rapidly. That commerce demands the protection of a considerable naval force; and that force, to be maintained as effective, should have near its field of operation a naval depot. New Orleans is manifestly the best site for the desired depot. From its situation, with due care for its protection, it is safe from any foreign attack; while, at the same time, it is within the easiest reach of war steamers for the supply and remedy of all their wants. This subject of a depot was brought to the notice of the Navy Department three or four years ago, in an able memorial of the general council of New Orleans. It urged the various grounds relied upon in the memorandum I have read. It sets forth that, by means of the Mississippi and its tributaries, New Orleans can receive supplies of every description at the cheapest rates. Provisions of all the kinds necessary for the subsistence of the Navy—munitions of war, and ordnance in all its varieties—hemp, as the raw material, and cordage, as its manufactured article—iron of the best quality, in its crude and manufactured condition—coal, timber, and machinery from Pittsburg and Cincinnati—all can be floated down to the wharf of the Government by the cheapest mode of transportation, and in its depot safely secured for future use and distribution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. For the purpose of allowing my colleague to proceed with his remarks, I move to increase the appropriation $100,000.

Mr. HUNT. I am obliged to my colleague, but I have nothing further to say, the object having been stated, and the reasons found sufficient. I hope the House will support this amendment. It is necessary for the protection of the commerce of the gulf; it is necessary for the equipment of the vessels that may be required for the protection of commerce. It would be the place for a navy-yard; but the question now before us is for the establishment of a depot for equipment, coal, &c.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to oppose the amendment. The gentleman from Louisiana does not seem to understand precisely the position in which the navy-yard at Memphis now stands. It is not abolished. It is not removed. It is not substantially abolished, but it is in a very lingering condition. It remains only for the amendment added at the end of this bill, to give it the finishing stroke. By that amendment it is proposed to cede the establishment back again to the city of Memphis.

Now, sir, if this House is disposed to cut off all its appropriations, if it is disposed to give up all the machinery and facilities there for manufacturing American hemp, it would perhaps be as good a thing as could be done, to cede the establishment back to the city of Memphis.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I want to ask my friend from Tennessee whether, of his knowledge, any ship has ever been built at the Memphis navy-yard?

Mr. STANTON. No ship has ever been built there because no Secretary of the Navy has ever ordered one to be built there. A ship, however, has been fitted out there. The Alleghany, which was built two thousand miles above, in Pittsburg, was brought down to Memphis and fitted out there.

I will say one word more. There is a gentleman now here, and who but a little while ago called me from my seat to the door, who proposes to build one of the six new steamers, at Memphis; and I tell my friend from Kentucky, that if the opportunity is only afforded us we will build forty ships at Memphis as well as they can be built anywhere else on the globe. We have the men and the material. We have everything necessary, and if my friend will only give us some of the hemp grown in his district, we will spin rope better and stronger than that made from the best Russian hemp to rig them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Has the navy-yard at Memphis all the materials and elements prepared to build one of the six steamers required by the Government?

Mr. STANTON. I do not say that we have all the machinery and establishments there for building vessels, because the appropriations have been stopped, and these fixtures have not been completed. We have had a portion of the appropriations necessary.

Mr. HUNT. The gentleman from Tennessee has made very brave promises, and has poured forth a feeling lamentation over his departed child.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. HUNT. I move to increase the appropriation $10,000. Mr. Chairman, the honorable gentleman from Tennessee is a sensible man, and usually urges strong reasons for his propositions. He has urged no strong reason for his proposition in the present instance. He has not combated the reasons which I have presented to the committee. The situation of the two places is so different, and they stand in such different relations to commerce and our navy, that it was not possible for him to find such reasons for his proposition as have been urged in support of a naval depot near New Orleans.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I wish to say a word simply in reply to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Louisiana. He said, when up before, that the supplies for the navy-yard at Pensacola came originally from New Orleans. Well, in reply, I have to say that they came originally from Memphis. In other words, they have to pass Memphis before they go to New Orleans, or Pensacola. We are in the midst of all the supplies necessary for the use of a navy, and for the building of a navy. We are nearer the source of those supplies than New Orleans. But I do not desire to make any competition with New Orleans. I have voted on former occasions for a depot there. I am by no means hostile to such an establishment. If the establishment at Memphis is to be abolished, I shall still maintain the interest of the Mississippi valley; because I conceive every portion of it to be interested from the sources of the river, and those of its tributaries to its mouth in a naval depot at New Orleans.

Mr. HUNT, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I move an increase of the appropriation $25,000, for the purpose of saying a few words. And first, I desire to call the attention of members to the fact that the gentleman who, this evening, represents the Committee of Ways and Means, speaks on this subject his own opinions merely, and not those of the committee. That committee have not had this amendment under consideration, and of course have expressed themselves in no way upon the subject. It is not unnatural that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] should advocate a naval depot higher up the river than New Orleans. The establishment at Memphis is attributable to his exertions. He represents that district, and he is now laudably striving, with something of the partiality of a parent, for the continued existence of what he and we have just been given to understand is about to be abolished.

As to the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, [Mr. BOGOCCK], I have to say that the gentleman from Missouri has no right to use them against the New Orleans naval depot. When asked if we had not already too many naval depots, he simply stated that it was the impression of his committee that we had too many. But, sir, although the question was addressed to him with direct reference to the proposed depot at New Orleans, I did not understand that he expressed himself in opposition to its establishment. So far from it, I infer just the contrary from his remarks, for, although the invitation to do so was direct, he did not say that the public interest did not require one at that place.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] must consent to be alone in his opposition to this amendment. He does not speak for his committee, and the chairman of the Naval Committee has not confirmed his views. Now, sir, how does the matter stand? It seems that the United States have eight naval depots—one at Kittery, Maine, one at Boston, one at New York, one at Philadelphia, one at Washington, and one at Norfolk—six on the eastern Atlantic coast. It is very reasonable to infer, from the locality of these, and their very great contiguity, that we have too many on the north Atlantic coast; but it by no means follows that we have too many on the southern coast. At the South we have but two—one at Pensacola, and the other, in the interior, at Memphis, Tennessee, and that on the point, we are told, of being abolished.

Now, what are the peculiar wants of New Orleans in this respect? We have been told, and very happily, by my colleague, [Mr. HUNT], that the time has passed when vessels of war were entirely dependent on the wind and waves. The vessels now requiring the protection of our naval depots are driven by steam. Their wants are of the kind that enter into the construction of steam vessels upon our western waters; and for the repairs of such, we have everything in New Orleans equal to any other city of the Union. Coal is floated down the Mississippi river in great quantities, and can be had as cheap, or cheaper, there, than in any other city of the Union, except Philadelphia. Iron, in the same way, is brought to our door, and worked up by our foundries into the best of machinery. Hemp from all the West fills our market. Lumber—the best in the world—lines our coast, and is, at this very time, furnishing the material for the Navy of France. These, sir, are considerations that should not be disregarded in the establishment of a naval depot.

But, in addition to the coal, iron, hemp, and lumber, that we can provide so cheap, and of such quality, it should not be forgotten that the city of New Orleans is crowded for eight months of the year with the best mechanics of the North, and with sailors from all parts of the world. Thus to the materiel New Orleans can also add the personnel of your Navy. Aside, however, from all this, when you look to the immense commerce of the West that passes out of the Mississippi river into the Gulf; to those great movements of trade that are now directing the wealth of the world through the Gulf of Mexico, and across the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific, it is astonishing that gentlemen should hesitate about the establishment of a little naval depot to repair the vessels of war that may be called to its protection. What, sir, is the pitiful sum of $100,000, to enable you to repair Government vessels that are sent there every month in the year, compared with what might be the loss upon that coast from the want of repair to a single vessel? When Captain Hollins lately announced to the Secretary of the Navy the destruction of Greytown, where did he go to repair his vessel? To Boston, nearly two thousand miles off. When gentlemen reflect upon this fact, and remember the large amount of commerce at this time exposed in the Gulf of Mexico, I do trust that they will give to this appropriation a cordial support. I assure them this amendment of the Senate has not been proposed merely for home effect. It was urged by our former as well as our present Senators, and it is designed to be used for a great and practical good—the security and protection of the vast and valuable commerce of all sections of the country.

In conclusion, I would add that no portion of it is to be applied to the purchase of ground. When, several years since, an appropriation was made for building a custom-house in New Orleans, that city presented the Government the ground upon which to erect it. If it was necessary, New Orleans would be as liberal again; but the Government already owns the ground for a naval depot, and this appropriation is simply asked to improve it to such a degree as to make it useful. I repeat, then, the establishment of a naval depot at New Orleans is called for by the interests of the commerce of all portions of our country, and by the exposed and destitute position of our whole southern coast. It is commended at this time by your abolition of the one at Memphis, and the economy that dictates a wise enjoyment of what the Government already possesses. Its locality and its commerce, the abundant supply furnished in its market of everything that is required for the repair of vessels, and the recruiting the personnel of your Navy, give New Orleans claims upon your consideration that should not be disregarded.

Mr. PHELPS. I oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana. And I have this to say in reference to it: I have stated heretofore that the Committee of Ways and Means are opposed to an increase in the number of navy-yards. It has been the unanimous opinion of that committee that we have already to many such establishments. So far as the city of New Orleans is adapted for the location of a navy-yard, I only ask the committee what Government would send a vessel there when yellow fever is prevailing in it? Tell me if you would send a vessel of your Navy there to be discharged? Why was Commander Hollins ordered the other day to bring his ship to Boston? He was ordered to a northern port that the mariners on board his vessel might recruit their energies after the exposure and heat which they had to endure in the Gulf of Mexico. But I will not discuss the subject any further, and hope a vote will now be taken on it.

Mr. HUNT. I ask leave to add one word only. The gentleman talks about the danger of visiting New Orleans during the continuance of an epidemic there. Sir, I tell you that the personnel of one of our ships can be at any time supplied there. How many seamen from the North, and how many engaged in foreign commerce, can always be procured there? And I should like to know from that gentleman if he would have no naval depot at all on the southern coast? Where, on the southern coast, is there a place free from epidemic? But if you fix the naval depot at New Orleans, where the personnel can be had, you will never want men to man your ships.

The question was taken on the Senate amendment; and it was non-concurred in.

Tenth amendment:

Page ten, after line four, insert as follows:

That the law approved March 3, 1843, directing advertisements for materials for the Navy be, and is hereby, so far modified as to require the classes only of materials to be stated in the advertisements, and bidders to be referred to the several Navy agents and chiefs of bureaus, who will furnish them with printed schedules, giving a full description of each and every article, with dates of delivery, &c.

Mr. PHELPS. That amendment is in compliance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. I move that it be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eleventh amendment:

Page ten, at the end of line fourteen, insert as follows:

That the non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the United States marine corps be entitled to, and receive the same pay and bounty for reenlisting as now is, or hereafter may be, allowed to non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the infantry of the Army.

Mr. PHELPS. This amendment is necessary. It merely proposes to place the marines on the same footing with the infantry. It will be recollected that we passed a bill the other day providing for the increase of pay of the rank and file of the Army, and it is but right to give the same to the marines.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twelfth amendment:

At the end of the bill add the following section:
Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions contained in the act of the 22d April, 1854, adding a percentage to the pay of the clerks employed at the navy-yard of Washington city, be construed so as to include the clerks and messenger in the office of the navy agent at said yard, and the messenger in the commandant's office.

Mr. PHELPS. This amendment only proposes to give the same twenty per cent. that was given to the clerks of the navy-yard, to the clerks in the office of the navy agent and naval store-keeper. It is but right that they should have it.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirteenth amendment:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the existing law limiting the number of officers of the Navy of the United States be so far modified as to entitle the officers belonging to the navy of Texas at the time of annexation, to the pay of the officers of the Navy of the United States on leave of absence up to the present time: Provided, The number of such officers shall not exceed eight.

Mr. PHELPS. I offer a pro forma amendment to the amendment, for the purpose of enabling me to explain it. This is a proposition to provide that those officers who were in the Texas navy at the time of the annexation of Texas to the United States, shall be paid the leave of absence pay from the time of annexation up to this present time. It will be remembered by the members of this House, that, for several years past attempts have been made in both Houses of Congress to incorporate the officers of the Texas Navy into the Navy of the United States. It has been contended by the friends of that measure that Texas, upon her admission into the Union, was entitled to claim that the officers of her navy should be incorporated into the Navy of the United States. Such a proposition as this, I hope, will not receive the sanction of this committee.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I think the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senate is the easiest and best way of disposing of this long contested subject. It is well known to most of the members of this House, that these officers have claimed, and the Legislature of Texas have repeatedly claimed it for them, that they have a right to be admitted into the Navy of the United States by the very terms of annexation itself. Many gentlemen upon the floor of both Houses of Congress believe that there is great justice in the claim of these officers. Certainly the Navy of Texas was badly treated, and though there has been a successful opposition to their claim up to the present time, on account of the indisposition to increase our Navy, inasmuch as it was sufficient for all purposes—the officers being more numerous than the number of vessels in the service required—I say what better disposition can be made of this subject, than to give to these gentlemen whose State has repeatedly declared that they have been ill-treated, this extra pay, and thus settle the matter?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether he supposes, if this amendment is adopted, and the extra pay given, it will put an end to the whole question? Or whether it will not prove a mere entering wedge.

Mr. STANTON. I suppose it will put the question at rest. But I am willing to adopt an amendment which shall prevent any such state of things as that suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PHELPS then, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

[The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate informing the House that they had passed a bill of the House "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1855," with sundry amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.]

The committee then resumed its session.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by adding these words:

Provided, That the officers in the Texas navy shall take the same rank that they occupied in their own navy.

Mr. HENN. I rise to a question of order. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, if adopted, would have the effect, as I understand it, to incorporate those officers into the Navy of the United States. The amendment of the Senate proposed only to pay them. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is clearly out of order.

Mr. McMULLIN. I will then modify my amendment so that these officers shall receive the same pay as if they had been incorporated into the American Navy.

Mr. HENN. That is what the amendment of the Senate proposes to pay them.

Mr. McMULLIN. Well, sir, the amendment is in order. Mr. Chairman, I look upon this as a very grave question. These Texan officers have never been in the service of the United States. The rank which they held in the Texan Navy does not correspond with nominally the same rank in the American Navy. Their regulations for promotion were different from ours. Now, is it right that you should pay these officers of the Texan Navy the same that you would have done if they had borne arms in the American Navy, and had held the same rank which they hold in the Texan Navy? Is it right that you should make this distinction in favor of Texan officers.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. Did Texas have a navy, and if so, how many men were in it?

Mr. McMULLIN. Texas did have a navy, but precisely what was the extent of that navy, I am not at this time prepared to state. I understand that a portion of her navy was purchased by the United States.

A MEMBER. But not paid for.

Mr. McMULLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment ought to be incorporated into the bill. And if it is, if you are to pay these officers, you certainly ought not to pay them at a higher rate than you pay your own naval officers.

Mr. ORR. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia. I think there is a good deal more in this amendment than appears upon the surface. The amendment of the Senate, in my opinion, if comprehended rightly, proposes to pay these officers leave of absence pay from the annexation of Texas down to the present time. And not only that, but it actually provides for incorporating them into the Navy of the United States.

Mr. McDUGALL. Oh, no, certainly not.

Mr. ORR. Well, I confess that, with what little examination I have been able to give it, I cannot see what other construction can be put upon it. What is the number provided for?

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The number is eight. That is the limitation provided in the amendment; and they are, I believe, the only ones surviving.

Mr. ORR. Now, sir, I agree very much with the suggestions thrown out by the gentleman from Virginia. There were but few officers of the Texan Navy, but they had high rank and position. If they become part of the Navy of the United States, those who have been in our service for twenty years, will be preceded by their juniors.

Mr. HENN. If these men have not been in the service of the United States, why should we pay them?

Mr. ORR. They have not at all been employed in the service of the United States. I do not see any obligation on us to pay them. I think the adoption of this amendment is an incorporation of that Navy into our Navy.

Mr. SKELTON. Why change the number of officers of our Navy if it be not the intention to incorporate these officers of the Texan Navy into it?

Mr. McMULLIN, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I do not rise to make a speech, but simply to remark that these gentlemen have not been in the service of the United States. The reason why they have not been in the service of the United States, and have done nothing is, that although the United States is bound by the articles of annexation, to include them in our service, it has refused to do so. It is not the fault of these gentlemen that they have been compelled to linger here at their own expense, during a long period of years, asserting their rights. The question now comes up, will the Government refuse them this slight justice? Will the Government give them the pay of officers on leave? I say to the committee, and it is well known to many gentleman, that we have a great many naval officers who have been on leave as long as these gentlemen, and they have been receiving their pay.

Mr. INGERSOLL. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. And that is debatable. But I have said all that I desired to say.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to amend by striking out "eight" and inserting "one."

Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time, nor will it, perhaps, be the last, that the Senate have sent us, in the expiring hours of the session, matter for our consideration that might well employ us for a month at least; yet all these things are we to be compelled to consider under the operation of the five-minute rule. I ask whether it is proper, whether it is becoming, that a question of so much importance should be determined within a few hours of the close of the session, and after the termination of all debate? My friend and colleague says that these gentlemen of the Texas navy have been kept out, notwithstanding the terms of the articles of annexation by which they were to be admitted into the Navy of the United States. Where does he find any such clause in the treaty with Texas? By what authority does he say that we ever stipulated with the Republic of Texas that her naval officers should be admitted into the Navy of the United States? Her ships and all her public property were transferred to the United States; but does any man say that the officers of the navy were transferable? Does any man say that it was competent for the Republic of Texas, or for the United States, to stipulate for the services of the officers, or the men of the Texas navy? If the officers are to be incorporated into the United States Navy, why not the men? Who ever heard before that the term navy did not apply to mariners as well as officers?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Then the gentleman does not hold that the Texan navy was to be incorporated into the Navy of the United States?

Mr. MILLSON. I am protesting against the idea. The word "navy" does not apply to officers alone. Naval officers no not constitute the whole of a navy. The boatswains, gunners, and sailors are all included. Are we to pay the wages of seamen and the petty officers of the Texan navy, from the time of the annexation of Texas up to this time? I protest against this idea of paying men for anything but services rendered.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The gentleman asks whether the Government of the United States would be bound to pay the wages of these men. Suppose a certain number of men of the Texan navy had made a contract with the United States, and had enlisted for three years, could they not claim the benefit of their contract? I ask him whether, upon any principle of right, the Government of the United States could step in and abolish that contract?

Mr. MILLSON. Who ever heard before that a nation assumed the debts of another nation because they made a treaty with it? I protest against this notion that we are to be responsible for the salaries of these men, who have rendered us no service. Pay is an equivalent for services, not for rank. These men have never yet been incorporated into the American Navy. As my friend from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] suggested, there is something exceedingly strange and anomalous in the phraseology of this amendment. It seems to me that it admits the fact that these officers have always remained officers of the American Navy; and if so, are we not liable to pay the salaries of deceased officers, and the wages of deceased and surviving seamen? As is assumed in this amendment, we are as much responsible and as much liable to pay the wages of petty officers and mariners as to pay the salaries of the officers higher in rank.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAVEN. I think that perhaps we had better come to a speedy vote upon this matter. I do not understand precisely the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON], but I wish to say to the committee, if we get aloft with this Texan navy, we shall hardly touch bottom. [Laughter.] It seems to me that, at this late period of the session, we had better come to a vote upon this question, and settle this thing, one way or another. I want to know, when, one of these days, we annex the Sandwich Islands, whether King Ka-me-ha-ma-ha is to be incorporated among the executive officers of this Government by operation of law? [Laughter.] I want to know whether, when Cuba comes into our possession, her custom-house officers, who have been making so much trouble there, are to be incorporated among the executive officers of the Government? I rather think that we had better take a little time in the consideration of this subject, and vote this proposition down.

NEW SERIES.....No. 134.

Mr. MILLSON, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The question was then taken on the Senate's amendment; and it was non-concurred in.

Fourteenth amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, within thirty days after the passage hereof, shall assemble a naval board, to consist of three captains, two commanders, and two lieutenants, which board shall investigate the conduct, character, and standing of all the officers of the grades of captains, commanders, lieutenants, passed midshipmen, and masters in the line of promotion, and shall ascertain and report to the Secretary of the Navy, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, every officer of said grades that said board shall deem incompetent or disqualified to discharge promptly his whole duty ashore or afloat; and in every case the said board shall report, in two separate classes, such officers as the interests of the service require should be dismissed, and such as should be placed out of the line of promotion, with its reasons for the same: Provided, That, upon said board, officers shall not investigate, vote, or report upon officers of a senior grade. Upon the return of the reports of the board to the Secretary of the Navy, he shall, so far as the President shall approve the same, cause those officers who may be reported for dismissal, to be dismissed the service, with six months' sea service pay; and those who may be reported for withdrawal from the line of promotion, to be so withdrawn, upon pay which shall not be more than three fifths, nor less than one fifth their sea service pay respectively, to be determined and approved by the President: Provided, That passed midshipmen and masters in the line of promotion, so reported in the second class, shall be dropped from the service, and shall thereupon receive one year's sea service pay. The said board shall be convened and regulated as the Secretary may direct; and he shall ascertain, in such manner as he may deem just and expedient, the services, standing, and character of the officers of the grades aforesaid, and submit the same to the board for its better information: Provided, That the promotions which may be made in consequence of such dismissals and withdrawals, shall reduce the grade of commanders to seventy, which shall hereafter be the number of said grade.

Mr. PHELPS took the floor.

Mr. SKELTON. I wonder that these gentlemen occupy the floor all the time. Have the naval committee nothing to say about naval affairs?

Mr. PHELPS. I willingly yield the floor.

Mr. SKELTON. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that this provision incorporated in this bill is a part of a bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and now in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to be acted upon. I think that that portion of the bill embraced in this proposition is too important to be acted upon at so short a notice, and with so little discussion. I hope, therefore, it will be stricken out; because, when that discussion comes before the House, I shall desire at least an hour to discuss the proposition in favor of this retired list. Therefore, for the purpose of facilitating business, I simply desire, as one of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to have this amendment stricken out, and left to the next session, when we act upon the bill which embraces that proposition.

Mr. BOCK. I hope the committee will indulge me for a moment to say something about this amendment. Inasmuch as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SKELTON] has said that this is a part of a bill reported here by the Committee on Naval Affairs, I desire to say a word or two about it. If my friend will examine it particularly, he will find that this amendment is not a part of the bill presented here by that committee. I consider this a very different thing from the provisions of the bill of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SKELTON. The gentleman will allow me to say that it embraces the principles contained in part of the bill.

Mr. BOCK. It may embrace the principles of part of the bill, but the bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs has in it other important, almost vital, principles, connecting themselves with this, without which this thing of a retired list will not be efficient, and is not desirable. If, however, Mr. Chairman, I were perfectly satisfied that the bill to which the gentleman has referred would come up at the next session, meet with a fair and deliberate discussion, and be acted on by the House in good faith, I would go with him for voting down this proposition now.

Mr. PHELPS. I will lend my aid to getting the bill alluded to discussed next session.

Mr. BOCK. But it is not now with me a question of what is right; it is a question of what we can get.

This thing is not satisfactory to me. It is crude; it is imperfect, and it has very many objections. It is but a temporary expedient at best. But for years past, those who have had the Navy in charge have sued here at the door of this House for the admission of reforms, and it has never been open. They have spent weeks and months preparing bills, and have clamored for admission.

Mr. Chairman. I desire to say here that this principle of a retired list—because I believe a great prejudice exists against it—is one of economy, as well as reform. Men now in the Navy are practically retired. I find men in the Navy upon the captains list, the commanders list, and even upon the lieutenants list, retired for life, because they are incompetent to render services. And the simple question about the retired list is, shall those men, retired in fact, and incompetent for service, stand there upon the list, receiving their regular leave of absence pay, and stand in the way of younger and more efficient men, who have the interest of the Navy at heart, and the honor of their country in their affections?

The gentleman over the way [Mr. SKELTON] talked the other day about civil pensions. But why talk about civil pensions? There is no danger of a system of civil pensions being established in this country; but he talks about it, because he is a man sagacious enough to know that if this thing is to be attacked at all, it must be attacked in the flank, and not in front; that it must be attacked by prejudice and not by reason. Civil pensions are odious. The gentleman is desirous of making the House believe that this is a system of civil pensions; but he must have studied a different vocabulary, and had different sources of information from any thing I have had access to, if he can show to me, that paying a man upon the retired list of the Navy, is a civil pension.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. I hope the two amendments will be considered together. I have this to say in relation to the matter: The very argument of the gentleman from Virginia ought to convince the committee that this is an improper time to attempt to adopt such an amendment. It is proposed that you shall appoint a board of officers, who shall examine and report those officers in the Navy of the United States who are to be dismissed from service. It is also provided that the board of officers shall report a list of such officers, above a certain grade, who, in their opinion, ought to be retired and placed out of the line of promotion. And if you retire them, you must, of necessity, retire them upon pay. You must retire them upon pay or leave. I have the impression that some other provision is made in a subsequent section for their pay when retired. Now, I am opposed to any plan introduced at this time for the reform and reorganization of the Navy of the United States. If you are to reform it, let a plan be brought before us in a separate bill, when we can have time to examine it with deliberation, and not attach it to the naval appropriation bill, sent in to us, as the Senate have done now, when the sands of the session are just about running out.

The amendment proposes a reduction in the number of commanders. It proposes a reduction of the number of captains. It proposes various changes, which are very important, and should not be hastily made. I hope, therefore, that the committee will not concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SKELTON. I will not occupy the attention of the committee for more than two or three minutes.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the gentleman will not, for if this debate lasts much longer, two thirds of the House will be asleep. [Laughter.]

Mr. SKELTON. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, and only desire to say in reply to my colleague upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, that I am as anxious as he is to effect a reorganization of the Navy of the United States. I am as anxious as the chairman of our committee, or any other member of it, to get rid of all the lumber that now disgraces and encumbers the service. But, sir, I am not in favor of concurring with the Senate in the plan which they have embraced in this bill. I will only say in conclusion, that I hope the whole subject will be postponed until the next session, and then I will most heartily cooperate with the chairman of the Naval Committee in getting this matter before the House, and in accomplishing a thorough reorganization of the Navy.

Mr. PHELPS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CUMMING. I move to increase the number of commanders to eighty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair gives notice that he will confine gentlemen in their remarks strictly to an explanation of their amendments.

Mr. CUMMING. I think that at this time of the world, what we have heard to-night in reference to the Navy is just about as uncalled for and as unwarranted and unexpected an accusation brought against the Navy of the United States as anything could have been. Sir, I consider the American Navy the—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the explanation of his amendment.

Mr. CUMMING. Sir, I will do so. I was proceeding to say that I considered this a very improper time to come forward and accuse the personnel of the Navy of being lumber.

Mr. SKELTON. I desire to say that I am the last man upon this floor to make charges against the Navy; but I think the present organization is a very bad one.

Mr. CUMMING. I sat and listened, when I first came into this Hall, to the highest eulogiums of a gallant naval officer for what he had recently done to sustain the dignity of his country. He was lauded, and justly so. Now, if a change is desired in the present condition of the officers, let there be an increase; do not decrease their number. But, for God's sake, after all we have heard of the glory of the Navy, and the gallant and commendable conduct of Commander Ingraham, do not talk of the Navy as though it were some old lumber or trash, stored in a garret, and to be tossed out on the first opportunity. I now withdraw my amendment.

The question was taken; and the Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifteenth amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the grounds and appurtenances thereunto belonging, known as the Memphis navy-yard, in Shelby county, Tennessee, be, and the same is hereby, ceded to the mayor and aldermen of the city of Memphis, for the use and benefit of said city; and that the Secretary of the Navy order the commandant of said navy-yard, at Memphis, to surrender to the mayor of Memphis said property: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury, in settling the account of the late navy agent at Memphis, shall not deduct the sum of $2,964 59 already received by him and passed to his credit on the books of the Treasury Department, from his salary as acting purser, provided for by an act making appropriations for the naval service of the country for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move to add the word "machinery" after the word "appurtenances," to say a few words on the amendment. Mr. Chairman, it is known that the Government has, at that establishment, a large amount of valuable machinery for the purpose of spinning rope. It is perfectly useless there unless the spinning of rope for the Navy is continued. Now, sir, since it has been asserted all over the House that the navy-yard at Memphis ought to be abolished, since the small appropriation for it put into this bill, at the suggestion of the Committee of Ways and Means, has been stricken out, and since a much larger additional sum has been appropriated for the benefit of a navy-yard at San Francisco—since such is the condition of things—the proposition of the Senate to cede this property back to the city of Memphis is a very proper one. If the establishment is to be treated as it has been to-night, and on former occasions, I do not know that the Government could do better than what is proposed by the amendment. The site of the navy-yard was originally given to the Government by the city of Memphis, with the exception of a few lots purchased from private individuals at a cost of $25,000. The site was given to the Government on the condition that this establishment was to be put there. Now, to withdraw it is, to some extent, in bad faith to the city of Memphis; and if the establishment is to be abolished, the value of the property will be greatly diminished. The buildings are of little use in their present situation, except for the purposes for which they were designed. You have there a large and fine rope-walk for the spinning of rope. You have shops, and some other appurtenances appropriate for a building yard.

When the first proposition was, some time ago, before the Senate, the friends of the Memphis navy-yard proposed to those gentlemen, since they were disposed to strike it down, that if they would adopt this proposition, they would consent to let it go. It was upon that condition, as I understand, that the original proposition was adopted in the Senate; and I hope that, since the committee has done what it has, it will also concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to submit an amendment.

Mr. STANTON. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. PHELPS. I propose the following amendment in lieu of that section:

And be it enacted, That the navy-yard at Memphis is hereby abolished.

That is a proposition to abolish the navy-yard at Memphis. The amendment of the Senate contains the condition that the property at the navy-yard at Memphis should be given to the city. I am not prepared to say, at this time, whether it would be proper and right to make a donation of the property to that city. We are not without knowledge respecting the property there; for we know that millions of dollars have been expended upon that ship-yard; and, under the circumstances, I cannot say that it is right to donate that site to the city.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I beg the gentleman to remember that a large portion of the appropriations expended there has been for machinery.

Mr. PHELPS. A portion of the money appropriated there has been expended for machinery, but still the Government has been at considerable expense in erecting buildings, and making provision for the permanent establishment of that yard. It seems to be the sense of the committee that the navy-yard should be abolished. Let us say so in so many words; and if it would be proper and right to give the site to the city of Memphis, it can be done at the next session of Congress.

With the consent of the committee, I will now withdraw the amendment which I submitted, and let the committee vote on concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken on the Senate amendment; and it was non-concurred in.

Sixteenth amendment:

And be it further enacted, That naval pursers shall hereafter be styled paymasters; and all laws, rules, and regulations applying to pursers shall apply to them as paymasters: Provided, That this change of name shall not be held to affect their rank, pay, or duties.

Mr. PHELPS. I do not see why we should change the name from purser to paymaster.

Mr. RIDDLE. The change is recommended because it is in conformity with the custom of every other service.

Mr. WALSH. What have we to do with other services?

Several MEMBERS. That is the very reason the change should not be made.

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventeenth amendment:

And be it further enacted, That two "General Orders" of the Secretary of the Navy, dated August 31, 1846, and May 27, 1847, upon relative rank, shall have the force and effect of law.

Mr. PHELPS. There is but one word of explanation requisite in relation to this matter. There were two orders issued by the Secretary of the Navy as to relative rank in the Navy, to which it is desirable to give the force of law. It is all right; let us adopt the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighteenth amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the pay of the boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sail-makers of the Navy, shall be as follows:

On leave, or waiting orders, per annum, $600; shore duty, $700; sea service, $900. An addition of two per centum on the foregoing rates for every year's sea service, and an addition upon sea pay of ten per centum when serving in ships with four hundred men, and twenty per centum when serving in ships with nine hundred men.

Mr. SKELTON. I will simply say, as I said before, that this is a proposition which the Committee on Naval Affairs have recommended in the bill which they prepared.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the amendments to the House. The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly amendments of the Senate to the bill making provision for the support of the Navy of the United States; and that the committee had directed him to report their concurrence in some, and their non-concurrence in others, of said amendments.

Mr. PHELPS moved the previous question; which was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. ORR. I suggest that we vote on all the amendments, except that for the Memphis navy-yard, in gross.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I consent to that. Let us take the vote on the Memphis navy-yard separately; and I hope the House will concur in that amendment.

The question was taken; and the report of the committee on all the amendments, with the exception of that referred to, was adopted.

Mr. MILLSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The fifteenth amendment was then read.

Mr. STANTON. I ask for a division of the House upon that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment of the Senate.

The question was taken; and there were, upon a division—ayes seventy; noes not counted.

Mr. ROBBINS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BLISS and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes ninety; noes not counted.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HIBBARD. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the reciprocity treaty bill was referred.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the naval appropriation bill, and ask for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has forgotten, perhaps, that the Senate may recede from its amendments. The usual course is to send the bill back to the Senate, and for them to ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. PHELPS. I am very well satisfied, in my own mind, that the Senate will not recede.

The House may, in the mean time, adjourn, and there will be no time for a committee to act.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the motion, if the gentleman desires it.

The motion was agreed to; and

The SPEAKER thereupon appointed Messrs. PHELPS, BOCCOCK, and PARKER as managers upon the part of the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I understand that I have been appointed as one of the committee of conference upon the river and harbor bill. I ask to be excused from serving upon that committee.

Mr. C. was excused; and

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. ORR in his place.

Mr. HIBBARD. I now insist upon my motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill making provision for carrying into effect the reciprocity treaty with Great Britain was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. HENN. Does not the bill make an appropriation?

Mr. HIBBARD. It does not.

Mr. CROCKER. I ask the consent of the House to have a bill taken from the Speaker's table. It is a Senate bill, and provides merely for the change of a vessel's name.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. HIBBARD. At the suggestion of many of the friends of the reciprocity bill, I shall suspend what action I intended to propose on it, that the Army bill may be taken up.

Mr. HUNT. I would suggest that the gentleman from New York withdraw his objection to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw it.

Senate bill to change the name of the American-built brig Glamorgan to that of Wizard, was then taken up from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and then read in extenso.

It was ordered to be read a third time; and was read a third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, the Senate amendments to the Army bill were taken up, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the amendments of the Senate to the Army appropriation bill.

First amendment:

Strike out "$28,497," and insert in lieu thereof "$285,621 25," so that the paragraph will read:

For subsistence in kind, $1,285,621 25.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is made necessary because of the increased estimate for rations. Rations were heretofore rated at twenty cents; they are now rated at twenty-five cents.

There is no recommendation made for this appropriation, and I do not think that it ought to pass. The Committee of Ways and Means rejected it in the early part of the session.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

Page seven, after line three, insert:

For an iron steamer, to be used in the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes, including Lake Superior, under the direction of the War Department, $50,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It is proper to state that these amendments have just been returned from the Senate. The Committee of Ways and Means have had no meeting in regard to them, and are, therefore, unable to state whether it is proper to concur or non-concur in them. Members of the House are just in the same situation as members of the committee, and are able to form the same judgment with regard to them. It perhaps would be the safest plan to recommend a non-concurrence in the amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. HAVEN. It is true, of course, as my friend from Kentucky suggests, that these amendments have not been acted upon in the Committee of Ways and Means. In reference to this particular amendment now before the House, it so happens that it relates to a matter which has fallen under my own observation. We have made an appropriation for the last dozen years of $50,000 a year for a survey of the northern and northwestern lakes, including Lake Superior, which has done for the lakes what the Coast Survey has done for the Atlantic coast. They have during all that time used a little steamer which Captain Macomb told me had got so rotten that they could use it no longer; and he told me that it was absolutely necessary that this vessel should be had. It is a very small affair.

With the construction of the canal around the Sault Saint Marie, by which the immense commerce of the interior is to be let down upon the lower lakes, it is of the greatest importance that these surveys upon Lake Superior should be carried on without delay. Lake Superior is a great, unknown inland sea, and capable of bearing upon its waters an immense commerce. It is, therefore, highly necessary that commercial men should know something of its condition; and this cannot be done until a thorough and efficient survey is made, under the direction of competent and practical men. I hope that the committee will concur in the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. In answer to the gentleman, I would say this, that already and anterior to this amendment of the Senate, you find in this bill that the first item is for continuing the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes, including Lake Superior, $50,000. If this amendment is adopted, it is a provision to what is already contained in the bill.

Mr. NOBLE. I will state to the committee that I have some information in regard to this particular item. These surveys upon the lakes are carried on with very great success, and perhaps there is nothing in which the Northwest feel a deeper interest than in the prosecution of them. Captain Macomb says that it is absolutely necessary that this vessel should be built to carry on successfully those surveys. The appropriation for this purpose is also recommended by Professor Bache, who is at the head of the Coast Survey department. I hope that the committee will concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment:

Page eight, after line twelve, insert as follows:

For the purchase of a site and construction of an arsenal at Benicia, California, $93,485.

Mr. McDUGALL. I ask the gentlemen representing the Committee of Ways and Means what recommendation has been made in reference to this matter by the Department? I ask this for information. There is no arsenal in the State of California at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It appears from the estimate sent us from the Department, that the amount asked for to construct an arsenal at Benicia, California, is $93,485. That is the amount embraced in the amendment of the Senate. I would remark, that the Committee of Ways and Means have had nothing to do with this estimate, and would refer my friend from California to the report made on the subject.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will state this fact in connection with it. The matter was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, because the appropriation asked for was for a new work. And being so—being for the purchase of a site and erection of an arsenal—it does not go to the Committee of Ways and Means, but it does go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not know in what form it has ever been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I recollect this in connection with it: I had a communication addressed to the Committee on Military Affairs, complaining, in very strong and emphatic language, that this item was not embraced in the bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means; and it was stated that there was no arsenal on the Pacific coast at all wherein a culvert could be constructed in safety; and that the powder now owned by the Government had to be kept in a wooden building. Complaint was made to the War Department that the Committee of Ways and Means had not embraced an appropriation for that arsenal in this bill. The Secretary of War communicated to the Committee on Military Affairs that this appropriation had been included in his estimate; and that the estimate had been disagreed to by the Committee of Ways and Means. I recollect, distinctly, the fact that it was stated that even the powder which they had at the place was kept in wooden buildings.

Mr. HOUSTON. I regret very much that the head of the Ordnance Department knows so little of his business as to suppose that an estimate of this sort should go to the Committee of Ways and Means. It never goes to that committee unless the work has been commenced. It goes to the Committee on Military Affairs; just as estimates for the erection of light-houses are sent to the Committee on Commerce, and as custom-house estimates are sent to that committee. After the erection of the work has been authorized, then the future estimates come under the control of the Committee of Ways and Means. I do not know that the estimate in question was referred particularly to the Committee on Military Affairs. I took it for granted, as a matter of course, that it was. It was not my duty to call the attention of that committee to the estimate which properly belonged to them. I know that this same question was up during the last session of Congress, and I took precisely the same course in respect to it. My opinion is, that by reference to that portion of the message of the President of the United States, which was distributed by resolution, it will be found that this subject was directly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I am not certain about that. But I am certain that it belongs to that committee; and that we have never taken cognizance of estimates for works of this sort.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I move to increase the appropriation ten dollars. I was about to make this suggestion to the gentleman from California and to the Committee of Ways and Means. I do not know that I am capable of giving advice with reference to the course it is best to pursue. The Committee of Ways and Means have not told us their opinion in relation to a great many of the appropriations placed on the bill. They are unable to give the House any information in regard to it. My proposition is this, as a committee of conference will be the inevitable result, let us disagree to all the Senate amendments to the bill, and let it go to the committee of conference at once, and they will report to the House something to act upon.

Mr. McDUGALL. I dislike to say anything more about California appropriations, as I know there is a feeling in the House that California has been talking enough, and getting appropriations enough. But it must be evident that there is a propriety in this particular appropriation. There is no arsenal upon our coast—a coast of sixteen or eighteen hundred miles in extent. There is no arsenal for the preservation of the arms of the Federal Government; and it is about time there should be one. The head of the War Department has furnished the estimate, but by some accident it has not been acted upon by the House. The estimate has been sent to the Senate, and the Senate have incorporated a provision in reference to it in the bill. It strikes me that it is time that we should have some means of preserving the United States stores for war purposes upon the Pacific coast. It seems to me to be exceedingly necessary, though I do not wish to urge its adoption to an improper extent.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

For the sword ordered to be presented to Brevet Major General John E. Wool, by the joint resolution, approved January 24, 1854, $1,500.

Mr. MATTESON. Will it be in order to move to disagree to all of the Senate amendments? It seems to me that by doing so we would save a great deal of time.

Mr. PHELPS. Oh, let us take the question upon them.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Why would it not be well to consent to disagree to the whole of them? There is nobody here to explain them.

Mr. PHELPS. One word. I have but a moment since examined several of these amendments at the Clerk's desk. I have had no opportunity of examining them thoroughly. Many of the matters introduced into the amendments, are entirely new; and if they were not acted upon by the House, the committee of conference would be placed in a delicate position, and it would involve the legislation in regard to all of them by a committee of six members. That is the reason why I desire the action of the House upon them.

The question was then taken upon the fourth amendment of the Senate; and it was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

For payment of claims adjudicated by the board of Army officers appointed by the Secretary of War, under the sixth section of the act of August 31, 1852, $129,885 23.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

For the purchase of the best breach-loading rifles, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, for the use of the United States Army, $90,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War, after a fair, practical test thereof, shall deem the purchase advisable and proper.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire here to read the resolution adopted on the 6th of January.

Mr. H. then read the resolution adopted near the commencement of the session, for referring the President's message to the appropriate standing committees, from which it appeared that the estimate in relation to the arsenal on the Pacific coast was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to say a single word in reference to the sixth amendment of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. You are not in favor of these breach-loading rifles, are you?

Mr. PHELPS. I am not in favor of striking out this appropriation proposed in the amendment of the Senate. The amendment provides for placing $90,000 at the disposal of the Secretary of War, to enable him to purchase a supply of breach-loading rifles, if, upon examination, they should be found superior to the rifles now in use in the service. Sir, do you desire to make your Army efficient, place good and proper arms in their hands. Let us keep up with the latest improvements that are made. Who does not know that the Government refused, year after year, to substitute the percussion locks for the flint locks then in use? Sir, let us not delay the adoption of improvements in arms whenever they are made. I hope this amendment, placing these $90,000 at the disposal of the Secretary of War, will be adopted.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

That the proper accounting officers be, and they are hereby, directed, in the settlement of the accounts of Captain Joseph L. Folsom, assistant quartermaster of the United States Army, to receive parol testimony of the disbursements made by him as such assistant quartermaster, in lieu of vouchers for such disbursements, which were destroyed by fire in the city of San Francisco, on the 4th of May, A. D., 1851, and that upon the testimony so taken, if satisfactory to the Department, the accounts of said assistant quartermaster shall be audited and settled according to the principles of equity and justice: Provided, The sum allowed shall not exceed the balance now due from said Folsom to the Treasury.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. At the suggestion of a number of gentlemen around me, and at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Finance in the Senate, as the Senate is about taking a recess, I propose that, by common consent, we now concur with the Senate in the remaining amendments, and allow a committee of conference to be appointed. It is important that a committee should be appointed before either body take a recess, and I would also suggest that perhaps a committee of conference may be able to furnish explanations of these amendments which we cannot now have, so that the House may be able to act more understandingly upon the subject than if we were to go through with them now in committee.

Mr. McDUGALL. I object to that course just now. The amendment which has just been read is one which ought to be adopted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But while we are discussing it, the Senate will take a recess, and we shall lose the committee of conference.

Mr. McDUGALL. I will not detain the committee. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

It was read by the Clerk.

The question was then taken; and the seventh amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move a non-concurrence in the remaining amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the amendments of the Senate to the Army appropriation bill, and had concurred in some, and non-concurred in others.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE moved that the House concur in the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I now move that a committee of conference be appointed to meet a like committee on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTRA PAY TO HOUSE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. HUNT. I have a joint resolution here to which I trust there will be no objection. It is a joint resolution to pay the employees under the resolution of August 2d.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled, That the sum appropriated by the House of Representatives, for the payment of its pages and employees, be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was then, by unanimous consent, read a first and second time by its title, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RECIPROCITY TREATY BILL.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the reciprocity bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to-day; and on that motion demand the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand tellers on ordering the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Bliss and WASHBURN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 95, noes 6; no quorum voting.

Mr. GROW. As there seems not to be a quorum present, I move that we take a recess until eight o'clock.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the vote will be taken on adjourning, or on taking a recess till eight o'clock.

[Cries of "Say nine o'clock!" and "No, let it be eight o'clock!"]

Mr. HUNT. I object to the proposition to adjourn till eight o'clock. It is not a sufficiently long recess.

[Cries of "Say nine o'clock!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is very evident that we can do business better by taking a recess. There is a way in which the majority can do it. I propose that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with a view of taking a recess immediately after. I make that motion now, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The House has divided recently, and it has been ascertained that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, by common consent, let us take a recess till nine o'clock.

[Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. HENN. I am opposed to the adjournment of the House. Let us go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take up the first bill on the Calendar; a bill in which every member from a new State is interested.

Several MEMBERS. What bill is it?

Mr. HENN. It is a bill for the relief of the purchasers and locators on swamp and overflowed lands. It is the first bill on the Calendar.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I propose that, by common consent, we take a recess till nine o'clock.

Mr. HENN. I object to taking a recess till that bill is disposed of.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the bill cannot be disposed of now; there is no quorum present.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I shall object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HENN. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana to withdraw that motion, until I submit a proposition which I think will meet the unanimous approbation of the House.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate, to the bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1855, and that the Senate insist upon their amendments to said bill, and ask a committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.]

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers and otherwise, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had passed sundry private bills of the House.]

Mr. PHELPS. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] to withdraw his motion to adjourn, in order to allow the gentleman from Alabama to submit a motion that the House insist upon its amendments to the amendments of the Senate to the mail steamer appropriation bill, and that a committee of conference be appointed?

Mr. HUNT. I will withdraw it, and renew it afterwards.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Senate have made but one amendment to the bill, and it is not necessary that it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I move that the House do now concur in the amendment, and ask a committee of conference.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There appeared to be no quorum awhile ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ascertain if there is a quorum by a count.

Mr. HENN. I desire to make a proposition, which I think will meet unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to count the House, and announced, as the result, one hundred and six members present—being less than a quorum.

Mr. PRESTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HIBBARD. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw that motion. It will leave us but two hours to finish the business of the House before the final adjournment to-morrow.

Mr. PRESTON. I cannot withdraw the motion unless I can have the unanimous consent of the House to take a recess until nine o'clock.

Mr. HENN. I move that the House take a recess until half past eight o'clock.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. BRIDGES. If the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw his motion for that purpose, I will submit a proposition to the House to take a recess until nine o'clock.

Mr. PRESTON. I will withdraw for that purpose.

Mr. HENN. When I objected before to the proposition made by the gentleman from Louisiana, I did it for the purpose of asking the House to take up and dispose of the swamp land bill. I desire now that that bill shall be taken up and disposed of, I do not care whether favorably or unfavorably; and if it is the understanding that that bill shall be taken up when the House meets again, I will not object to the proposition to take a recess.

Mr. BRIDGES. I now submit the proposition that the House take a recess until nine o'clock.

There was no objection; and

The House thereupon (at five o'clock, a. m.) took a recess until nine o'clock, a. m.

FRIDAY, August 4, 1854.

The House met, pursuant to its order, at nine o'clock.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that they had passed, without amendment, bills of this House of the following titles:

A bill to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands;

A bill to increase the pay of the rank and file of the Army, and to encourage enlistments;

A bill to extend the right of preemption over unsurveyed lands in Minnesota, and for other purposes;

A bill supplemental to an act entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California, approved March 3, 1851; A bill for the relief of J. Cash and Giles U. Ellis;

A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Rice Jones, deceased;

A bill for the relief of Ira Call, of the State of Ohio;

A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Thomas Jordan, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army; and

A bill for the relief of Jacob Parker, of Sandusky City, Ohio.

Also, that they had passed a bill of the Senate "to provide for the surrender of certain bonds of the State of Indiana, held by the United States," in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

[A message was received from the President, by the hands of SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

House bill (No. 383) for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh; and for the repeal of the act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein, approved the 29th of June, 1854.

House resolution (No. 7) directing the presentation of a medal to Commander Duncan N. Ingraham.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Just before the recess, the Senate returned the mail steamship appropriation bill, with an amendment. I move that that amendment be now taken up and non-concurred in.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up.

Mr. HOUSTON. I make the motion that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate, and that the bill be returned to the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER moved to lay the bill and amendment upon the table; and upon that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

Only thirteen gentlemen rising, the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WHEELER demanded tellers upon the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to ascertain whether there was a quorum present; and upon count, it appeared that there were but eighty members present.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was then called; and the following gentlemen failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, David J. Bailey, Ball, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bissell, Bliss, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chase, Chastain, Colquitt, Craige, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Dent, DeWitt, Dickinson, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Ellison, Farley, Franklin, Gamble, Green, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Hiester, Hill, Hillyer, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Lane, Latham, Lindley, Lyon, McCulloch, McMullin, Mace, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchie, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Singleton, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Walbridge, Walsh, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer.

A quorum having failed to answer to their names upon the first call, the names of the absentees were called over, when a quorum having appeared,

Mr. CLINGMAN moved that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I believe the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] is entitled to the floor. I suggest to my friend that the Army appropriation bill is not yet finally passed; and if he will allow me the floor, I will make a report on the result of the conference between the committees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and have the bill acted upon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to withdraw my motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask leave of the House to report the result of the conference between the committees of the two Houses on the disagreeing votes on the Army appropriation bill. [Cries of "Yes; go ahead!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Last night, or this morning rather, the House concurred in the second, fourth, sixth, and seventh amendments proposed by the Senate, and for that reason the committee of conference have taken no further notice of them.

The first amendment proposed by the Senate the Senate recede from. It is as follows:

Page two, line one, after the word "million," strike out "and $28,497," and insert in lieu thereof "$265,621 25;" so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence in kind, $1,985,621 25.

The ninth amendment proposed by the Senate the Senate also recede from. It is as follows:

For the construction of a military road from the Rio Grande, near El Paso, to the river Colorado, and for sinking wells therein, $12,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The eleventh amendment of the Senate the Senate also recede from. That amendment was the insertion of the word "properly" after the word "actually," in the following section, as adopted by the House:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into and ascertain the amount of expenses incurred, and now actually paid, by the State of California in the suppression of Indian hostilities within the said State prior to the first of January, Anno Domini 1854, and that the amount of such expenses, when so ascertained, be paid into the treasury of said State: Provided, That the sum so paid shall not exceed in amount the sum of $924,359 65; which amount is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Senate recede from the thirteenth amendment, which is as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the same allowance in respect of rations be hereafter made to the military commandant of the Schuykill arsenal, in the Quartermaster's Department, as to the commandants of the arsenals in the Ordnance Department.

The Senate recede from their fourteenth amendment, which is as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the first section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1851," approved September 28, 1850, granting extra pay to the officers and enlisted men of the Army serving in Oregon and California, be extended to the officers and men composing the garrison of the post of Fort Laramie on the Oregon route, for the same period of time as was allowed by the sixth section of the act of third of March, 1853, to the officers and men of the two companies of regiment of mounted riflemen that garrisoned Fort Laramie, and that the provisions of the same section of the same act be also extended to the officers and men composing the escort to the Mexican Boundary Commission, while they were serving as such escort.

The fifteenth amendment is in regard to a retired list for the Army. The Senate recede from that.

The nineteenth amendment of the Senate is one which proposes to increase the pay of the officers of the Army. The House had previously passed a bill increasing the pay of the rank and file, but refusing to increase the pay of the officers. The Senate recede from that amendment.

From their disagreement to the third amendment of the Senate, the committee recommend that the House recede, and that they agree thereto with an amendment. The amendment is as follows:

For purchase of a site and construction of an arsenal at Benicia, California, $93,485.

The committee of conference recommend to strike out "$93,485," and insert in lieu thereof "$33,400," and in that shape that it be concurred in.

The tenth amendment is the following:

For completing the Mendota and Big Sioux river road, in accordance with the estimates of the Secretary of War, $52,475 68, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Provisions have already been made for surveying that route, and this amendment is to make an appropriation for the payment of the expense. It was estimated by the Department that $52,475 68 would be required to complete it, and that sum was, therefore, inserted in the amendment of the Senate. But the committee of conference reduced the appropriation to $25,000, that being the amount which they believed could be properly expended during the current fiscal year.

The twelfth amendment is to insert the following section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the amount which may be found necessary to pay, under the act of 27th March, 1854, to the widows and orphans of the United States troops who perished by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco, be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. And the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to cause the balance due on the books of the Treasury on account of advance of payment of the United States Army, whose widows and children may be entitled to the benefits of the second section of the said act of the 27th March, 1854.

The committee of conference report in favor of striking out that last paragraph which provides that the additional pay which was given in advance of the sailing of the ship to those who were lost, shall be deducted out of the eight months' pay which was given to their widows and children. The law will then stand with the provision that those widows and children shall receive the same eight months' pay which is allowed to the survivors. That is the report of the committee.

The sixteenth amendment of the Senate is the following:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the act approved September 28, 1850, entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," the act approved March 22, 1852, entitled "An act to make land warrants assignable, and for other purposes," and the act approved February 23, 1853, entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," shall not be so construed as to deprive any widow of the benefits therein granted for the services of the husband, though she may have married again: Provided, That the applicant is a widow at the time of making the claim.

The committee of conference report in favor of retaining that amendment, with this proviso in lieu of the one contained in the Senate amendment:

Provided, That such party shall not receive pension during coverture.

The committee of conference propose that the House agree to the fifth amendment of the Senate, to pay the adjudicated California claims, which matter is explained as follows: By a law recently enacted it was provided, that for the pay and equipment, as mounted riflemen, finding their own horses and forage, of the volunteers serving under the command of Captain John C. Fremont, in California, during the year 1846, as appears by the muster rolls on file in the War Department, and for the subsistence and supplies consumed by said volunteers in said service, $168,000 should be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the Secretary of War was authorized and empowered to appoint three competent and disinterested officers of the Army to examine and report to Congress upon all such claims as may be presented for funds advanced and subsistence and supplies of all kinds furnished or taken for the use of said command, whilst thus engaged in the public service; and for the expenses of said board of officers the sum of $2,000 is appropriated.

I will state to the House that it appears Captain Fremont found himself in California on the breaking out of the war, under peculiar circumstances, being then at the head of an exploring expedition, and that he took his troops and certain volunteers, and engaged in the war. I need not remind this House of the services which he performed in behalf of his country. He engaged, I say, the services of certain volunteers, and came under certain obligations to them. Congress passed an act authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint three competent and disinterested officers of the Army to examine and report on all such claims as might be presented for funds advanced, and for subsistence and supplies of all kinds furnished or taken for the use of his command whilst thus engaged in the service of the country, and appropriated $168,000 for that purpose. These officers have made the examination, and have reported. This authorizes the payment, but does not authorize the appropriation of any money, because it is to be paid out of the appropriation heretofore made by Congress.

[Cries of "That's right! go on!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The committee of conference propose to agree to the eighth amendment of the Senate to carry out certain Indian treaty stipulations, and for other purposes. It is a very long amendment. I can explain it instead of having it read, if the House desires it.

[Cries of "State it; that's enough!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I can state to the House that it is in pursuance of treaties made at this session of Congress with the Kansas and Nebraska Indians, and conforms exactly with them. I must add, that there is an additional provision to this effect, appropriating some $4,000 or $5,000, Congress, in its various Indian treaty stipulations, has made reservations for the use of the Indians. The Indians have sold those reservations to the whites. A very great number of muniments of title have accumulated in this way, which are on file in the Indian department, amounting, as your committee ascertained, to bushels of papers in separate slips. In being handled and searched in the investigation, in regard to these muniments and the transfer of them, the papers are almost worn out. And the Commissioner of Indian Affairs reports that it will be necessary to employ temporarily, in addition to the regular force of his office, four clerks for the purpose of recording in a book and preserving these muniments of title.

The amendment contains an appropriation of $5,600 for that purpose. I am reminded by my colleague on the committee, [Mr. WALLEY,] of another item connected with this Indian appropriation of $2,200. I cannot now turn to it; but if the House desires it, I will have the amendments read over. The committee unanimously thought that it was right. My colleague has just found it, and I will therefore read it. I see that I was mistaken in the item.

For the payment of the expenses of the delegates of the Creek nation of Indians, now in this city, $1,099 53.

These Creek Indians were invited on here in order to make a treaty arrangement with them, which has been done by the Senate.

The Clerk then read the seventeenth amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and cause to be placed on the files of his Department, such additional muster rolls of the battalion of volunteers commanded by Lieutenant Colonel J. C. Fremont, in California, duly authenticated by the proper officers, as have not heretofore been received and filed, and to cause such corrections of the muster rolls to be made in regard to the periods of enlistment and terms of service and the omission of names of the members of said battalion, as upon satisfactory proof may deem right and proper, and as far as practicable to correspond with the pay rolls of Major P. B. Reading, paymaster of said battalion, with respect to the period of service, so that all who have served in the military service of the United States in California during the late war with Mexico, whether under command of naval or military officers, may be entitled to all the benefits of all the acts of Congress providing for the enrollment of volunteers in the Mexican war, provided that no payment shall be made in consequence of this section beyond the sum heretofore appropriated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will state to the House, that by virtue of an act heretofore passed by Congress, the volunteers who served in California, and whose rolls were in the War Office, were directed to be paid. It was supposed at the time that all the rolls were in the War Office; but it turned out, on examination, that part of those volunteers were marines. The House will recollect that Commodore Stockton performed land service, and had his marines acting on land during the war. Portions of their rolls were therefore in the Navy Department, and this simply directs, under that law, a transfer of the rolls from the Navy to the War Department, without any appropriation additional to that heretofore made.

The twentieth amendment is as follows:

And be it further enacted, That in the event that the Secretary of War shall deem it inconsistent with the interests of the military service to furnish a sufficient portion of the military buildings at Fort Leavenworth for the use of the territorial government of Kansas, the sum of $25,000 shall be, and in that contingency hereby is, appropriated for the erection of public buildings for the use of the Legislature of the Territory of Kansas, to be expended under the directions of the Governor of said Territory.

The committee recommend a concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

We have now come to the last amendment, which is as follows:

Twenty-first amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the sums appropriated by the act of March 3, 1849, for the removal and subsistence of the Menomonees, and for the establishment of a manual labor school, &c., for them, and now remaining in the Treasury, together with the sums for pay of a miller heretofore appropriated, be paid to or expended for the benefit of said Menomonee Indians, according to the stipulations of said supplementary and amendatory articles.

There was a treaty to that effect with the Indians. The money has been appropriated, but the Department doubt, under the phraseology of the act, its power to appropriate it, and the object of this amendment is simply to authorize that expenditure to be made. The money is now remaining under a previous act, in the Treasury of the United States.

The question was taken on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference; and the report was agreed to.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the Army appropriation bill.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I now ask that a vote be taken on the amendment to the ocean mail steamer bill.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged motion. I wish to make a report from the committee of conference on the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. PHELPS. I have also a report to make from the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill. They have not been able to agree.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Well, at this late hour of the session, and as I understand the gentleman from Missouri to say that his committee of conference have not agreed, I yield him the floor to make his report.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PHELPS. The committee of conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes on the Navy appropriation bill, have instructed me to report that they have met the conferees on the part of the Senate, and that after full and free conference they have been unable to agree on a report.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman submit a proposition to the House?

Mr. PHELPS. At this late hour it is almost impossible for another committee of conference to meet a committee of conference on the part of the Senate, and agree upon a report, and have the bill enrolled and signed before the hour of adjournment. I do not propose to indicate a harsh measure, but perhaps it may be necessary to make a motion to adhere. I do not make the motion, but I submit the matter to the House.

Mr. PECKHAM. Is there any very essential matter of difference between the two committees?

Mr. PHELPS. We deem the difference essential, and we think the House will so consider it.

Mr. PECKHAM. What is, substantially, the difference?

Mr. PHELPS. It is in reference to the Navy reform amendment engraven by the Senate upon the bill. That is the great question.

The SPEAKER. What disposition shall be made of the disagreeing votes?

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will take the course of asking for another committee of conference. I dislike to legislate by moving to adhere at this stage of the proceeding. Let us first make another effort.

Mr. HAVEN. I would suggest to my friend over the way that perhaps it would be better to wait five or ten minutes, that our action may be known a little elsewhere before we finally act upon the subject.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I wish to make a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law.

The Senate recede from their second amendment, which is, to insert the words "including the amount expended prior to August 30, 1852," after the word "harbor," in the following clause:

For continuing the removal of the rock at Hell Gate and Diamond Reef, New York harbor, $20,000.

The House recede from their disagreement to the third, fourth, fifth, and seventh amendments of the Senate, and concur therein.

The third amendment is to insert, after the clause "for continuing the reopening of a communication between the Albemarle Sound, in North Carolina, and the Atlantic ocean, $50,000," the following:

In addition to the sum of $50,000 appropriated by the act of August 30, 1852, which sum is hereby reappropriated for a breakwater, or such other works as the Secretary of War may deem best adapted to accomplish that object.

The committee recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to that amendment.

The fourth amendment, from a disagreement to which the committee recommend the House to recede, is as follows:

Page twelve, after line five, insert as follows:

For the improvement of the Brazos river, in the State of Texas, $44,000.

The fifth amendment, from a disagreement to which the committee recommend the House to recede, is, to insert the words "and Passaic river below the town of Newark, and of Newark bay," in the clause making an appropriation for the harbor at Newark, so that it shall read:

For continuing the improvement of the harbor at Newark, and Passaic river below the town of Newark and of Newark bay, New Jersey, $25,000.

The seventh amendment, from their disagreement from which the committee recommend the House to recede, is the following:

Strike out all after the word "bidders" in the following section:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, whenever the Secretary of War shall invite proposals for any works, or for any material or labor for any works, there shall be separate proposals and separate contracts for each work, and also for each class of material or labor for each work; and he shall report to Congress at its next session all the bids, with the names of the bidders: And provided, That all persons entrusted with the disbursement of the funds appropriated for the works named in this act, shall be required to give bond and ample security for the faithful application of the same.

Next, the committee recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree thereto, with an amendment.

The first amendment of the Senate was to insert "the $100,000," after the word "river" in the following clause, and strike out all that follows:

For continuing the improvement of the Des Moines rapids, in the Mississippi river, $18,000;

—so as to make the appropriation $100,000.

The amendment which the committee recommend, is to strike out "the $100,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$70,000," so as to make it read "$70,000," instead of "$100,000."

The committee also recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to the sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree thereto with an amendment.

The sixth amendment of the Senate is this:

For the surveys of the harbors of San Pedro, Santa Barbara, Monterey, San Francisco, Humboldt, and Trinity, in the State of California, and the rivers Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Colorado; and the harbor of Appalachicola, Florida, $50,000.

For a survey for a breakwater at Grace's Point, Block Island, $5,000.

The committee recommend that the House concur therein after striking out "fifty," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty," thus saving $10,000. And also striking off the last clause for the breakwater; no State being mentioned, and not an individual upon the committee knowing where it was. [Laughter.]

The committee recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to the eighth amendment of the Senate with an amendment.

That amendment authorizes the Secretary of War to contract for the purchase of a small island near the mouth of Mobile harbor, and that he shall report such contract for the approval of Congress. The committee have reported in favor of adding the words "or rejection;" so that the contract shall be reported for the approval or rejection of Congress.

These are the recommendations made by the committee of conference. We have cut down the amounts reported by the Senate about $50,000; and as I suppose the House has no time to spare, I move the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will allow me to make one or two remarks.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. ORR. I desire to say, as one of the conferees who subscribed to that report, that, taking the general policy of the bill as a criterion, I thought the recommendations of the committee were just, and that they should be adopted if the bill were to pass. It is well known that I am opposed to the bill itself. I believe the whole system to be pernicious, but I have no idea the bill will ever become a law.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield me the floor for a moment before he calls the previous question?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I yield to my colleague upon the committee, certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to say that I have found it impossible for me to agree to the report made by my colleagues on the committee of conference upon this bill. I fully concur, however, in the recommendation that the House recede from the provision requiring bond and security of the military men who have charge of these improvements.

I also concur in the recommendation that this House assent to the amendment of the Senate requiring the Secretary of War to inquire and report as to the purchase of—not an island, as the gentleman has stated—but of what is known as Grant's Pass, between Mobile and New Orleans. Any contract for this purchase to be communicated to Congress, and to be subject to its approval or rejection. I desire also to say, with reference to the island from its appropriation to which the Senate has receded, that it is true, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated, that no one of either the Senate or House committee knew of the existence of such a place. I now move—

Mr. WENTWORTH. I yielded the floor for the gentleman to make an explanation—but not to make a motion.

Mr. PERKINS. I had intended to make a motion in reference to this bill; but if the gentleman declines to yield the floor for that purpose, I will not.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I understand there are some other matters pending which require immediate action; and I therefore move the previous question upon the adoption of the report, in order to dispose of it as soon as possible.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. That is precisely what I wish to do; and as the quickest way of disposing of it, I move to lay it upon the table.

Mr. PERKINS. I only wish to say that the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is the one I proposed to have made when I was upon the floor; I am glad the gentleman has made it.

Mr. LETCHER. Did my colleague move to lay the report upon the table?

Mr. BAYLY. I did, and that will carry the bill with it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I should like the gentleman to withdraw his motion.

Mr. BAYLY. I want to take up the bill to carry out the reciprocity treaty, and if we get to voting on this, we cannot take that important measure up this session.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit a motion that another committee of conference be appointed on the Navy appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. A committee of conference will be appointed, unless objection be made.

Mr. ROWE. I object.

The question was taken on Mr. BAYLY's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, nays 96; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bocock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dwell, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Faulkner, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Grow, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, May, Millson, Morrison, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Reese, Rufin, Shaw, Shower, Skelton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Vail, Walbridge, Walker, and Walsh—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Banks, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Churchill, Clarke, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Culom, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Lindsley, McCulloch, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Ready, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—96.

So the House refused to lay the report upon the table.

Pending the above vote, the following proceedings took place:

Mr. CHANDLER. I was absent when my name was called, attending a committee of conference, and ask to have my vote recorded.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. HUNT. Under the order of the House, the gentleman was attending to his duties, and he was constructively present. I move that he be allowed to vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to vote.

Mr. CHANDLER then voted.

Mr. CRAIG. I was absent when my name was called, and, as others have been allowed to vote who were also out of the Hall when they were called, I ask that I may have my vote recorded.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. MAXWELL stated that he had paired off with Mr. BALL, of Ohio.

Mr. AIKEN stated that he had paired off with Mr. HARRISON, of Ohio.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, notifying the House that that body insisted on its amendments to the Navy appropriation bill; and asked for another committee of conference.]

[Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined, and found correctly enrolled, bills of the following titles; which received the signature of the Speaker:

A bill to change the name of the American-built brig Glamorgan, to that of Wizard;

An act for the relief of J. C. Buckles, of Louisville, Kentucky;

An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855;

An act for the relief of Patrick Gass;

An act for the relief of Thomas C. Green; and An act for the relief of Jacob Baker, of Sandusky city, Ohio.]

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put; being upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the report of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the naval appropriation bill, and that another committee of conference be appointed. I know that the Senate have appointed another committee of conference.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER thereupon appointed the following gentlemen as members of said committee: Messrs. PHELPS, BENSON, and ROWE, to meet a like committee on the part of the Senate.

MAIL STEAMER APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire now to take up the ocean mail steamer bill, disagree to the amendment of the Senate, and let the bill be returned to the Senate.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the reciprocity bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I say to the House frankly that my object in moving a reconsideration of that vote is to get the bill before the House, in order to put it upon its passage. If the motion to reconsider is agreed to, I shall call the previous question; and if the House will sustain it, we can pass the bill in two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY, the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] and the House, that the motion to reconsider be entered, and that it be taken up so soon as this appropriation bill is disposed of?

Assent was expressed.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's motion will be entered, and will be called up so soon as this bill is disposed of.

Mr. HOUSTON. The amendment has been already read to the House, as I understand. I move that it be non-concurred in.

Mr. PRINGLE. Is that the Collins mail steamer bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is.

Mr. PRINGLE. Then I move that the Senate amendment to the bill be agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I simply desire to inquire what disposition the gentlemen on the other side propose to make of the bill? Let us know it over here.

Mr. HOUSTON. My object is to get a vote of disagreement from the House, and let it go to the Senate.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope, then, that proposition will be agreed to.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

THE RECIPROCITY TREATY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on reconsidering the vote by which the reciprocity bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and being put, it was disagreed to.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I now move that the bill be put upon its passage; and upon that motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. FULLER. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw his call for the previous question.

Mr. BAYLY. If there were an hour more of the session I would willingly do it.

The SPEAKER. There is no time to make speeches, and the Chair must interpose to prevent that waste of time. If the gentleman from Virginia declines to withdraw his call for the previous question, he will say so.

Mr. BAYLY. I do decline to withdraw it.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put—being upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let us have the bill read. It has not been printed yet, and we are anxious to hear its contents.

Mr. BAYLY. If gentlemen will listen to the bill, they will find that it does nothing but carry out the terms of the treaty.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The bill was read in extenso.

It authorizes the President of the United States, whenever he shall have sufficient evidence that the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, and the Provincial Parliaments of Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward's Island, shall have passed laws to give full effect to the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed 15th June, 1854, to issue a proclamation declaring that he has such evidence, and thereupon, from the date of his proclamation, the articles enumerated in the treaty, being the growth and produce of Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward's Island, shall be introduced into the United States free of duty so long as said treaty remains in force, subject, however, to be suspended in relation to the trade of Canada on the conditions mentioned in the fourth article of said treaty, and all other conditions of said treaty.

The second section of the bill provides that, whenever the Province of New Foundland shall give its consent to the terms of the said treaty, and whenever the Legislature thereof, and the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, pass the necessary laws for that purpose, the said enumerated articles may be introduced, free of duty, into the United States from said Province.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, I demand the yeas and nays upon the engrossment of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. FULLER. Will it be in order to move to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. FULLER. Then I make that motion. The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HAVEN. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only seven voting in favor thereof.

The question was then taken; and the bill was passed.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OLDS. I rise to a privileged question. The committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the Post Office appropriation bill, have agreed in their recommendations in reference to all the amendments of the Senate, save one, and upon that they have been unable to agree. I wish to state the circumstances, and the House can take such action as it may see fit. They have agreed to recommend that the House shall recede from its disagreement to the amendment making an appropriation of $10,000 for the mail service for Key West, and the Senate recedes from all its other amendments disagreed to by the House, with the exception of that providing for paying the clerks of the city post office of this city extra compensation. The amendment would pay each of the clerks in the city post office about $250 extra. It is in this form: one mill per pound is to be paid to the postmaster of the city upon all the mail matter which goes out of the office, for the purpose of paying the clerks that amount of extra compensation.

The Senate committee unanimously insist upon retaining that amendment. Two of the House committee were opposed to the House receding from its disagreement, and one in favor of receding.

The principle involved is this: The city post office of Washington city is under precisely the same organization as the post office in the city of New York, Baltimore, or any other city in the United States. We held that it would be very proper to pass a bill placing it in the power of the Postmaster General to pay the postmasters of the distributing offices such a sum as would enable them to pay their clerks a reasonable compensation for their services; but that, if we begin to legislate for the clerks and employees in the deputy post offices, there would be no end to the applications for extra compensation. Why, sir, I have already had more than twenty letters from the city of New York, praying that an amount may be placed at the disposal of the deputy postmaster there, to enable him to increase the pay of his employees. It seems to me that, by concurring in this amendment, we are opening the door to a class of legislation of which we shall not soon see the end. I hope, therefore, the House will not recede from its disagreement to this amendment. It is true, that if they do not recede, the appropriation bill may be lost. I have stated the facts to the House, and I leave them to take their own course. I have no motion to make.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will move that the House recede from its disagreement.

Mr. OLDS. I have no motion to make.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I move that the House agree to the report of the committee of conference, so far as they have been able to agree.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Chair receive that motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio if he has submitted a written report?

Mr. OLDS. No, sir. I have stated the facts to the House as they occurred. I have no authority from the committee of conference to make any motion.

was that making an appropriation for the mail service between Charleston and Key West. The House recede from its disagreement to that amendment; and it therefore stands as a part of the bill.

There is another amendment providing for the payment of extra compensation to a clerk in the Post Office Department for the alleged performance of double service. The committee recommend that the Senate recede from that, and that it do not stand as a part of the bill.

Another amendment proposes to extend the franking privilege to the present surviving ex-Vice Presidents, and to all future ex-Vice Presidents of the United States. The committee recommend that the Senate recede from that, and that it do not stand as a part of the bill.

The only other amendment about which the two Houses differed was that imposing a tax of one mill per pound upon all the documents leaving the post office of this city, the proceeds of which are to be applied to the payment of an extra compensation to the clerks in the city post office of $250 per annum. On this amendment the committee cannot agree. They agree on all the points but this one, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania now proposes that the House shall instruct the managers of the conference, on its part, to concur in the amendment with an amendment, providing that the appropriation shall be for one year only.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I be allowed to state that the reason for this addition to these clerks is the extraordinary labor which is imposed on them? They have the lowest existing salaries. They receive from $700 to $800 per annum, and have to work from twelve to eighteen hours per day.

Mr. McMULLIN. Does the gentleman state that the clerks in the city post office only receive $700 or $800 per annum?

Mr. CHANDLER. The class of clerks of which we are talking do not receive any more.

Mr. McMULLIN. Will the gentleman be kind enough to inform the House what additional compensation is proposed?

Mr. CHANDLER. Two hundred and $250. Not beyond that, whatever may be the tax. Since there has been a disagreement, I propose to limit the operation of the amendment to one year.

The SPEAKER. The object of the gentleman is to have the House recede from a particular amendment. Will he state it?

Mr. CHANDLER. My object is to have the House instruct its committee to agree with the Senate in its second amendment, with an amendment that its provisions shall not extend beyond one year.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understand that the committee of conference have agreed on a settlement of three or four of the disagreeing votes between the two Houses. I propose that the question be put whether the House will agree to what the committee of conference has agreed to, leaving this solitary point in reference to these clerks undecided. Then the House can act on that one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the committee of conference agreed to any report at all. It was understood that they had agreed as to part of the amendments, and that there was a part on which they could not agree. They have reported disagreement to the House.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is putting his proposition in writing, and while he is doing so, I will say a few words. There is an amendment on which the committee of conference cannot come to a conclusion. It is the amendment which provides for extra compensation to the clerks in the city post office of this city. The gentleman from Ohio says that, by the passage of this amendment, we shall open the door for similar legislation in regard to all the other cities of the Union. It is different in the post office here from what it is in any other city. The one here is the great place where all the lumber and stuff which is sent by members of Congress and the Departments has to be assorted, and each given its proper direction.

Mr. BOCK. I was a member of the committee of conference, and feel happy that, for once in my life, I stand on the side of economy against my friend from Tennessee. The argument which he now submits was submitted in the committee by latitudinarian friends. It was urged in the committee, and is now urged by the gentleman from Tennessee, that great labor—some called it extra work—is done in the city post office. Well, I would like to know, if that be so, whether they do not allow a number of clerks proportionate to the business; and does it make any difference with the clerks, provided that there are sufficient to do it, whether that business consists in sending free matter, or matter that pays?

Mr. JONES. I do not know that I am very well posted as to how these clerks are paid; but my impression is, that the postmaster is allowed certain commissions and allowances, and that he employs clerks, and pays them out of those commissions and allowances. What is left is his compensation for keeping the office. Upon all the matter sent from this city by the Congress of the United States, or its members, and by the Departments, there is no commission paid, because there is no postage received here; and the commission is much less here, I take it, than at any other place in the Union. Unlike some mail matter, the postmaster cannot give the same compensation out of commissions upon it that postmasters can give at other places.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to instruct the House conferees to concur in the second amendment of the Senate, with the following proviso:

Provided, That the operation of this clause shall not extend beyond one year from the passage of this act.

Mr. OLDS. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is mistaken as to the amount of compensation given to the postmaster of this city. By a law of the United States, you give to the postmaster of this city and the postmaster in New Orleans, $800 each extra compensation, which is not given to any other postmaster in the United States, for the reason that in these cities, and more especially in this, they have extra duties to perform.

One word further. Their whole compensation is a commission, with the exception of this $800; and you require all postmasters in the United States, where their commissions amount to more than $2,000, to return the surplus to the revenues of the Post Office Department, after paying their clerk hire and office rent. Out of his commission, and out of this $800, the postmaster of this city pays his clerks. I hold that, under the law passed by this Congress, giving the Postmaster General the power to pay extra compensation to postmasters of distributing offices adequate to the labor performed at these offices, the Postmaster General now has the power to give extra compensation to the postmaster of this city sufficient to meet the salaries and labor of the clerks employed by him.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. As I understand this question, the postmasters of this city and New Orleans are allowed a commission, and also $800 extra compensation. This being the only fund for the compensation of his clerks, the postmaster of this city finds, as he has need of many clerks, on account of the franking privilege, that he is not able to allow them a living compensation. How is this living compensation to be supplied? Only in this way: for Congress to appropriate a certain sum to put their compensation on such a footing as will allow them to live.

Now, the gentleman appears to think that there is a provision in the law already passed by which this thing can be done. I think he is mistaken about that. But, at any rate, there can be no difficulty in the matter. If they are paid by means of this appropriation, they will not be paid under any other law. Now, I say here, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] says, that there are no such drudges in all the country as these poor devils of clerks in the city post office; and yet they receive hardly enough pay to enable them to live.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I was correct in my position that the postmaster here, as at other places, had to pay his clerks, and to get his own compensation out of the commission allowed to him by law. The law to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] refers—about the $800—passed Congress some years ago, on the ground, or on the assigned reason, that they could not out of the commission and perquisites here, and at New Orleans, pay their clerks, and then have $2,000 a year each to themselves.

THE OCEAN MAIL STEAMER BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield the floor, that I may ask for the appointment of a committee of conference?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to take up the amendment of the Senate to the mail steamer bill, and ask the House to insist upon its disagreeing vote to the Senate's amendment; and to appoint a committee of conference to confer with the committee of the Senate.

There being no objection, the committee of conference was appointed; and the following gentlemen were named the committee on the part of the House: Messrs. HOUSTON, MORGAN, and POWELL.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House to the joint resolution extending the time of adjournment of the present session of Congress.

Also, that the Senate had passed the bill to carry into effect the provisions of the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed 15th June, 1854.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill of a private character.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bills, which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

A bill for the relief of Rosalie Caxillo;

A bill declaring the southern boundary of New Mexico; and

A bill to repeal the first proviso of the fourth section of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (resuming.) I might, sir, perhaps, distrust the correctness of my position in this respect; but I differ with my friend from Virginia [Mr. BOCK] when I hold that economy is not the largest price paid either for service, or property, or articles bought. Now, sir, I refer to the argument made here some few days ago by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] in which he told the House that there were some three million tons of free matter annually carried by the mails through the post office of the country. Where, sir, does that matter start from; and where does that which comes from the other direction find its destination? One and a half millions of tons start from this point, and more than another million is returned here to members of Congress and to the Departments. The whole of it has to pass through the hands of the clerks—or laborers, more properly called—in the city post office; for they perform little or no clerical services, if I understand their duties. It is labor, labor, in handling those documents and assorting them, and giving them their proper direction; and then, when returns come to this city, in sorting and giving them their proper direction.

Now, sir, when a proposition is made to increase the pay of clerks who are really so—clerks who get up in the morning at their leisure, take their coffee, and get to their offices at the reasonable hour of nine o'clock, and retire at three—when a proposition is made to increase their compensation from a thousand, sixteen hundred, two thousand, and twenty-two hundred dollars, the advocates of it are thick and plenty all over the Hall. But, sir, when it is proposed to increase the pay of these men who have to be up by turns, I suppose, almost every night—all night, the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office near me says—who have to be there all day, opening, sorting, and delivering mails, some of them the entire twenty-four hours, it is opposed, upon the ground that it will be a bad precedent. When I ask, was the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] ever found before to oppose the increase of the compensation of the officers in this city? If he has ever been, it has escaped my notice. I was surprised to find him opposed to it upon this occasion. I want the committee to be instructed so to amend the provision as that the other officers in the post office, who are now getting higher salaries, shall not be included in the provision.

In conclusion, permit me to say, that I do not know a single individual in the city post office, except the postmaster himself, and that no one from that office has ever said a word to me upon the subject of their compensation.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I wish to ask the gentleman one question. He has said that this is the first time that the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was ever found opposed to the increase of the compensation of clerks. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is not the first time he has advocated it?

Mr. JONES. I say it is not. Whenever I find a case where the compensation is not sufficient, I am willing to vote to increase it liberally. I know there are many clerks now in this city whose services are better worth $5,000 a year to this Government than those of others in the same Department are worth $500.

Sir, the people of this country are distracted at times about political questions, and political aspirants, as to who shall fill the White House at the other end of the avenue, who shall fill the heads of Departments, or who shall have seats upon this floor; but, sir, my experience has brought me to this conclusion, that this Government is practically administered by the clerks in the Departments of this city. I demand the previous question.

Mr. McMULLIN. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw the demand for the previous question for a few minutes?

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. JONES. The floor was yielded to me by the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] one of the committee upon this subject, and I cannot withdraw it.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put, being upon Mr. CHANDLER'S proposition.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to ask one question, in relation to that instruction, of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The amendment in controversy provides for twelve months, and I desire to know whether this amendment is to extend back twelve months, and also extend forward twelve months?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I demand tellers.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I be allowed to state that this extra compensation is not to extend beyond a year?

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PHILLIPS and OLDS were appointed.

The question was taken; and the proposition was agreed to; the tellers having reported—ayes 104, noes 17.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PHELPS, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate to the Navy appropriation bill, made the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 97) "making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the eighth amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate recede from its first amendment, and adopt a substitute therefor, as follows:

That at the navy yard at San Francisco the pay of the commander shall be $3,500 per annum; one civil engineer, $4,000 per annum, and the pay of the navy agent, who shall discharge the duties of both purser and navy agent, shall be $4,000.

That the Senate recede from its ninth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and sixteenth amendments.

S. R. MALLORY,
J. D. BRIGHT,

H. S. GEYER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN S. PHELPS,

S. P. BENSON,

PETER ROWE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PHELPS. The eighth amendment of the Senate is an appropriation for the San Francisco navy-yard. The House of Representatives amended that amendment by striking out the following words; "officers' quarters." The Senate concurred in that amendment.

The Senate recede from their first amendment, which reads as follows:

That at the navy-yard at San Francisco the pay of the commander shall be $3,500 per annum; the pay of one storekeeper, $3,500; one civil engineer, $4,000; one draughtsman, who shall be clerk to engineer, $3,000; one clerk to the storekeeper, $2,000; one navy agent, $4,000; one clerk to navy agent, $2,000.

And adopt a substitute therefor, as follows:

That at the navy yard at San Francisco, the pay of the commander shall be $3,500 per annum, one civil engineer, $4,000 per annum; and the pay of the navy agent, who shall discharge the duties of both purser and navy agent, shall be $4,000 per annum.

The Senate recede, also, from their sixth, ninth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and sixteenth amendments. They in fact recede from all the other amendments upon which there were disagreeing votes, from the appropriation for the naval depot at New Orleans, from the provision for the officers of the Texan Navy, and also from the provision for the retired list of the Navy. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon concurring in the report of the committee; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the report of the committee was concurred in.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

FRAUDS ON THE TREASURY.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask permission of the House to make a report, and introduce a bill from the Judiciary Committee, in the Gardiner case. The report is a long one, and I do not propose to have it read, but I desire to have it referred, together with the bill, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed.

Leave being granted, the bill was received, read a first and second time by its title, as follows: "A bill to prevent frauds on the Treasury of the United States," and then, together with the report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

THE GARDINER CASE.

Mr. STANTON. I am instructed by the same committee to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested to institute proceedings in law or equity against all such agents, attorneys, and confederates, as may have assisted in prosecuting the claims of George A. Gardiner and John H. Mears, or either of them, before the board of commissioners appointed under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo for the adjudication of claims on Mexico, in order to test their liability to refund the amounts paid them as agents, attorneys, confederates or assignees, out of the awards made by the said commissioners to said Gardiner or Mears.

The question was put; and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON. I ask that the report, with the accompanying testimony, be printed.

It was so ordered.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. COBB. I desire to offer a resolution which, I know, no gentleman in the House will object to. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior cause to be prepared, for the use of the House of Representatives, during the recess of Congress, a statement of the time the public lands may have been in market, as well as the quantity, classified according to the act graduating and reducing the price of the public lands, passed 4th August, 1854.

The resolution was adopted.

BOUNTY LAND BILL.

Mr. STRAUB. I ask leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of bill No. 428, granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. STRAUB. Then I move a suspension of the rules to enable me to introduce the resolution.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it in order to indicate what the bill in question is?

The SPEAKER. The resolution sufficiently describes it. Is there any objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] making a statement?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The question was taken on Mr. STRAUB'S motion; and (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a few minutes ago, was adopted.

The resolution instructs the President to institute proceedings in law or equity against the agents, attorneys, and confederates of Gardiner.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must state to the gentleman that this is not a question of privilege, or a privileged question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I thought it was.

SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. GREENWOOD. There is a bill standing first upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in reference to which there appears to have been some partial understanding with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENX] last evening.

It is a bill "for the relief of the purchasers and locators of swamp and overflowed lands." I move that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of that bill, in order to take it up and act upon it now.

Mr. MATTESON. I object to its introduction.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Then I move to suspend the rules in order to enable me to submit the motion.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—ayes forty-four.

So the motion was disagreed to, two thirds not in favor thereof.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. As that matter is disposed of, I wish to ask leave of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given.

Mr. LETCHER. I object anyhow, upon a venture.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If there is any gentleman here who has any local matter he is anxious to have attended to, I will not stand in his way. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

RESERVED LANDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. MAXWELL. It will be remembered, that some days since, upon my motion, a bill authorizing the sale of certain reserved lands was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The object of the bill was to withdraw the reservation over certain military lands which have become useless for military purposes. I said the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands; but, by some mishap, it has become misplaced, and cannot be found.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair understands the gentleman desires to have another copy of the bill obtained.

Mr. MAXWELL. I will explain what I wish to do. The bill was under consideration by the Committee on Public Lands, and they agreed to report it to the House, with a recommendation that the second and third sections be stricken out; and that, as so amended, it pass. I now ask the leave of the House to introduce a bill in place of it, leaving out the second and third sections of the other bill, so as to make it conform to the action of the Committee on Public Lands. The bill will then stand precisely as the Committee on Public Lands agreed to report it.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman propose to put it upon its passage?

Mr. MAXWELL. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. MAXWELL. I move to suspend the rules; and demand tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Cox, and McDougall, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the rules were not suspended, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would beg to make a suggestion to the House. There is a great press on the Chair for the floor, and he proposed yesterday that reports be received from committees, and that bills and resolutions reported, be referred without debate. The Chair now renews the suggestion. A number of gentlemen were out of the House when it was submitted before. Each gentleman rises in his place, and thinks that he is best entitled to the floor. Irritation is the consequence, as well as a great deal of trouble and perplexity, and sometimes mortification to the Chair. The Chair hopes the course suggested may be pursued.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. There are some bills upon the Speaker's table which may be taken up and considered. I move that we go to the business upon the Speaker's table, and that no bill be put on its passage unless there be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Unless objection be made that course will also be pursued.

No objection was made.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a personal explanation. It will be recollected by the House that the other day the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUGHES] and I engaged in a discussion of the proposition to refund Mr. Riddle moneys advanced by him. In the face of my declaration that I made no reflection on the honesty of Mr. Riddle, the gentleman thought proper to proceed with the following remarks:

"It was stated as a matter of reflection upon Mr. Riddle, as I thought. I know him well; and he is as high-minded and honorable a gentleman as lives in Massachusetts—pursuing his business in a laudable way. If he sells anything, he sells quadrupeds, not bipeds; and I am glad that his vocation is of that description—his auctioneering of that sort."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask if this personal explanation is in order? If it is not, I object to it, for the debate can be corrected elsewhere.

Mr. SMITH. I shall be through in one minute. I was saying that the other day, when the debate occurred upon the proposition to allow Mr. Riddle the sum of money advanced by Mr. Peabody for defraying the expenses of the transportation of American products to the London Industrial Exhibition, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUGHES,] in the face of my declaration that in my remarks I made no reflection upon the honesty of Mr. Riddle, and of course when it was wholly unnecessary, made use of the following language—

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. SMITH. I beg gentlemen will allow me the privilege of saying that I did not hear these remarks. My rule is to respond promptly to all impertinence; for, without a reply, it is presumed to be acquiesced in and submitted to.

The SPEAKER. In execution of the order, made by the unanimous consent of the House, the Chair will now proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask if it is not in order to move a reconsideration of a vote now?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order to submit such a motion, but it can only be entertained hereafter when some higher privileged motion is not pending. Does the gentleman desire to submit a motion to reconsider that it may be entered upon the Journal?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will submit the motion hereafter.

Mr. HENN. I tried to get the ear of the Speaker, to object to the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] for this reason: It was the understanding this morning, when the appropriation bills were out of the way, that I would be permitted to call up the bill in relation to swamp lands, which is first upon the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ORR. The Speaker, as I understand it, is not acting under the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair embraced in his suggestion that of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] with the distinct understanding that bills upon the Speaker's table, to which no objection was made, should be taken up and referred.

Mr. HENN. I do not wish to discuss the bill which I wish to take up.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be taken up now, unless by the unanimous consent of the House, as the House is acting under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HENN. I appeal to the House if they did not understand this morning, when I withdrew my objection to the adjournment until nine o'clock, that this bill would come up?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the bill referred to by him.

Mr. LETCHER. What bill is it?

Mr. HENN. It is the swamp land bill.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

REFERENCE OF BILLS—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to execute the order of the House, made by unanimous consent, and the bills upon the Speaker's table were taken up in their order.

An act granting the right of way to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain railroad through the arsenal, magazine, and Jefferson barracks, returned from the Senate with an amendment.

Mr. ORR. That will give rise to debate, and I object to it.

The bill remained on the table, and all subsequently objected to shared the same fate.

An act to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers, returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. ASHE objected.

An act for the relief of Betsy Nash, and the widow of J. C. Batchelder.

Mr. FAULKNER. I believe it is not in accordance with the understanding of the House to put that bill upon its passage.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object to it.

An act for the relief of Henry Lewis, of Clinton county, Indiana, returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move that the House do concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments:

First amendment:

That Henry Lewis and Moses Pettit, of Perkins county, Indiana, be, and are hereby, each authorized to enter, free of cost, except the fees of the land office, forty acres of land out of that subject to private entry, at any land office in the United States, or in the Territories thereof, in full of their respective claims for money paid to the register of the land office in Indiana in the year 1837, the amount thereof being fifty dollars.

Second amendment:

Amend the title as follows:

After the word "Lewis" add the words "and Moses Pettit."

The question was taken on the amendments; and they were respectively concurred in.

Joint resolution relating to the raft of Red river.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The subject-matter of that joint resolution has been incorporated in the Army bill, which was passed this morning. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PURLES] if I am not right in saying so?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, let it pass.

Mr. GREENWOOD. No; I object.

Senate bill supplemental to an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled an act to provide for the better preservation of the lives of passengers on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes," approved 30th August, 1852.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Senate bill to improve the naval service.

Mr. PHELPS. I object.

Senate bill "for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade in American-built vessels."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. PHELPS. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the business of the next session will be taken up exactly as we leave it.

The SPEAKER. That is the order.

Senate bill "giving to Jasper Strong, George Tyrrell, and associates, the right of way for a railroad through the reserved land near the navy-yard at Pensacola, Florida."

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Senate bill to revive for a limited time an act in relation to the donations of land to certain persons in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. LETCHER. Read the bill for information.

The Clerk read the bill in extenso.

The bill makes provision in respect to certain claims to donations of land in Arkansas, which have been adjudicated and allowed by the register and receiver of the proper land district, in virtue of the provisions of the eighth section of the act of Congress approved 24th May, 1828, entitled "An act to authorize the State of Ohio to extend the Miami canal."

The bill was then read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands."

Senate bill granting land in alternate sections to the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, to aid in the construction of a railroad from New Orleans to Mobile."

Mr. COBB. I object.

Senate bill granting land in alternate sections to the State of Missouri, to aid in the construction of a certain railroad in said State. Read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Senate bill for the better preservation of life and property from vessels shipwrecked on the coast of the United States. Read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. SKELTON. That is a bill which it is important should be passed. It passed the Senate unanimously, and I think, if the House will hear it read, there will be no objection to its being put upon its passage.

The bill was read.

Mr. LETCHER. I think that bill had better be examined by the Committee on Commerce before it passes. I move that it be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that they had passed, without amendment, a bill of this House of the following title:

A bill authorizing the payment of balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812, and sundry private bills.

That the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House, bills of the following titles:

A bill for the relief of the heirs of Captain Matthew Jack, deceased; and

A bill to provide a pension for Captain Thomas Porter.

Also, that they had passed a joint resolution and bills of the Senate of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Interior to retain the present force in the General Land Office until the next session of this Congress;

An act for the relief of Henry S. Sanford;

An act to amend the "Act requiring foreign regulations of commerce to be laid annually before Congress," approved August, 1842, and for other purposes; and

An act for the relief of Elliot Smith, William C. Greene, and Nathaniel Farnsworth.]

Senate bill to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850. Read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Senate joint resolution "for the confirmation of certain entries and locations of military warrants made in the State of Michigan."

Mr. LETCHER. I object to that resolution being taken up.

Senate bill for the relief of the Office of Indian Affairs. Read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would much prefer that that bill should be referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The bill has already been referred, and the reference cannot be changed unless the gentleman moves to reconsider the vote by which it was referred.

Mr. ROBBINS. Let it go.

Senate bill supplementary to an act entitled an act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes," approved 30th of August, 1852.

Mr. HENN. I object to that bill being taken up.

Senate joint resolution "for the relief of the legal representatives of Seth M. Leavenworth." Read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. PHELPS. If the House will allow me to explain for a moment, I think there will be no objection to that joint resolution being put upon its passage. An act was passed in 1846 authorizing a settlement to be made with Mr. Leavenworth. Since that time Mr. Leavenworth has died. And the object of the resolution is to authorize the proper accounting officers to pay to his heirs and legal representatives the money which was appropriated for his benefit by the act of 1846. I ask that the resolution may be read, and I hope no objection will be made to its being put upon its passage.

The resolution was read in extenso by the Clerk.
Mr. LETCHER. I should like to know what the damages were awarded for?

Mr. PHELPS. I think it was in reference to some mail contract. I am not acquainted with the circumstances of the passage of the original act of 1846, but this is merely to pay to the heirs and legal representatives of this man the money which would have been paid to him under that act if he had lived.

Mr. LETCHER. I think it had better be examined before we pass it. I move to refer it to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The motion was agreed to.

Senate bill "for the relief of Magdalena Van Ness, widow of Cornelius P. Van Ness, deceased," Read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Is it in order to move to put that bill on its passage?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to put it upon its passage.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Can I move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order while the House is acting under a suspension of the rules.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Senate bill "for the relief of David F. Douglass, late marshal of the northern district of California," Read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Senate bill "to establish certain additional post roads," was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose that is made unnecessary by the general post route bill, which was passed the other day.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understand that it was passed subsequently to the passage of the bill to which the gentleman refers, and is for the purpose of supplying omissions in that bill.

Mr. EDDY. Is it in order to amend the bill?

The SPEAKER. Not unless there be no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

House bill "for the relief of the heirs of Captain Matthew Jack, deceased," returned from the Senate with an amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out the words "together with interest on the same."

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

House bill "to provide a pension for Captain Thomas Porter," returned from the Senate with an amendment.

The amendment was to strike out lines twelve, thirteen, and fourteen, of the bill, which read as follows:

"And the amount found due under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the children of said Thomas Porter."

The bill was then referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Senate bill "for the relief of Sherman Pierce," read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

[Mr. HENN from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled, the bill "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law;" which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker.]

Senate bill "allowing exchanges, and granting additional school lands in the several States which contain public lands;" read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Senate bill "to provide for taking charge of the Louisville and Portland canal, and to prevent the same from falling into bad repair;" read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Senate bill "granting the right of way to the Marysville and Benicia railroad through and over the grounds of the United States, at Benicia, California;" was read a first and second time by its title, ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and was subsequently passed.

Senate bill "to authorize the title of the United States to lot No. 20, in square No. 160, to be conveyed to F. A. Whitney;" read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Senate bill "to provide for the surrender of certain bonds of the State of Indiana, and held by the United States."

Mr. EDGERTON. I object to that bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I trust that the gentleman who objected to this bill will withdraw his objection. It is of great interest to my State.

Mr. EDGERTON. I understand all about this case. Let it go to the Committee on Claims.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Senate resolution "to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to retain the present force in the General Land Office till the next session of this Congress."

Mr. LETCHER. Let that be sent to the Committee on Public Lands.

The resolution was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Senate bill "for the relief of Elliott Smith, William C. Greene, and Nathan Farnsworth;" read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Senate bill "for the relief of Henry S. Sanford;" read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Senate bill "to amend the 'Act requiring foreign regulations of commerce to be laid annually before Congress,' approved August 19, 1842, and for other purposes."

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I hope that last bill will be put upon its passage. I rise, at the request of the Secretary of State, to offer a report here on the subject, but it is not necessary to have it read. The object of the bill is to have these foreign statistics published, and laid before Congress.

Several MEMBERS. Read the bill.

The bill was read in extenso by the Clerk.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I hope the request of the gentleman from Georgia will be complied with, and that the bill will be passed. It is certainly of the highest importance.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I object to its being put upon its passage.

The bill was then read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. OLDS. I desire to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before that is done, I wish to move to reconsider the vote by which a pension bill for the relief of Captain Thomas Porter was referred, upon my motion, in order that we may take it up and agree to a Senate amendment thereto.

The bill (No. 270) was read for information.

It provides for placing upon the pension roll the name of Captain Thomas Porter, at the rate of twenty dollars a month for the time therein specified.

No objection being made, the bill was taken up.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senate have amended the bill by striking out the words:

And the amount found due under the provisions of this act, shall be paid to the children of said Captain Thomas Porter.

I move that the House concur in that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OLDS. I rise to make a report from the committee of conference on the Post Office bill. It is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on bill (No. 336) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855, having met, after full and free conference, do agree to the following report:

That the House agree to recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate, and concur with the Senate in its third amendment, with the following amendment thereto:

Strike out of said third amendment these words: "the said allowance to commence with the fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1853, and to be computed for the first year from the ascertained weight for the month of January, 1854;" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"This allowance to commence with the passage of this act, and to continue for one year only, and to be computed from the ascertained weight for the month of January, 1854."

The Senate agree to recede from its fourth and fifth amendment.

JACKSON MORTON,

W. K. SEBASTIAN,

I. P. WALKER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

EDSON B. OLDS,

JOSEPH R. CHANDLER,

Managers on the part of the House.

The third amendment, to which the committee recommend a concurrence, with an amendment, relates to the additional allowance to the clerks in the city post office. It is already understood by the House.

The fourth and fifth amendments, from which the Senate recede, are sections five and six, as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the surviving late Vice President of the United States shall have, during his life, the same authority to frank letters, and other mail matter, which he possessed while in office. And the same authority shall belong to future Vice Presidents after they go out of office.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Cranstons Lowrie a reasonable compensation for performing the duties of two desks in the Post Office Department, not to exceed half pay of a clerk for the time he was so employed.

The question now being upon the adoption of the report of the committee of conference, it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the report was adopted.

Mr. OLDS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask the consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 420, for the relief of Henry S. Sanford.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Connecticut that the bill to which he refers has already been taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, sir, I move to reconsider the vote by which it was so referred.

The SPEAKER. The motion can be entered, but not considered while the House is acting under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will submit the motion, and call it up at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill (No. 236) granting to the States of Indiana and Illinois a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of the Indiana and Illinois Central railway.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman desire to put it upon its passage?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. DAVIS. If the gentleman will hear the bill read, I think he will not object.

Mr. WALSH. I do object.

Mr. REESE. I ask the consent of the House to take up for consideration Senate bill (No. 256) for the relief of the West Feliciana Railroad, and the Georgia Railroad, and Banking Companies.

Mr. WALSH. I object. The order for calling committees for reports was given for a specific purpose, and I shall object to everything until that order has been executed.

Mr. LETCHER. I objected to Senate bill (No. 428) granting to Jasper Strong, George Fennell, and their associates, the right of way for a railroad through the reserved lands near the navy-yard at Pensacola, in the State of Florida. I understand now from the gentleman from Florida that there are no buildings on the lands through which it is proposed to extend the railroad that can be injured by fire. In that state of the case, I will withdraw my objection to taking the bill up.

Mr. WALSH. I renew the objection.

Mr. MAXWELL. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. WALSH. I do not withdraw it.

Mr. ASHE. I understand that there is no privilege now for the suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. When the order of the House is executed it will then be in order to move a suspension of the rules.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate resolution (No. 27) "to enable the Secretary of the Interior to retain the present force in the Land Office until the next session of this Congress," was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. I will explain the resolution in two minutes, so that I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. ASHE. I object.

Mr. ORR. Cannot the motion to reconsider be entered?

The SPEAKER. It can be entered and considered hereafter some time or other.

Mr. ORR. Then I ask that the motion be entered.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to execute the further order of the House by calling committees for reports for reference without debate.

Mr. DISNEY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back Senate bill (No. 126) "to relinquish to the State of Wisconsin the lands reserved for salt springs therein," with the following amendment:

That in lieu of the twelve salt springs, with six sections of land adjoining to each, heretofore granted to the State of Wisconsin, for its use, by the fourth clause of the seventh section of an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Wisconsin Territory to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of said State into the Union," approved the sixth day of August, in the year 1846, there be and hereby is, granted to said State of Wisconsin, to be selected by the Legislature of said State, out of any public lands subject to private entry, and to be sold in such manner as the Legislature may direct, for the benefit and in aid of the university of said State, and for no other purpose whatsoever, seventy-two sections of land: Provided, That in the selections of land, heretofore made under an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the selection of the lands granted to the State of Wisconsin for saline purposes," approved the 4th day of May, 1853, "and which shall not have been sold by the United States, and is not legally claimed by preemption or otherwise, shall be, and hereby are, granted and confirmed to said State for the use of the university of said State, as part of the seventy-two sections hereby granted.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio. Is it the understanding that when these lands were first selected they were found to be saline lands?

Mr. DISNEY. They were not.

Mr. LETCHER. What then?

Mr. DISNEY made some remarks in explanation of his amendment, and in reply to Mr. LETCHER, which were entirely inaudible at the reporter's desk.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time and, passed.

Mr. COBB. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to consider Senate bill (No. 93,) "to establish an additional land office in the State of Florida, to be called the district of Tampa."

I addressed a note to the Commissioner of the General Land Office to learn whether it was absolutely necessary to establish this additional land office, and in reply he says that it is needed. I am satisfied that the bill ought to pass, and I hope that there will be no objection to it upon the part of any gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. I object. It is only to create a new office.

Mr. DICK. I ask leave to introduce a bill to incorporate an Insurance company in the city of Washington.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman propose to have it referred?

Mr. DICK. I prefer having it put upon its passage.

Mr. PRATT. I dislike to object, but it is really too late to have this bill introduced and passed.

Mr. DICK. Well, then I ask it to be referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and so referred.

A message was here received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had this day approved and signed, among others, an act to repeal the first proviso of the fourth section of an act granting bounty lands to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States.

A message was also here received from the Senate, notifying the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate's amendments to the act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Some five months ago a bill from the land office, interesting to my district, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. My friend and colleague [Mr. DISNEY] desires to report back that bill, and have it put upon its passage. It is for the survey of public lands, and it is not probable that there will be any objection to it. I understand from the Commissioner that the bill is absolutely necessary to enable the surveyor of the district to carry on the survey. I ask the consent of the House to allow that bill to be reported. It is a bill "allowing the further time of two years to those holding lands by entries in the Virginia military district of Ohio, which were made prior to the 1st of July, 1852, to have the same surveyed and patented."

[Cries of "Let it be referred."]

Mr. DISNEY. There is very little matter involved in the bill. I will explain in a few words how the matter stands.

Mr. WALSH. I object to debate.

[Cries of "Oh, it is all right; it is understood!"]

Mr. DISNEY. I want simply to explain the necessity—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) Debate is objected to by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DISNEY. But I do not intend to make an argument, I merely—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The bill was read in extenso by the Clerk.

It provides that the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line on the continental establishment, their heirs or assigns, entitled to bounty lands, who have, prior to the 1st of January, 1852, been entered within the tract reserved by Virginia, between the Little Miami and the Scioto rivers, from intervening local points, shall be allowed the time of two years, from and after the passage of the act, to make and return their surveys, and warrants, or certified copies of warrants, to the General Land Office.

The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time,

Mr. WALSH. I object; let it be referred.

Mr. DISNEY. I will make a brief statement of the facts. By the existing law there is no authority to survey these lands. By her deed of cession Virginia relinquished all her right and title to them. This provision applies to parties in Virginia who had made entries of portions of this land, but cannot get them surveyed, because there is no law authorizing them to be surveyed. This bill simply proposes to authorize the surveyor to survey them.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was subsequently read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LILLY. I rise for the purpose of asking a favor of this House, a thing which I have not done before this session. It is to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of a private bill, that it may be taken up and passed. Two weeks ago, when that bill was reached on the Calendar, it was objected to by a gentleman from North Carolina; and one week ago it was called again, but I was unable to be here to attend to it. The gentleman who objected to it on a former occasion recently came to me and requested that I should ask the House to take up the bill, as he withdrew his objection to it, being perfectly satisfied that the bill is right. It is Senate bill (No. 337) for the relief of Eliza M. Evans.

Mr. BARRY. If unanimous consent is necessary to take up that bill, I object to it, and for the reason that for four months I have had a report which I have desired to make; and to-day committees are being called, and if we proceed, there is some chance of getting in the report.

Mr. LILLY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BARRY. I cannot.

Mr. ASHE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be directed to pay to John Costin, a laborer employed in the office of the Clerk, two dollars a day, in consideration of additional labor performed by him, commencing from the time employed, deducting therefrom the per diem already paid him.

Mr. BARRY. I object, most distinctly, for the reasons which I stated before.

Mr. ASHE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state the circumstances of this case.

Mr. BARRY. It will do no good; for I object. I have been trying to report a bill for a long time, and I want the opportunity of doing so to-day.

Mr. OLDS, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill abolishing the franking privilege.

Mr. ASHE. If any objection can prevent that bill from being reported, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to report it.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that it be put upon its passage.

Mr. OLDS. I have no objection to the bill being put upon its passage, if that is the wish of the House.

Mr. PRINGLE. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I would suggest that nearly all these objections arise from the fact that we are now acting under a suspension of the rules. I hope the balance of the committees will be called through for reports, and it will then be in order to proceed to other business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Louisiana, and will entertain no other proposition out of order until the committees have been called through.

Mr. BARRY, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill "to incorporate the Metropolitan Collegiate Institute of Washington," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

A bill concerning the apprehension and delivery of deserters from foreign vessels in the ports of the United States;

A bill to provide for the payment of costs by the United States in certain cases; and

A bill to authorize the adjudication in the courts of the United States of certain claims of officers of the customs.

Mr. MAY. I now ask leave to offer a resolution calling for information, that it may be furnished at the next session of Congress.

It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested and authorized to ascertain and report to this House, at its next session, upon what terms suitable buildings for the use of the post office and courts of the United States in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, can be purchased, or built, the same to be erected in a convenient and central place in said city; and that he report the various propositions on this subject that he may receive, or have considered, and his opinion on the same, and which is best for the public interest.

Mr. LETCHER. Would it be in order to amend that resolution?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order, unless the amendment gives rise to debate, and in that case the resolution cannot be considered.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to have the same inquiry proposed as to Clarksburg, Wheeling, Charlestown, and Wytheville, to know what post offices and court-houses would cost there.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Have all the committees been called?

The SPEAKER. They have not.

Mr. JONES. Then I shall object to the resolution until all the committees are called. When they are called, I shall withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Reports are still in order from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES. At the request of gentlemen, I withdraw my objection to the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LETCHER. After the word "Maryland," in the resolution, I move to add the following: "and the towns of Staunton, Wheeling, Clarksburg, Charlestown, and Wytheville, Virginia."

Mr. MAY. I accept the gentleman's amendment as a modification of the resolution.

Mr. KNOX. I object to the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Let us proceed with the call of committees.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill "for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Captain Presley Thornton, deceased," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of the heirs of Obediah Hardesty for eighty dollars bounty and interest, and for one hundred acres of bounty land; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LETCHER. I will withdraw my amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MAY.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia withdraws his amendment to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maryland. Is there objection upon the part of any other gentleman?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a "bill to establish an additional land district in the State of Wisconsin," which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. EASTMAN. As a matter of course, it is to be established at the will of the President.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. EASTMAN. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WALSH. Unanimous consent was given in the first place expressly that bills to which no objection was made should be reported.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill "to quiet the title to certain lands in the county of Monroe, Michigan," which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. NOBLE. This is a bill to quiet the title arising out of the different surveys which left some vacancies between the private land claims and the public lands. It is to quiet the title to two thousand acres in the aggregate.

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

Mr. LETCHER. To save time, I object to that bill. Let it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

It was so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan. I understand that this morning, when disposing of the business on the Speaker's table, resolution No. 23, for the confirmation of certain entries and locations of military lands made in the State of Michigan, was taken up and objected to. I wish to say to the House that that resolution was drawn up by the Commissioner of Public Lands, and that it is very desirable that it be passed. I wish now to have it taken up.

The resolution was read by its title, as follows: Senate resolution (No. 27) for the confirmation of certain entries and locations of military lands made in the State of Michigan.

Mr. LETCHER. I object to the consideration of that resolution now.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. Some three hours ago I asked to introduce a bill, but I have not yet succeeded in doing so, for the reason that I gave way to allow other motions to be presented. All I want is to have the bill referred.

No objection being made, Mr. W. introduced a bill "granting pensions to all persons engaged in the war of 1812, and the Indian wars prior thereto, and to their widows," which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PRINGLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the following joint resolution:

Resolved, That the several pension laws, and bounty land laws, shall not be so construed as to exclude from the benefits thereof, Indians belonging to the Seneca nation of Indians who served in the war of 1812, where, by the terms of such laws, Indians are now excepted and excluded.

Mr. PRINGLE. I ask that the resolution may be put upon its passage.

No objection being made, the resolution was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAVEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up Senate bill No. 338, and put it upon its passage. It is a very important and meritorious bill, for the relief of Robert G. Thompson.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Are the committees still being called?

The SPEAKER. They have not been called through yet.

Mr. JONES. Then I object to taking up any bills until the committees are called through. I have been here a long time waiting to get a bill in.

Mr. CHANDLER. I asked the House some time since to appoint a committee upon a memorial from the Smithsonian Institute. The committee was appointed, and it is now preparing a report, but has not finished it. I understand that the committee expires with the expiration of the present session of Congress. I move that the committee may be permitted to make their report at the next session.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I desire to ask what is the proper disposition for committees to make of the papers in their charge upon which no action has been had?

The SPEAKER. Let them remain in the several committee rooms, and they will be taken care of and restored to the committees again at the next session of Congress.

Mr. DAWSON. I ask the consent of the House to allow me to offer a resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the report of a committee?

Mr. DAWSON. Yes, sir. It is to pay to Charles J. Ingersoll the per diem and mileage to which he is entitled under the usual custom of the House for the Twenty-Sixth Congress.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. DAWSON. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentleman that the order of the House for calling committees for reports is still unexecuted.

Mr. McMULLIN. I hope the Chair will entertain no special motion until the order of the House for calling committees has been executed.

Mr. CRAIGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back Senate bill (No. 227) to authorize the extension and completion of the Treasury building; and also to construct buildings for the War, Navy, and Interior Departments, with a view of putting it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina is not in order.

Mr. CRAIGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object.

Mr. CRAIGE. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. McMULLIN. I will withdraw my objection as soon as the call of committees for reports has been concluded. But until that time, I will object to everything else.

Mr. CRAIGE. I desire to state the objects of the bill. It is to provide for completing the Treasury Building, and for erecting suitable buildings for the War, Navy, and other Departments of the Government. It is to provide for what has been recommended by every Administration, from General Jackson's down to the present day.

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. CRAIGE. I will state to the House that I was informed by the Secretary of the Treasury—

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to any explanation.

Mr. CRAIGE. I desire to make a statement which will remove all objection to the bill being put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made by half a dozen to any explanation.

Mr. CRAIGE. That being the case, I shall resume my seat.

Mr. FLAGLER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill "for the relief of Esther Lovejoy," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. LETCHER. I move the House do now adjourn. The Senate have adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would beg the gentleman to withdraw his motion until he presents a communication from the War Department.

Mr. LETCHER. I withdraw it for that purpose.

NATIONAL ARMORIES.

The SPEAKER then laid before the House a communication from the War Department, stating that among the papers transmitted in the report of yesterday in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 31st ultimo, there was a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, stating that the Commissioner of the Public Buildings and Grounds, when the chairman of the select committee was applicant for that office, had the supervision of the Capitol extension, and the statement was referred to in the report in recapitulating the contents of the paper submitted. The Secretary of War submitted a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, stating that his report above referred to was erroneous in that particular, and that the Capitol extension was not under the supervision of the Commissioner of the Public Buildings and Grounds when the application was made.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move that the communication be laid upon the table and printed, as a part of the communication yesterday received from the Secretary of War.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LETCHER. I renew the motion that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. After four o'clock the House could not, perhaps, under the rules, if objected to, receive reports from any committee of conference.

Mr. LETCHER. That is understood.

LOSS OF THE MAIL STEAMER BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee of conference upon the ocean mail steamer bill have disagreed. The Senate committee having possession of the papers made a report to the Senate, and debated it awhile; but I understand now that the Senate have adjourned until to-morrow, which kills the ocean mail steamer bill for this year.

I would like, if it is in order, to move a reconsideration of the vote by which House bill No. 461 was committed to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The motion can be entered, but not considered now.

Mr. HOUSTON. My attention had been called to the bill by a Senator, who asked me to take charge of it for him. I was not here when it was referred, and my object is to reconsider the vote by which it was referred, so as to bring it before the House and pass it.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is a private claim for the relief in some way of the Indian Bureau. I know nothing about the case except—

Mr. CAMPBELL. If that is all the explanation the gentleman can give, I object.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. My colleague in the Senate has informed me that some papers were carried to Berkeley Springs by General SHIELDS, who has gone to see Colonel BISSELL, in favor of making a port of delivery at Rock Island. I ask the unanimous consent of the House—

Mr. CAMPBELL. It would be the entering wedge for a custom-house, and we can take the subject up the next session.

Mr. BOCK. I wish to submit a privileged question to the Chair. It was agreed this morning—and I ask the attention of the Speaker to this point—that after four o'clock this evening no motion should be in order except a motion to adjourn. Now, if we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet to-morrow at ten o'clock, and if we adjourn to-morrow, we adjourn to meet on Monday at ten o'clock, unless we fix some other time.

The SPEAKER. It is fixed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of bill No. 454, "for the relief of Charles W. Carroll."

Mr. LETCHER. That will not go.

Mr. CHANDLER. It ought to go.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Senate have adjourned, and we can do nothing more here upon which they can act, and therefore I move that we adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Is this question of adjournment a debatable question?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. JONES. Well, then, I hope the House will not adjourn.

Mr. COBB. I want to have a Senate bill referred; and I hope I shall be allowed the privilege of having it done. I trust my friend from New York [Mr. WALSH] will not object. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday morning at seven o'clock.

[Cries of "That is right!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think the House had better meet to-morrow, and close up all the business.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I rise to a question of order. The question is not debatable at all.

Mr. COBB. I hope the House will allow me to report the bill which I have here.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. LETCHER. I renew the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion having been withdrawn by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] being on the floor at the moment, he is entitled to be heard.

NEW LAND DISTRICT IN FLORIDA.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MAXWELL] is deeply interested in the organization of a land district in the southern part of his State, remote from any other land district. I have a bill here for that purpose, which I wish to introduce. I have also a letter from the Commissioner of Public Lands stating the necessity which exists for the organization of a new land district. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH] made an objection a moment ago, but he is now satisfied of the facts, and withdraws his objection. I trust, now, that nobody else will object, and that the bill will be allowed to pass.

The bill was read in extenso by the Clerk. It creates a new land district in the southern portion of Florida, to be called the district of Tampa; the act to take effect at the expiration of six months from its passage.

Mr. EASTMAN. A bill was reported this morning by the Committee on Public Lands providing for the establishment of a land district in Wisconsin, and it was objected to. The people in that portion of the country have to travel two hundred and forty miles to the land office, and it was to remedy that that the bill in question was reported for the organization of an additional land office in Wisconsin, on the same terms precisely as this. I therefore object.

Mr. ROWE, (at ten minutes before two, p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For the purpose of enabling the bills to be signed, I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet to-morrow at ten o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The House meets regularly at that hour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw the motion then.

Mr. EASTMAN. I desire to withdraw my objections to the establishment of a land district in the State of Florida.

No further objection being made, the bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be directed to pay to John Costin, a laborer employed in the office of the Clerk, two dollars per day in consideration of the additional labor performed by him, commencing from the time employed, deducting therefrom the per diem already paid him.

[Cries of "All right!"]

Mr. ROWE. I insist upon my motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles, which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act for the relief of the heirs of Captain Mathew Jack, deceased;

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Pavie;

An act for the relief of Asa Leach;

An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855;

An act for the relief of Warren Raymond;

An act for the relief of Henry Lewis, of Clinton county, Indiana;

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of George M. Girk;

An act for the relief of James Capen;

An act for the relief of Lloyd Dorsey and others;

An act for the relief of the legal heirs of Benjamin Metoyer;

An act for the relief of Robert F. McGuire, and Louisa, his wife, late Louisa Lamy;

An act for the relief of Julia Aikin;

An act authorizing the payment of balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812;

An act for the relief of John S. King, of Virginia;

An act for the relief of the inhabitants of township forty-five, range one, in Warren county, Missouri;

An act for the relief of A. S. Laughrey; and

An act to carry into effect a treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed on the 5th day of June, 1854.

The question then recurred on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call upon the gentleman to withdraw that motion to adjourn for a moment, for the purpose of allowing me to ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution.

Mr. ROWE. I will withdraw the motion until I can hear the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the House that if they wish to place all the standing committees of the House upon the same footing, it will not take more than five minutes to call through those yet remaining.

Mr. ASHE. What has become of the resolution which I offered?

The SPEAKER. It was cut off by the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. And what has become of the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It was withdrawn. The Chair again asks if it is the pleasure of the House that the call of committees for reports shall proceed?

Mr. ROWE. How many committees are left?

The SPEAKER. Not more than five or six.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask leave of the House to withdraw a motion made by me to reconsider the vote of the House upon the resolution directing the President to commence legal proceedings against those who have received moneys from the Gardiner claim.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman has the right to withdraw his motion.

Mr. WALSH. Then I object to the gentleman's asking as a privilege what he has a right to do.

Mr. PHILLIPS then withdrew his motion to reconsider.

Mr. LILLY. I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill (No. 337) "for the relief of Eliza M. Evans."

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Mr. LILLY. Is it in order to move a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is not; for the committees have not yet been called.

Mr. HENN. I think that I have been rather badly treated by the House this morning, in objecting to a bill which I was allowed, by unanimous consent, to take up. I do not propose that the House shall consider that bill now. Being on the Committee on Enrolled Bills, I have not been able to be in the House at times when one could get the floor. I now ask it as a personal favor, that the House will take up and pass a little bill confirming the school titles to about two thousand acres of land in the United States—about one hundred and sixty acres of which are in my State.

Mr. WALSH. To whom are they to go?

Mr. HENN. They go to the schools.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I certainly have no knowledge of any understanding between the gentleman from Iowa and myself, either express or implied.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. HENN. The bill to which I refer is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; to which it was referred early in the session.

Mr. GROW. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me to offer a resolution which I think will be unanimously adopted. If there be objection to it, I will not even move a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HENN. I would appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his motion to adjourn, until the bill to which I have referred has been acted on.

Mr. LETCHER. I object to the bill of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENN. Then I shall object to everything except the regular business of signing bills.

The SPEAKER. There is pending a motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MILLSON. Has not a motion to fix the time to which the House shall adjourn precedence of that motion? I move that when this House adjourns to-morrow, it adjourn to meet on Monday at a quarter before eight o'clock, or seven, or any other hour that will suit members. Now, by the order under which we are acting, we adjourn from one day to meet at ten o'clock the next day. So, if the House adjourn to-morrow, they will adjourn till Monday two hours after the time fixed for adjournment, unless the Chair shall decide that, under the resolution adopted to-day, it will be competent for the House to-morrow—

Mr. HENN. I rise to a question of order. The subject is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman of Virginia claimed the floor upon a privileged question.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not desire to debate the matter. I move that when the House adjourns to-morrow, it adjourn to meet some time on Monday, say half-past seven o'clock in the morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia submits a motion that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday, at half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. MILLSON. I was about to make this further suggestion. If we do not do this, we might be placed in an anomalous condition. The Senate might be in session on Monday at eight o'clock; and they are not prevented from adopting resolutions and taking votes to-morrow; while we, if we adjourn to-morrow at ten o'clock, would close our session at that time, and cease to have a legal existence, and present the anomalous condition of the two Houses adjourning at different periods.

The SPEAKER. It is true, as the gentleman from Virginia states, if the House adjourns to-morrow, it will adjourn, according to its own order, to meet at ten o'clock, two hours after the time fixed by the resolution adopted to-day.

The question was taken upon Mr. MILLSON's motion; and it was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I send a resolution to the Clerk's table to be read for information. If there be a single objection, I promise that I will not move to suspend the rules.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has received an intimation that there will be an Executive communication sent to the House in a few minutes. The Chair proposes that the House take a recess for half an hour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, in the mean time, I ask to have my resolution read; and if there be the slightest objection made, I will withdraw it.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (at twenty minutes past two o'clock.) Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LETCHER. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw my motion to adjourn; and I now move to suspend the rules, in order that my resolution may be read.

The SPEAKER. The rules are suspended; and there is only one committee more to be called.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then let that other committee be called.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is it in order now for me to make the statement which I desired to make some time ago?

Objection was made.

Mr. ASHE. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business will be the call of the committee.

Reports are now in order from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. LETCHER. I wish to know whether it is in order to move to reconsider the vote by which my colleague's [Mr. MILLSON's] motion was agreed to? And then I wish to know whether it is in order to debate that motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is in order; but it is not in order to debate it at all.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, will it be in order to have a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I move a call of the House.

Mr. DAWSON. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LETCHER. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered,

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 18, nays 81.

So the House refused to adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Pending the call of the roll, a message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act to establish certain additional post roads;

An act for the relief of Thomas Ap Catesby Jones, surety for a former postmaster at Norfolk, Virginia;

An act for the relief of George M. Bentley, of the State of New York; and Joint resolution making appropriation for the payment to those entitled to the benefits of the resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States, passed August 3, 1854, voting extra compensation to pages, folders, and others.

The question recurred upon the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire if there is not a message from the President upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. There is; but there is no quorum present.

Mr. JONES. That makes no difference.

[Cries of "Read the message!" and "Let us have it!"]

The SPEAKER. If it is the pleasure of the House, the Chair will present the message.

Mr. HAVEN. I am very desirous of hearing the message, whatever it may be; but I do not want to hear it, except under such circumstances that we can act upon it after we have heard it.

Mr. JONES. We can have a full House to-morrow.

Mr. KERR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order, inasmuch as the House has but just now refused to adjourn, and no business has since been transacted.

Mr. WALSH. Can the message be read if any one member objects?

The SPEAKER. It cannot, no quorum being present.

Mr. WALSH. Then I object.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to hear the message read; but if there is not a sufficient number here to act upon it after it is read, I do not want it read now, nor until we can act upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is competent for the gentlemen present to hear the message read, but that it would not be competent to act upon the message by a vote. The Chair states that no number less than a quorum can act at all legislatively.

Mr. HAVEN. Then I object to the reading of the message.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that it was competent for the gentlemen present, if they choose to do so, to hear the message read; but that it was not competent for them to act upon it.

Mr. HAVEN. But I want action upon the message, if we hear it read; and I do not want to hear it unless we can act upon it.

Mr. ORR. Under the resolution which has been adopted by the House to-day, providing for an adjournment, the House, even if there were a quorum present, could not act upon it after four o'clock to-day.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the message be read.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the message will be read; but if it is objected to, the Chair thinks the reading of the message would be legislative proceeding, and that it would be out of order, there being no quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then I most respectfully take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. We can hear without a quorum, but we cannot act.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If a motion for a call of the House has not been made, I now make it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion of the gentleman from Ohio takes precedence of the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama, and it will be the first thing in order; and the Chair does decide that less than a quorum cannot legislate at all.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The Chair does not appear to understand me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman, and decides that the message cannot be read, as objection is made.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to ask if the message cannot be read for information?

The SPEAKER. Unless by unanimous consent, it cannot.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object.

Mr. WASHBURNE. I desire to move—

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that no motion is in order, and that he will entertain no motion except for a call of the House. The Constitution decides that question, and the Chair has no discretion in reference to the matter.

Mr. WALSH. Is it in order to move to lay the motion that there be a call of the House upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is not, for the reason that it is not debatable, and nothing would be accomplished by it.

Mr. WALSH. I move, then, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Before the question is put upon the motion to adjourn, I desire to inquire whether, if the motion be carried, the House will adjourn to meet to-morrow at ten o'clock?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. JONES. Then I desire to say that the Senate have adjourned until twelve o'clock to-morrow, and that if we meet at ten, we can do nothing until that time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object to the gentleman making an argument.

Mr. JONES. I am not making an argument; I only wished to have the House understand that if they meet to-morrow at ten o'clock, they must sit here for two hours, when it will not be possible for them to transact any business. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum present, and the House cannot make the order without.

The question was taken on Mr. WALSH's motion; and the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 19, nays 74; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Banks, Campbell, Edmundson, English, Everhart, Farley, Haven, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, McCulloch, Matteson, Smith Miller, Pringle, Sabin, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, and Tappan Wentworth—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bennett, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Caruthers, Caskie, Chandler, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dunbar, Dunham, Edgerton, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Gamble, Goode, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Hibbard, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsley, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Macy, May, Millson, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Orr, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Rowe, Ruffin, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Walley, Walsh, and Wells—74.

So the House refused to order a call.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is no quorum present. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and

Thereupon (at quarter past three o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at ten o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 3, 1854.

The Senate met at ten o'clock, a. m.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the Senate postpone all prior orders, and proceed with the unfinished business of yesterday—the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MASON. I submit to the Senator, that as the Senate is very thin at this hour of the morning, he had better allow us a short time to make reports from committees.

The PRESIDENT. Petitions are first in order.

PETITION.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented the petition of the surviving children and heirs-at-law of Lemuel B. Mason, an officer in the continental line of the Revolutionary Army, praying to be allowed commutation pay; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. ROCKWELL, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition and papers of Thomas Sumner, copies of which papers are to be left on the files of the Senate.

On motion by Mr. SEBASTIAN, it was Ordered, That Jonas P. Levy and José Maria Jarrero have leave to withdraw their petition and papers.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of Betsey W. Eve, widow of Joseph Eve, praying to be allowed certain expenses incurred by her husband while chargé d'affaires to the late Republic of Texas, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Samuel A. Belden & Co., claimants against Mexico under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, for losses and damages sustained from the confiscation of merchandise by the officials of the Republic of Mexico, praying that measures may be adopted to secure the payment of their claim, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Charles D. Arfwedson, praying compensation for services as chargé d'affaires ad interim at the Court of Stockholm, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of J. Balesier, praying remuneration for certain expenses incurred while special agent of the United States to southeastern Asia, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 135.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of H. Gold Rogers, late chargé d'affaires of the United States to Sardinia, praying to be allowed arrears of compensation, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred documents in the case of J. G. Schwarr, late consul of the United States at Vienna, praying compensation for diplomatic services, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of George Frasier, praying remuneration for losses sustained in consequence of the seizure of his property, and the imprisonment of himself by the Mexican authorities in 1840, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of W. D. Porter, of the United States Navy, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855, reported it back without amendment.

REV. JAMES KING.

Mr. ROCKWELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to furnish, for the use of the Senate, (if not incompatible with the public interests,) copies of that part of the correspondence, which has not been already furnished, between the Department of State and Mr. Marsh, our Minister to Constantinople, relative to the affairs of the Rev. James King.

GARDNER'S DICTIONARY.

Mr. BRODHEAD submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be introduced to inquire into the expediency of purchasing—copies of Gardner's dictionary of the Army, for distribution among the Senate.

DRY-DOCK AT PENSACOLA.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, [Mr. GWIN.] It will be recollected that some months since I introduced a resolution calling on that committee to examine and report as to the work for building a dry-dock and basin at the Pensacola navy-yard. A report from the Navy Department was received on that subject, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs on my motion, but I believe that committee have not yet made a report on the subject. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs whether we are to expect a report from the committee during this session. Whilst I am on the floor, I would remark, sir, that it is important some action should be taken by Congress upon the subject. It appears by the report from the Department, which was submitted to the committee, that these contractors were paid the full amount of their contract price, though the work which they performed was not received by the Government. They have by that means obtained nearly a million of dollars from the public Treasury without the Government receiving any valuable consideration. Subsequently, I understand, a contract was entered into with the same contractors for building a basin for the dock in California. I think it is time some action may be taken by the Government in regard to the non-fulfillment of the contract by these contractors, before they receive any further sum of money from the Treasury. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the state of the case?

Mr. GWIN. The question was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the contractors were required to present a response to the report made by the Navy Department; and also to take notice of the remarks of the Senator from Florida when he presented the resolution which was referred to the committee. The contractors have responded, in an elaborate production, which the committee, from the multitude of business on hand, have not been able to consider. I believe, however, it is the sense of the committee—though I have not asked for it, but I intend to do so through the day—to move to be discharged from its further consideration, and to have the response of the parties printed, in order that we may take effective action during the next session of Congress. I believe it is the opinion of the committee—I have heard it so expressed, though not formally—that the best plan to test the question at law, and I think the order of the committee will be, that the Government and the contractors shall settle the question by judicial proceedings. I merely give this as my opinion, because there has been no formal decision of the committee. We have not been able to examine the facts fully at this late period of the session; but I believe it is the sense of the committee to take up the question and examine it before it is finally disposed of.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. There is no question before the Senate; and, therefore, debate is out of order.

Mr. MORTON. I suppose it is perfectly in order to make inquiries of the chairman of a committee in respect to any business before them.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is not.

Mr. GWIN. Then I move that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the response of the contractors be printed. I make the motion for the purpose of enabling the Senator to be heard.

Mr. MORTON. I merely wish to make this suggestion: it appears from the report of the Navy Department that these contractors have received, in violation of law and contract, $1,000,000 from the public Treasury, while the matter is pending and under investigation. I say, a stop should be put to their receiving any more money from the public Treasury. The matter is before the Naval Committee; and the only suggestion I thought proper to throw out was whether it would not be well that the contractors should be estopped from receiving any more money from the Treasury?

Mr. GWIN. The charge of the Senator, that these parties have received money in violation of the contract, is emphatically denied by the contractors. They bring forward abundant evidence to prove that they have not violated the contract. That is their side of the question. They bring satisfactory proof of that fact, and I wish to have it printed. The Senator has stated his position, in reference to this matter. Now, I say there has been no violation of law, so far as I remember, discovered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, in the transaction. These parties have spoken for themselves. I wish the document to be printed, and laid before the Senate, and at the next session the Senator can move any action which he thinks proper.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on discharging the Committee on Naval Affairs from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. BRODHEAD. As a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I must say that I never heard any determination of theirs, formal or informal, to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. GWIN. I never stated so. I said I would ask it during the day. I made the motion merely that the Senator from Florida might be in order in his remarks. I now withdraw it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have a word to say on the subject.

Mr. GWIN. I renew the motion to allow the Senator to be heard.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Senator from California is right in saying that the committee have not had time fully to investigate the matter. It is a subject which ought to be thoroughly investigated, because money is constantly asked for by the Bureau of Yards and Docks to continue these dry-dock operations in various parts of the country. I think there is no necessity for discharging the committee, or printing the response of the contractors, until the action of the committee is had upon it.

Mr. GWIN. I withdraw the motion.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. SLIDELL. When the Senate agreed to meet at ten o'clock this morning, it was, as I understood with the intention of putting on their passage private bills which have come from the House of Representatives, and have been favorably reported on by our committees. I presume there will be no attempt to pass any bill to which objection is made or which will lead to discussion. I think we can get rid of some forty or fifty bills in the course of an hour.

Mr. GWIN. I consider that if we go on with private bills now, it will be equivalent to postponing all the appropriation bills.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish the Senator from California to understand that I have no desire, and I presume nobody else has, to occupy more than three quarters of an hour in the consideration of private bills.

Mr. GWIN. Then I have no objection.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly proceeded to consider private bills from the House of Representatives, as stated below:

JOHN FRINK.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill of the House of Representatives, for the relief of John Frink, have instructed me to report it back, and recommend its passage. I ask that it may be now considered.

There being no objection the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. Its object is to authorize the Postmaster General to pay to John Frink $750, the amount of two fines wrongfully imposed on him in the third and fourth quarters of the year 1839, and deducted from his pay for carrying the mail on route 2811, from Joliet to Danville Illinois.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SCHOOL TOWNSHIP IN OHIO.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to report back without amendment, House bill for the relief of the civil township of Marion, in the county of Mercer, Ohio, and to ask for its consideration now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to authorize the trustees of the civil township of Marion, county of Mercer, Ohio, to select out of the unsold lands of the United States in that State, one section of land for school purposes, in lieu of section sixteen, to which the township is entitled by acts of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

W. D. PORTER.

Mr. MASON. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back, without amendment, House bill for the relief of W. D. Porter, of the United States Navy. A similar bill passed the Senate at the last session, and again at this session. It is really an urgent case, and I hope the Senate will pass the bill at once.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill provides for the settlement of the accounts of Lieutenant W. D. Porter, of the Navy, for moneys expended by him in defraying the expenses of bringing Amin Bey and suite to the United States, in compliance with the request of the Hon. G. P. Marsh, United States Minister at Constantinople; the amount not to exceed $2,024 32.

Lieutenant Porter, then at Genoa in command of the United States storeship Erie, and about to return home, received a letter from the Hon. George P. Marsh, Minister resident of the United States at Constantinople, dated the 20th of May, 1850, requesting him to receive Amin Bey and his attendants on board his ship, and to bring them to the United States; in which letter the minister says that the visit was made on the suggestion of the American legation, and under the proffer of a free passage for Amin Bey and his attendants, in any public ship of the United States about to return home; and further, that he doubts not the "Government will reimburse you for any expense to which you may be subjected by affording him a passage."

In compliance with this request, Amin Bey, with his attendants, including Mr. John P. Brown, as dragoman, were received on board the Erie, at Genoa, on the 5th of July, and landed at New York on the 13th of September, 1850. The mission was treated as one of sufficient consequence to the United States, by our minister at the Turkish court, to warrant the responsibility he assumed in giving the invitation, and tendering a passage in a public ship; a step fully justified by Congress, in the appropriation subsequently of a large sum of money to defray the expenses of Amin Bey while in this country. The committee are satisfied, from their inquiries, that the peculiar national habits of this guest of the ship Erie must have subjected its commander to expenses exceeding those of an ordinary guest having a like retinue; and, although far the larger part of the expenditures made are sustained by vouchers, they deem it just to admit some of the charges for which, under the circumstances, strict vouchers could not be obtained.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

M'VEA AND M'KNEELY.

Mr. SLIDELL. As there have already been three deviations from the regular course of business, I hope the Senate will now indulge me in taking up House bill "for the relief of John McVea and John F. McKneely, of Louisiana." I had intended not to ask for any preference, but as other bills have been taken out of the regular order, I hope this will be.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that, upon the return to the land office at Greensburg, Louisiana, of plats of surveys, duly approved by the Surveyor General, of township three south of range one west, and township three south of range one east, it shall be lawful for John McVea and John F. McKneely to enter, at $1 25 per acre, the one thousand acre tract which they have long held in possession and cultivation, and which is represented as covering parts of sections one, two, eleven, and twelve, in township three south of range one west, and parts of sections six, seven, thirteen, and eighteen, of township three south of range one east, in the Greensburg land district, Louisiana; but the entry is to be according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and to embrace the land actually cultivated and inclosed by them, as near as may be, and not to the prejudice of any valid adverse rights, if any exist, to any part of the land.

It appears that Thomas Scott, the father-in-law of the memorialists, verbally contracted in 1829 or 1830 with John McVea, senior, for about one thousand acres of land in the parish of East Feliciana, Louisiana. John McVea, senior, represented himself as authorized to sell the land as agent of one Corcoran, the supposed owner, then residing in the city of New Orleans. Scott was to have title as soon as the agent should obtain adequate authority from the reputed owner, to make the conveyance. In 1830, Scott took possession of the land, and made considerable improvements. Soon after the verbal agreement was made, the agent of the reputed owner died, and no conveyance to Scott was ever executed. Scott entered upon the land under the belief that he should ultimately obtain title. After Scott had been in possession for some years, he made a donation of the land to the memorialists. About fifteen years ago, the memorialist, McVea, entered into possession of the land; and about five years thereafter, McKneely, the other memorialist, joined him in the occupation, and they have continued to occupy it to the present time. They have made extensive and valuable improvements on the land, and have erected thereon a sugar-house, machinery, &c., valued at $15,000. They have had under inclosure, for ten years, about one thousand acres. The reputed owner of the land died soon after his agent, and it turns out that the land belonged to the United States. The public lands in that vicinity, embracing the premises in question, have been surveyed, but these premises have been withheld from sale, in order that the claim of the memorialists may be adjusted.

The memorialists set forth that under the survey, some fragments of quarter sections fell outside of their inclosures, and that upon such fragments persons have been disposed to make settlements, in hopes of ultimately holding the greater portion of quarter sections within their inclosures. They pray for the passage of a law allowing them to purchase the land inclosed by them, not exceeding one thousand acres, at $1 25 an acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

INDIANA BONDS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I must ask the Senate to indulge me by taking up Senate bill "to provide for the surrender of certain bonds of the State of Indiana, held by the United States." It was introduced as early as the second week of the session. It has heretofore passed the Senate three times, but failed in the House for want of time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It had been reported back from the Committee on Finance, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That the heads of the Departments who have them in charge, be, and they are hereby, authorized to surrender to the State of Indiana the bonds of the said State held by the United States, (not including bank bonds), and to receive in lieu thereof the new certificates of stock to be issued under, and by virtue of, an act of the Legislature of the State of Indiana to provide for the funded debt of said State, and approved the 27th day of January, 1847, the said bonds to be exchanged for the said certificates of stock: Provided, That the new certificates of stock to be received in exchange for said bonds so surrendered, shall be held by the said heads of Departments on the same account, and in the same manner, and for the same purposes, as the said Indiana bonds are now held.

In an arrangement of the State of Indiana with her creditors, she surrendered to them the Wabash and Erie canal for one half of her public debt, with an agreement on the part of the bondholders that the canal should be completed to Evansville, on the Ohio river, to be managed by three trustees, two on the part of the bondholders, and one on the part of the State. The old bonds of the State were to be taken up, and new bonds were to be issued; and on one half the amount the revenues of the State were to be applied for the punctual payment of the interest, and the ultimate redemption of the principal; and for the other half, canal bonds were to be issued, having for their bases the Wabash and Erie canal, which is now fully completed, uniting the waters of Lake Erie with those of the Ohio river. The Government is now asked to be as liberal to the State of Indiana as her foreign creditors have been.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana what will be the difference to the Government between the old and new stock?

Mr. BRIGHT. The stock which the Government now holds is worth nothing, as the law stands. Under the arrangement proposed by the Committee on Finance, the Government will get stock worth, at once, half the par value, and which will, prospectively, be worth the other half. As it is, the Government gets nothing. There was a long report made by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON,] in 1848, which fully explains the whole matter.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JAMES WALSH.

Mr. WELLER. I hope the bills will now be taken up regularly in their order.

The PRESIDENT. The first House private bill on the Calendar is one for the relief of James Walsh, which has been reported from the Committee on Pensions.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of James Walsh, of the District of Columbia, upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st day of January, 1854, and to continue during his natural life.

James Walsh proves to have been in the service of the United States as a private soldier from the 6th of December, 1836, until May 4, 1849, with the exception of a few months, at each expiration of his time he was honorably discharged, except on one occasion, he is reported as under ordinary disability, which continued only one month and nine days. He also proves that at the battle of Molino del Rey, in Mexico, September 8, 1847, he was wounded in the left foot by a shot, which now renders him, as appears by the certificate of Surgeon Wotherspoon, of the United States Army, entirely incapacitated from earning his livelihood by manual labor, and he is now an inmate of the military asylum in the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JESSE R. FAULKNER.

House bill for the relief of Jesse R. Faulkner, of Missouri, reported from the Committee on Pensions, was next considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Jesse R. Faulkner, of Missouri, on the pension roll of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars per month, during his natural life, commencing January 1, 1854.

Faulkner was a private in Captain Burwell's company of Virginia militia during the fall of 1814, and while on a scouting party on or about the first of November, 1814, between Snowden's Iron Works and Annapolis, in the State of Maryland, the party was fired on by a party of British, and Jesse was wounded slightly in the hip, and badly in the knee; the wound in the hip got nearly well, but the knee has been crippled ever since, and grows worse when exercised, producing total disability. He is a man of good character, is poor and needs aid, and calls upon his Government for it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

HENRY N. HALSTED.

The next private bill of the House of Representatives on the Calendar, was one for the relief of Henry N. Halsted, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN. I will suggest that the reading of the bill is unnecessary, unless it is especially called for. It unnecessarily consumes time in these pension bills.

Mr. TOOMBS. I wish to have the bills read. I do not think we should be called upon to pass these bills without reading them, though the House may have passed one hundred in a bunch.

The bill was read. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to place the name of Henry N. Halsted on the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of four dollars per month, commencing January 1, 1845, and continuing during his natural life.

Mr. TOOMBS. I should like to know why this man should be an exception to all other citizens of the United States. Why should he be allowed four dollars a month? There does not seem to be any reason for it at all.

Mr. WELLER. The bill requires the Secretary of War to pay this pension. It should be the Secretary of the Interior, for he now has charge of the subject. I do not see how it can be paid at the War Department; but I will not propose an amendment, for fear it might defeat the bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. Let the report be read. I wish to know why this money is to be paid.

The Secretary then read the report; from which it appears that Halsted was in the service of the United States, in the year 1814, in a company commanded by Captain John G. Weaver, of the New York militia, at Sackett's Harbor. His service commenced on the 22d of August, 1814, and ended on the 9th of November following, when he was regularly discharged on account of sickness. His sickness was the camp disorder, and produced the piles in an aggravated manner, and has continued until the present time, and it has disabled and enfeebled him very much.

The report contains a statement of many depositions to prove the disability of Halsted, and that it resulted from his military service.

Mr. TOOMBS. All I have to say is, that if there be a word of truth in the report, this man could have got his pension long since at the Pension Office. I suppose from his not getting it there, the statements are not true.

No amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN HAMMOND.

House bill for the relief of Benjamin Hammond, of the State of New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place Hammond's name on the invalid pension roll, at eight dollars a month from January 1, 1854, to continue during his natural life.

Mr. TOOMBS called for the reading of the report; and it was accordingly read.

Hammond was a sergeant in Captain Badger's company, in the artillery regiment commanded by Colonel Thom, in the war of 1812. Upon one occasion the colonel was informed that two men, suspected of being spies, had been in the camp, and had escaped. He ordered Hammond to take a sufficient force, follow, and, if possible, secure them. The pursuit was made in the night, and in the woods; and he, in the discharge of this duty, fell, and the bone of his right thigh was fractured, and he was otherwise injured. The injury compelled him to leave the service. He secured the best surgical treatment at his command, but the injured thigh was but partially restored. He has ever since been lame. The broken limb is much decayed, and so worthless that he goes upon crutches.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JAMES M. LEWIS.

The next private bill from the House was one for the relief of James M. Lewis, the object of which is to place his name upon the pension rolls of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 1st of January, 1850, to continue during his natural life.

Mr. TOOMBS. I wish to hear the report in that case.

Mr. RUSK. I would suggest that we pass over all the bills where the reading of the report is called for, and take them up afterwards. There are some bills about which there can be no question, but if all the reports be read we shall never reach them.

The PRESIDENT. If such be the sense of the Senate, this bill will be passed over.

Mr. CHASE. I object to that.

Mr. RUSK. I make the motion, that when the reading of a report is called for the bill be laid aside, so that we may get through with those bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. TOOMBS. I think we ought to know what these bills are. I wish to hear the reports on all of them.

Mr. RUSK. Then the Senator has no confidence in the committees?

Mr. TOOMBS. I have no want of confidence in them, but I must vote for myself. I do not allow them to do legislation for me. I have no right to let them do it. I must vote for myself.

Mr. RUSK. Then I understand the Senator to call for the reading of all these reports.

Mr. TOOMBS. Every one.

Mr. RUSK. Then I cannot save time, and I withdraw my motion.

The Secretary read the report in this case, from which it appears that the petitioner was in military service, under the command of General Jackson, for two years, and took part in the battles on the southern frontier, where he received wounds, and subsequently, in carrying an express from the army to Nashville, was thrown from his horse, and so severely injured as to amount to total disability.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JAMES K. WELCH.

House bill to provide a pension for James K. Welch, was next considered by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that James K. Welch, of Fulton county, New York, who lost his eye-sight while in the service of the United States, in the line of his duty, be placed upon the pension roll, at eight dollars per month from the 1st of January, 1854, to continue during his natural life.

Welch enlisted in the service of the United States in February, 1846, as a private in company K, of the sixth regiment of infantry, of the regular Army. While at Vera Cruz, about 8th June, 1846, exposed to drilling and much fatigue in the heat of the sun, he became sun-struck, and was put under charge of the surgeon. He, becoming worse, was put in the hospital at Vera Cruz, and remained there about two months. His right eye went out the second day, and the left in nine days; and he has ever since been totally blind.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ALBRO TRIPP.

The bill from the House of Representatives for the further relief of Albro Tripp was considered by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Albro Tripp upon the invalid pension roll, at the rate of ten dollars per month, in lieu of the four dollars per month to which he is entitled under the law passed May 4, 1852, to commence the 1st of December, 1851, and continue during his natural life, the sum he has received under the act of May 4, 1852, to be deducted therefrom.

The bill of the Thirty-Second Congress, by virtue of which Mr. Tripp was placed on the pension list, was based upon his being a private, and enacted that he receive four dollars per month, the half pay of a private; whereas, on examination, it has been discovered that his grade of captain was overlooked, which fact would have entitled him to the half pay of a captain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

HENRY LEWIS AND MOSES PETET.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of House bill for the relief of Henry Lewis, of Clinton county, Indiana.

The bill, as it passed the House, proposed to authorize Henry Lewis to enter, free of cost, except the fees to the land officers, forty acres of land, out of any lands subject to private entry, at any land office in the United States, or the Territories thereof, in full of his claim for money paid Charles Tyler, register of the land office at Crawfordsville, Indiana, the 18th of January, 1837, being fifty dollars.

The Committee on Private Land Claims reported an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That Henry Lewis, of Clinton county, Indiana, and Moses Petet, of Parke county, Indiana, be, and they are hereby, each authorized to enter, free of cost, except the fees to the land officers, forty acres of land, out of any lands subject to private entry, at any land office in the United States, or the Territories thereof, in full of their respective claims for money paid Charles Tyler, register of the land office at Crawfordsville, Indiana, in the month of January, 1837, the amount thereof being fifty dollars each.

Henry Lewis, on the 18th January, 1837, went to the Crawfordsville land office, for the purpose of purchasing the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section five, in township twenty-three north of range one west. At that time the office of receiver of public moneys was temporarily vacant; but the register of the land office, Charles Tyler, told him to leave the money with him, and he would see that the land was duly entered, so soon as the office of receiver was filled. The petitioner being not well versed in such things, and supposing one land officer as responsible as another, left his money, fifty dollars, with Tyler, and took from him a receipt.

Tyler marked the land as entered on the plats in his office. The petitioner, believing that he had in fact purchased it, took possession of it, and remained in possession, making valuable improvements, for ten years, when he was informed that his land had been purchased by Rufus A. Lockwood. He then had a full investigation of all the facts, and found that Tyler had pocketed his money, and that he had no title whatever for the land; but that the title was fully invested in Lockwood, to whom he surrendered possession. At the time Tyler received the money, and from that time to the present, he has been notoriously insolvent.

The committee find that the case of Petet is similar, and therefore report the amendment.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read a third time, and passed, and the title was amended, so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Henry Lewis and Moses Petet."

HENRY J. SNOW.

House bill "for the relief of Henry J. Snow, of Rome, in the State of New York," was next considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of H. J. Snow on the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st of January, 1854, and continue during his natural life.

In April, 1853, the petitioner was employed by the officer in command at the military post at Rome, in the State of New York, to load and discharge guns on the occasion of the death of the Hon. William R. King, Vice President of the United States; and while so employed, by the premature discharge of one of the guns, his right arm was torn off, his right eye destroyed, and he was otherwise injured. The accident occurred without fault or negligence on the part of the petitioner, who is but thirty-seven years of age, and has a wife and five children dependent on him for support.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to the second reading of that bill.

The PRESIDENT. It has been read a second time, and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then I object to its passage to-day. The bill has to be read three several times on three several days, unless it be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT. It has been read a first and second time.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then I object to its third reading to-day, under the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. It has been read a first and second time, and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. If no amendments be proposed, it will be reported to the Senate, and the question will be on its third reading.

Mr. TOOMBS. I am opposed to this bill. This man was not in the military service of the United States; but was a person in civil life, employed to fire cannon in funeral honors. To give him a pension for life is violating all principle.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, at the station at Rome, in the State of New York, there was an officer in command of the post, with no troops. He received from the War Department instructions to fire a salute in honor of the Vice President of the United States, on the occasion of his death. In pursuance of that command, which he could not disobey, he employed this person, who was experienced in the performance of that duty. I trust the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. CLAY. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from New York that this bill is obnoxious to all the objections which he urged the other day against the Batchelder case.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion that the bill be ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALKER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bright, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Fitzpatrick, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Stuart, Toombs, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benjamin, Brodhead, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Morion, Pettit, Rusk, Seward, Sumner, and Walker—19.

So the Senate refused to order the bill to lie on the table.

It was then read a third time, and passed.

SUSPENSION OF RULES.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to suspend the 16th joint rule for the purpose of allowing the bill, which was passed this morning, "to provide for the surrender of certain bonds of the State of Indiana held by the United States," to be sent to the House of Representatives to-day.

Mr. RUSK. It would be better to make the motion general, so as to apply to such bills as may be passed during the day.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SUMNER. As that is a joint rule, should it not be suspended in accordance with the House?

Mr. RUSK. It only requires the action of the Senate.

Mr. BRIGHT. In accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, I modify my motion so as to read:

Resolved, That the 16th and 17th joint rules, for such bills as have passed, or may pass during this session, be suspended for the residue of the session.

The rules which are proposed to be suspended are as follows:

"16. No bill that shall have passed one House, shall be sent for concurrence to the other on either of the three last days of the session.

"17. No bill or resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approbation, on the last day of the session."

The resolution was agreed to.

ATMOSPHERIC TELEGRAPH.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That one thousand additional copies of the report of the select committee on the subject of Richardson's proposed atmospheric telegraph, be printed for the use of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had approved and signed, on the 2d instant, the following bills:

An act to constitute Tusculum, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery, and for other purposes;

An act constituting Madison, in the State of Indiana, a port of delivery;

An act creating a collection district in Texas and New Mexico;

An act to establish a port of delivery at Lake Port, on Lake Pontchartrain, and for other purposes;

An act to relinquish the reversionary interest of the United States to a certain reservation herein mentioned, and to confirm the title of Charles G. Gunter thereto; and

An act to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts, and in the cities of New York and Philadelphia.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House insisted on their disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, insisted on by the Senate; and insisted on their amendments to certain other amendments of the Senate to the said bill which had been disagreed to by the Senate; that they agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill, and had appointed Mr. HOUSTON, of Alabama, Mr. HAYEN, of New York, and Mr. HENDRICKS, of Indiana, managers on their part.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives, "making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855," which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, without amendment.

Mr. GWIN. In order to facilitate business, I propose that the bill be reported to the Senate, and that the amendments be then offered.

Mr. STUART and Mr. CHASE objected to that mode of proceeding.

Mr. GWIN. I have a number of amendments to offer from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The first is to insert after the appropriation for the Memphis navy-yard the following:

Navy-Yard at San Francisco.—For continuing the blacksmith shop, the carpenter shop, storehouse, wharf, officers' quarters, and other works, $200,000.

This is merely a continuation of an appropriation made last year. The estimate of the Department was upwards of a million of dollars, and the committee on naval affairs recommend but $200,000; being $850,000 less than the estimate.

Mr. PEARCE. I shall make no objection to this amendment; for I suppose it is perfectly proper, if we are at this time to make any appropriations for the navy-yard at San Francisco; but I will remark, that the appropriations made in this bill for navy-yards and magazines at different points already amount to nearly a million of dollars. If the Senate think proper, at this time, to add $200,000 more for the navy-yard at San Francisco, I shall make no objection; for I suppose at some future time it will be necessary to have a naval establishment there; but whether it is advisable now to add this amendment to the very large amount of appropriations already contained in the bill, is a question for the Senate to decide; I simply wished to call their attention to the facts.

Mr. GWIN. The Government has already expended $100,000 for purchasing a site, and removing all obstacles for the purpose of establishing a navy-yard there. It appropriated $100,000 at the last session of Congress for the commencement of the work. This sum of $200,000 is to enable us to go on. If we are ever to have a navy-yard there at all, it is time that we should make something like a respectable commencement.

Mr. SEWARD. I think that if we are to have navy-yards anywhere, San Francisco is the proper place for one. We have nothing in the shape of a navy-yard, or any preparation for naval defense on that coast, where it is now so necessary when, we are opening a new commerce with all the East. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. GWIN. I am further instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to offer this amendment, to come in after the provision for pay of superintendents, naval constructors, and all the civil establishments of the several navy-yards and stations:

That at the navy-yard at San Francisco, the pay of the commander shall be $3,500 per annum; the pay of one storekeeper, $3,500; one civil engineer, $4,000; one draftsman, who shall be clerk to engineer, $2,000; one clerk to the storekeeper, $2,000; one navy agent, $4,000; one clerk to navy agent, $2,000.

These salaries are recommended by the Navy Department as necessary at that navy-yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs is to insert after the one just adopted the following:

That in settling the accounts of the late navy agent at Memphis, the sum of $2,964 59, already received by him and passed to his credit upon the books of the Treasury Department previous to the passage of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1853, shall not be deducted from his salary as acting purser provided for by the said act.

Mr. STUART. I should like to have some elucidation of this. Here is an express direction to the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow this man this sum of money. Now, we have gone on from time to time exculpating men from liabilities to the Government without ever fully considering what we were doing. This case may be one in which the Government of the United States ought to relinquish this amount; but simply saying it ought to be done is certainly not satisfactory to the Senate.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will give way, he can have an explanation which, I suppose, will remove his objection.

Mr. STUART. I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, Mr. Perrin, for whom this amendment is proposed, is a constituent of one of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL.] I have looked into the case, and I will state it as I understand it. Mr. Perrin was navy agent at Memphis, and while navy agent served three years. A purser at that station was entitled to receive $2,000 a year; but there being none there, Perrin was ordered by the Secretary of the Navy to assume and execute the duties of purser, and he did so. Thereupon there were large contracts made for work, labor, and materials to be expended at Memphis; but instead of making the drafts payable at Memphis, which would have given the percentage to the pursur there, they were made payable at Boston, so that he got no percentage though he did all the duties of pursur otherwise. Subsequently, Mr. Graham, Secretary of the Navy, insisted on his performing the service, and said he would send a resolution to Congress by which he should get the pay of a purser. He did get that pay, $2,000 a year. Previous to that, he had executed the duties of navy agent; and his commissions for that service amount to the sum stated in the amendment. When he presented his accounts, they allowed him his salary as purser but all the commissions which he earned as navy agent were struck out. The committee thought it unjust, and therefore reported this amendment.

Mr. STUART. I understand the statement, then, to be that he received full pay as navy agent during a certain period, and at a subsequent period he received pay as a purser in the Navy; and now it is proposed to go back of this, and pay him as navy agent, and as purser also. That is, contrary to the policy and the law of the United States. I think it wrong in principle.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator has not understood the explanation. Mr. Perrin had earned this sum of money, and it was due and payable to him. When he was called upon to perform the duties of purser, these commissions were all earned for three years services. He had paid himself; but when he came to settle his accounts, they allowed him, instead of his pay as navy agent, only the pay of purser, whereas he performed the duties of both stations, with the express understanding that he was to be paid.

Mr. STUART. I understand it. This man was navy agent, and, as navy agent, received the pay due to him as such.

Mr. BELL. Allow me to say to the honorable Senator, that the sum of over $2,900 now in question, is the only amount he ever received for four years' service as navy agent. He never got one cent besides, either as salary or commission. The honorable Senator is totally mistaken in his view of the case. If Mr. Perrin be not allowed this sum, he will not receive one cent for acting four years as navy agent.

Mr. STUART. Let me inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether, as navy agent, he was not entitled to a certain amount of pay?

Mr. BELL. Commissions to the amount of $2,900 were received by him for the expenditures at the navy-yard for three years prior to the passage of the act of 1853. That act allowed him $2,000 a year, as acting purser at the yard. Then the difficulty has arisen with the accounting officers as to whether he should be allowed commissions as navy agent. I think there ought to be no difficulty; but the officers have deducted all he received for the whole service, as navy agent, for three years—$2,900—from his allowance as purser. That is the true state of the case.

Mr. PEARCE. I understand the fact to be this: This gentleman was navy agent, and, as such, like all other navy agents, he was entitled to no compensation, except what he derived from commissions on his disbursements. There have been cases where navy agents have been in office for a considerable time, without receiving a cent; as, for example, in California, some years ago, great complaint was made about having a navy agent there, and allowing him to receive the emoluments of the office, when, in fact, he never disbursed a dollar and never received a cent commission. It is, therefore, not an unusual thing for a navy agent to receive small compensation for making small disbursements. I understand this gentleman, in consequence of performing duties ordinarily performed by a purser, was allowed to receive the pay of a purser. He did not receive pay as a navy agent, but received the pay of a purser, which was twice as much at least; and I understand he has received more money for the services performed than $2,900.

Mr. MALLORY. The honorable Senator is mistaken, and I think in a few words I can make the case so clear that he cannot misapprehend it.

Mr. PEARCE. I should like to know if the Secretary of the Navy has recommended this appropriation?

Mr. MALLORY. Not that I am aware of; but the committee who have investigated the subject do recommend it.

Mr. PEARCE. I hope it will not be passed now. Why not bring it forward as a separate bill, and give us time to look into it.

Mr. MALLORY. I wish to give the Senator an explanation. He has mistaken the facts, and I wish to show him what the facts really are.

Mr. PEARCE. Before the Senator goes on, I will make this point: I look on this as a private claim, and it seems to me, therefore, to be excluded from this appropriation bill, according to our rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WALKER in the chair.) That is the opinion of the Chair, and has been since the amendment was presented.

Mr. BELL. The amendment does not require the appropriation of a cent of money. This sum of $2,900 has been already paid to this gentleman, and not a cent is required to be appropriated from the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire if the Senator from Maryland makes the point of order?

Mr. PEARCE. I suppose it to be a private claim; but I will look at it again and see.

Mr. BELL. It is declaratory of the act of 1853.

Mr. STUART. I think there can be no doubt that it is a private claim.

Mr. PEARCE. I see by the amendment that it requires the sum of $2,900 shall not be deducted from this gentleman's pay as acting purser. Although it does not actually appropriate any money out of the Treasury, it in effect does the same thing; and I think, therefore, my point is a proper one.

Mr. BELL. The amendment is declaratory of the opinion of Congress upon the effect of the act of 1853, and makes no appropriation. It is only to provide that the amount which this gentleman received as navy agent at Memphis for four years shall not be taken from him, and he shall not be compelled to pay it to the Government. The honorable Senator from Maryland said it was very usual for navy agents to have nothing to do. Why, sir, there were large expenditures during the time that this gentleman was acting as navy agent at Memphis. Then considerable appropriations were being made for that yard. I believe $136,000 were appropriated at the last Congress; and, if all the appropriations had passed through his hands, he would have received $6,000 as navy agent, instead of $2,900.

Mr. PEARCE. I am loth to interrupt the Senator, but the point of order has been raised, and decided by the Chair; and it is, therefore, unnecessary to go into the merits of the claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has intimated that it was his opinion that this was a private claim; but, as he is only a temporary occupant of the chair, he will submit the question to the decision of the Senate.

Mr. GWIN. I think the question is raised too late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, when raised, has to be considered. There has been no vote on the amendment, and therefore it cannot be too late. The Chair will not decide the question. He will merely give his opinion, and submit the question to the Senate. Those who are of opinion that this is a private claim, and therefore excluded by the rules, will say "Aye;" those of a contrary opinion will say "No."

The question being taken, the amendment was decided to be a private claim, and therefore excluded under the rules.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs is to strike out the following clause:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the salary of Professor James P. Espy for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1855, $2,000; the payment to be made in the same manner, and under the like control, as former appropriations for meteorological observations.

Mr. PEARCE. The object of this amendment is to strike out the appropriation for the salary of Professor Espy, engaged in meteorological service under the direction of the Navy Department. This gentleman has been engaged in this business for several years. I do not recollect when it began; but I know that in 1846 an appropriation was made for the purpose, though it was omitted by mistake in the bill of that year. In 1847 another appropriation was made of this sum of money, to be applied to his use in the prosecution of meteorological researches, under the direction of the Navy Department. So it has continued from year to year. I have heard no reason assigned by any committee for striking out this appropriation. I should like to hear some reason assigned for it before I go any further. I hear none.

Mr. MALLORY. If the Senator will take his seat, I think I can give him a reason.

Mr. PEARCE. Very well, sir; I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, there are a great many abuses existing in the organization and expenditures of the Navy. They come before us every day. And the Committee on Naval Affairs would be wanting in justice to themselves and the Senate if they did not, when they discover them, bring them to the notice of the Senate. Now the clause proposed to be stricken out is in these words:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the salary of Professor James P. Espy, for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1855, $2,000; the payment to be made in the same manner, and under the like control as former appropriations for meteorological observations.

This is the first time the appropriation was ever made in this form. Heretofore there has usually been an appropriation to enable the Secretary to get these meteorological observations; but never have I been able to discover that it was made payable to a single individual. Now, I will say, with all due respect for Professor Espy, of whom I entertain a very high opinion, that he is not an officer of the Government. He is not subject to the appointment of the President. He is not in any Department. He has no office, no employment under the United States. He comes here, at the end of the year, and submits to us certain results of meteorological observations, asks us to accept them, print them, and pay him so much money. In that regard he is precisely upon the same footing that any other intelligent scientific gentleman would be, who reported to us his discoveries in any branch of science. We are called on here, from year to year, to appropriate this money, without the appropriations being controlled by any committee of either House of Congress, or having any direction over the subject at all.

Why, sir, if these meteorological observations are necessary, if they conduce to any practical or beneficial end—on which I will not now undertake to pass any opinion—I consider that they should be made at our Observatory. We have at our Observatory ten lieutenants, receiving salaries of from $1,500 to $3,000 a year; we have seven professors of mathematics; we have several passed midshipmen; we appropriate from $10,000 to $50,000 per annum for charts and for nautical instruments for the Observatory. And are we to be told that when meteorological observations are wanted we are to go to a private individual, who comes forward at the end of the session, and submits them for our approbation and acceptance? Is that the way we are to get these observations? No, sir. I have no doubt that their generalization by Professor Espy has received the approbation of scientific men, and that they may be useful; but I submit that this means of obtaining them is not just, and is not right. We might as well accept the book or the report of any other private individual upon any abstract subject of science at the end of the session, and approve it. We have no means of looking at this matter. We are called on here to pay for these observations, and I do not know that the reports of them ever saw the inside of a ship. They have been piled up in the naval committee room. We have no means of examining them. No committee ever passed upon them. This is the first time I know of that this has ever been specifically introduced into the naval appropriation bill.

If it be the desire of the Senate to continue these meteorological observations, not at our own Observatory, under our own control and direction, but to accept those made by a private individual, be it so. They are now being made all over this country. Under the orders of the proper Department, we have them made at every naval station and at every military station in the country. If, however, we want to go to a private individual to get these meteorological observations, I say then, if that is to be the way, let the Secretary of the Navy expend the money as he may think best, and do not confine the appropriation to one particular individual above all the world, but give every man a fair chance, and select the best.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, several years ago Congress made appropriations "for meteorology." The first one which I notice in this volume of laws, reads in this way: "For appropriation of this sum for compensation of meteorologist, the same having been omitted by mistake in the enrollment of the civil and diplomatic bill of the last session, $2,000." I find in the appropriation bill of next year "for meteorological observations, to be conducted under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy," and a few other times "for meteorology under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy," so much.

Now, sir, Professor Espy does not come here as a private individual, having made meteorological observations, asking the Senate to pay him in advance. On the contrary, an examination of the statutes shows that Congress have appropriated money for meteorology, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretaries of the Navy heretofore have employed Mr. Espy to make these meteorological reductions, for, sir, he does not make meteorological observations; not at all. The Senator is right when he says that we have for a number of years had meteorological observations made at the stations of the Army and of the Navy. That is all true, but those observations are of no manner of use until they are reduced into form, until they are generalized, and some rule deduced from them.

Mr. BROADHEAD. Can they not reduce them in the Observatory?

Mr. PEARCE. No, sir. In the Observatory they can make one set of observations; but that is worth nothing; you must have a thousand sets in order to generalize with any advantage. These observations are made throughout the country, at all our naval and military stations. We want somebody to generalize and reduce them; and the Secretaries of the Navy have employed Mr. Espy to do this. He is not a private individual forcing himself upon the attention of Congress to do this thing. It is true he is not an officer of the Government; but he is an individual who has been employed under the authority conferred on the Secretary of the Navy by law, for more than ten years, to reduce these observations. He has uncommon capacity for that service. You have not got, of all your lieutenants at the Observatory, and at all your stations, any man one fortieth as competent as Professor Espy, to make these generalizations and reductions. It is because of his especial fitness for it, that he has been employed by the Secretaries of the Navy, and continues to be employed by them.

Mr. GWIN. Has the present Secretary of the Navy estimated for this, or does he desire the employment? Has the Senator any official information?

Mr. PEARCE. I do not know whether the present Secretary of the Navy has done so or not; but it has been estimated for in times past, and we are continuing that which the laws have heretofore authorized. There are plenty of examples to this effect in your legislation here. Take the very Observatory of which gentlemen speak. Do they know how that was got up? There never was any law authorizing an observatory. For years and years there was an estimate for a depot of charts and barometers; and that has expanded, under general appropriation acts, without any specific statute creating an observatory, to the condition in which we now behold it. It is a very useful establishment, and has grown very largely, more largely, perhaps, than strict economy would have justified. There are numerous other instances. Your Naval School at Annapolis began without any act of Congress authorizing it. The Secretary of the Navy thought proper to employ a portion of the naval funds towards that purpose, and out of that has grown the great Naval School at Annapolis, which you have recognized by law in various instances; but, I believe, always in appropriation bills. And you have recognized this employment for the purpose of meteorological reductions, just precisely as you have recognized the other two establishments of which I have spoken.

Now, I say this is a very useful thing, and Professor Espy's eminence in this regard is above all other men in our country. I have in my hand a French book, published in Paris, by Monsieur Maillet, a very eminent meteorologist, and I find in this book a brief account of Professor Espy's system, and then I find, in another part of the same book, some fifty pages devoted to the consideration of it. I find in it, also, a report made to the French Academy on the subject, by three very distinguished men, whose names will be recognized at once. The committee consisted of Arago, Pouillet, and Babinet. I will only trouble the Senate by reading a single paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. Read it in French.

Mr. PEARCE. It is not worth while to do that; but I will turn it into as good English as I can, as I go along. They say:

"The communication of Professor Espy contains a great quantity of well observed and well-described facts. His theory, in the actual state of science, is the only one which satisfies the phenomena; and calculated, according to the thought of Professor Espy, by the sum of the electrical action, when these intervene, it will leave nothing else to desire."

"Finally, for physical geography, for agriculture, for navigation, and meteorology, it will give us new explanations, and useful indications for ulterior researches, and correct many accredited errors. The commission expresses the hope that Mr. Espy may be placed by the Government of the United States in such a position as to pursue his important labors, and to complete his theory, already so remarkable, by means of all the observations and all the experience which his deductions from his theory will suggest to him, in a country so vast, where enlightened men are not wanting to science, which is, besides, a country of the most formidable meteors."

In conclusion they say:

"In consequence, the commission proposes to the academy to give its approbation to the work of Professor Espy, to entreat him to continue his researches, and above all, to well define the part which electricity plays in these great phenomena, of which a complete theory will be one of the most precious acquisitions of modern science."

This is the way in which they speak abroad of his labors. The gentleman from Florida proposes to strike out this clause, and put an end to them; because, as he says, Professor Espy is not a recognized officer of the Government. Well, sir, he has been for ten years recognized as an employee of the Government for this purpose. He was originally employed under the authority of law by the Secretary of the Navy, who was authorized so to do; and it is simply proposed to continue that which the law has repeatedly acknowledged as proper and made appropriations for. I see no reason for striking out, and I hope the clause will be retained.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, you will observe, that the honorable Senator has not suggested, as I remarked, that the name of Professor Espy has ever been introduced into an appropriation bill heretofore. Appropriations have been made for meteorological observations, leaving the Navy Department to have them made where they could be best made. Now, this clause in the bill recognizes Professor Espy as an officer of the Government when he has never been so employed. I submit, again, if the observations be material to us, they should be made at the Observatory, for which we appropriate money most liberally. If left here to obey the dictates of my own judgment, I should advocate the payment of Professor Espy; but I do not now feel at liberty to do so, because I consider it an abuse. We have as much right to appropriate money to any private individual who comes here and presents us a book upon a useful subject, but who has never been employed by us, as to make this appropriation for Professor Espy.

In view of the enormous expenditure now appropriated from year to year for our Observatory, with all the necessary apparatus and instruments for these observations, it is for the Senate to decide whether we are to be taxed with this $2,000 a year, having no recognized officer to do it, when we have all the means and appliances within our own control? With due deference to the honorable Senator's remarks about meteorology, I must say that I do not speak unknowingly on this subject; for, for ten years of my life it occupied my own attention. I think he hazards a great deal when he says we have not a lieutenant in the Navy who can make these observations. I should say that if he reduced the rank down to midshipman, he would still hazard a great deal. I should think very little of the intellect, and still less of the industry, of any passed midshipman in the service who could not observe all these facts with the proper instruments under his control.

Mr. PEARCE. I do not doubt their ability to make observations. That I did not deny; but, I said, to make these reductions and generalizations, which require a peculiar degree of information and theoretical ability, is a very different thing. Anybody, I suppose, can take an observation; but it is not everybody who can reduce a number of observations to anything like general principles, who can get new truths out of them; for that is what Professor Espy is doing. Scientific truth is obtained by deductions from a vast variety of observations. Anybody can make observations, I suppose—I do not think that any marvelous exploit—but it is something to be able to generalize, so as to get from them a great physical truth; and that is what Professor Espy has done, and the French Academy has recognized it.

Now, in order to meet the objection of the Senator from Florida, I should have no objection to amend the clause in the bill so as to make it read: "To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay for meteorological researches for the current fiscal year," &c. That would obviate the Senator's objection to the clause as it stands.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator will let us vote on this proposition, and then he can move to insert.

Mr. PEARCE. Very well.

Mr. COOPER. I hope that the appropriation for continuing the observations that Professor Espy has been engaged in for the last dozen years, will be retained. I presume it is known to the whole Senate, and indeed to the whole country, that this man has acquired quite a degree of reputation by his knowledge of meteorology and the deductions he has made from his observations.

These observations have been for years past applied practically, and have been found valuable in many respects. There is now scarcely an officer in the Navy, or in the commercial marine of the United States, who does not acknowledge the indebtedness that the mariner owes to Professor Espy. All of them have his tables; all of them are more or less acquainted with his theory; and all of them have recognized it to a greater or less extent.

Now, sir, he is continuing these observations from year to year, gathering more facts to be analyzed when the whole mass shall be collected. When there is no more required for a purpose that may do so much for science, than the pitiful sum proposed in the bill, I am sure it would be highly improper to strike it out. This gentleman is possessed of great industry; he has devoted himself, and is continually devoting himself to this branch of science and to making deductions from facts in connection with it; and he is more competent to do it, perhaps, than any other man now living in the world. At least we know of no one who has made the same progress in this department of science that he has done. I hope, therefore, that the appropriation will be made, and these observations continued.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be agreed to, and that the appropriation made by the House, in accordance with the uniform rule, with but one exception, I think, for the last ten years, will be retained. Mr. Espy is a man of great modesty and great merit, and he has contributed largely to the sum of human knowledge on that important branch of inquiry to which he has directed his attention. His labors have been very useful to our Navy and to the world; and I think that after we have made appropriations so extravagantly as we have done, now to strike out $2,000 for so useful a work, would be a very foolish piece of economy amidst the wide field of abuse that seems to exist in all departments of the Government. The effect would be to strike out what is really good, because you have put in things that are really bad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Maryland as moving to modify the clause before the question is taken on striking out?

Mr. PEARCE. No, sir, I will not make that offer now.

The motion to strike out was rejected.

Mr. GWIN. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move to amend the following clause: "To enable the Secretary of the Navy to test any improvements in steam boilers, or other steam machinery, with reference to the construction of steamers for the Navy of the United States, as in his opinion may be calculated to benefit the public service, $10,000," by striking out all after the word "other" to the word "service," inclusive, and to insert in lieu of the words thus stricken out, "improvements applicable to naval purposes;" so as to make the clause read: "To enable the Secretary of the Navy to test any improvements in steam boilers or other improvements applicable to naval purposes, $10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment is a merely verbal one, to strike out "from," and insert "for," in the appropriations for the Portsmouth navy-yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I am also directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer the following amendment, to come in after the appropriation for ordnance and ordnance stores:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay for the use of the steamer Columbus on the coast of California and in the Pacific, in pursuance of the contract entered into by Captain Dornin, of the sloop-of-war Portsmouth, on the first day of February, 1854, $113,638.

I will state, sir, that during the time expeditions were being fitted out in California for Sonora, it became necessary that the naval force of the United States on that coast should be increased to prevent the consummation of the schemes which were gotten up there for the purpose of taking possession of that country. There was no ship-of-war at the time in the Bay of San Francisco, and it became necessary to employ a steamship to go to the various bays and harbors for the purpose, if possible, of preventing a violation of the neutrality laws of the United States, and also, in the event of any disaster happening to the parties in those expeditions, to bring them back to the United States. The Secretary of the Navy directed the proper officers on the Pacific coast to charter a ship, if necessary. This vessel was chartered, and went down the coast, and did effective service. The appropriation is asked for in order to carry out the contract made by the proper officer.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not exactly understand this appropriation, and I should like to hear some further explanation of it. This is a very heavy sum of money to appropriate for the mere charter of a vessel under such circumstances, and I should like the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to give us some information upon it. Does the Secretary of the Navy recommend the appropriation?

Mr. GWIN. Yes, sir, I have his letter in my hand. The appropriation is to carry out his engagement. Here are all the documents. The amendment is exactly in the words of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PEARCE. Will the Senator state briefly what was the length of time this steamer was employed on this particular service.

Mr. GWIN. The documents show that she was on the coast about two months, or perhaps more. The steamer towed down the ship-of-war Portsmouth, and it is notorious that she was instrumental in suppressing the movements which were made there.

Mr. BENJAMIN. For how many days was this vessel chartered for $113,000?

Mr. GWIN. Here is the statement of the Secretary of the Navy, and I will ask to have it read.

Mr. BENJAMIN. What was the length of the service?

Mr. GWIN. I send the documents to the Secretary's desk, and ask that the letter from the Navy Department may be read.

• The Secretary read the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 1, 1854.

SIR: I send you the papers explaining fully the facts in regard to chartering the steamer Columbus to aid in suppressing unlawful expeditions upon Mexican territory. You will recollect that your committee passed a resolution advising this to be done, and that, on inquiry into the facts, the President concurred with me in authorizing Commander Dornin to employ a steamer, if necessary, and if it could be done on reasonable terms. Commander Dornin considered it necessary, and employed the steamer; and with its assistance he succeeded in accomplishing what he undertook. The opinion is expressed by the navy agent that the price was too high. If the committee move an amendment, I would suggest whether the Secretary of the Navy might not be authorized to pay the amount, unless, on inquiry, he shall become satisfied that a less sum was right and proper.

Respectfully,

J. C. DOBBIN.
Hon. WILLIAM M. GWIN, Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. GWIN. The amendment was drawn up with the discretionary power mentioned in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy; but that officer afterwards sent us a note stating that, as it was a contract which had been consummated, it was not necessary to insert those words, and accordingly the committee struck them out.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I must express my dissatisfaction with this matter. I am endeavoring to obtain from the committee some knowledge as to the length of time for which this steamer was chartered, and the rate at which she was chartered in order to ascertain what price we are paying for her services which can possibly amount to such an exorbitant sum as $113,000.

Mr. GWIN. There is among the papers a statement which I will ask the Secretary to read: The Secretary read the following letter:

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY, }
New York, July 5, 1854.

SIR: I had the honor this morning to receive your letter of the 3d instant, and I now inclose to you the following papers, as duplicates of them have not reached you: Bill for charter of steamer Columbus, approved by Lieutenant William H. Ball, amounting to..... $100,500
Bill for coal furnished the steamer Columbus, also approved by Lieutenant William H. Ball..... 12,305
Bill for expenses in coaling, allowed by Lieutenant F. Stanley..... 643
Bill for same, approved by Commander Dornin... 110
Bill for sundry expenses, approved by Lieutenant William H. Ball..... 80

$113,638

I further inclose the original letter of Lieutenant Ball surrendering the steamer Columbus to our lieutenant, and an original letter from R. P. Ashe, navy agent, stating that no payments have been made by him for services performed by the Columbus, and that Captain Dornin had advised him of his orders to Lieutenant Ball, to approve of the bills in accordance with the charter party.

Respectfully your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. ASPINWALL, President.

Hon. J. C. Dornin, Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The bills are what we want to get at. If the Secretary will read the bills, we may see what was the rate of the charter.

Mr. GWIN. One thousand five hundred dollars a day; and the usual price for coal was then thirteen dollars a ton, I think. That was the charter party. It was a contract made and consummated.

Mr. BENJAMIN. What was the size of the vessel?

Mr. GWIN. I do not know her size, but I believe it was fifteen hundred or two thousand tons.

Mr. WELLER. I do not see, sir, how we can very well avoid the payment of this sum. The Secretary of the Navy, it seems, directed the commanding officer of the squadron on the Pacific to charter a vessel, if, in his judgment, it was necessary. In pursuance of that order, he did charter a vessel, he being left to determine the question whether the necessity had arisen. I regret very much that such an order was given, because, in my judgment, the employment of a steamer in this service was not necessary to effect the object; and I do not know that any particular good resulted from it. And in the second place, the contract seems to be rather extravagant. A vessel could have been obtained for less price, I think, if proper means had been used. I do not suppose that this vessel is really worth more than $100,000. She is one of the second class of steamers upon the Pacific, one that is not ordinarily used now, I believe, in the transportation of passengers. But I do not see how we can honestly avoid the payment of the debt. The Department ordered the contract to be made. It has been made; the service has been rendered; and now we are called upon to pay for it. I am sorry for it, because it is located in the State of California, and it will be charged as an appropriation for that State. I think the citizens of California are able to preserve the neutrality laws, and deport themselves as good citizens, without the agency of any steamship being sent there to look after the men who go to Lower California or Sonora.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I cannot agree to this amendment, and I hope the Senate will not. I trust there will be some further investigation of the matter before we consent to such a charge as this. I have taken up this charter party as it has been laid on the table by the committee, in order to ascertain what was the tonnage of this vessel, and I find that the tonnage was left in blank. I find that she was a steam propeller, in the harbor of San Francisco; and there, without any act of Congress, with an authority, the nature of which I do not perfectly comprehend, upon a mere suggestion, as it appears, from the Navy Department here, authorizing the commanding officers there to procure the assistance of vessels, if they had not national vessels sufficient, a charter was made by which, for the service of a steam propeller for seventy days, a claim is made against this Government of $113,000 or $114,000—a sum which, according to the statement of one of the Senators from California, would seem to be more than the entire value of the vessel. The length of time through which the vessel was engaged was seventy days, and the bill for her service is $100,500, which is seventy days at $1,500 a day. The proposition is to pay $100,500 for the use of a vessel for seventy days, and then pay all her bills, or, at least, those expenses which are heaviest on steam vessels—to pay for coal, &c. We are charged $1,500 for the bare use of the vessel—a price admitted to be extravagant.

Mr. WELLER. I do not know that the price fixed on is extravagant, when compared with the contract made at New York for a steamer to go out in search of the wreck of the San Francisco. That, I believe, was $1,000 a day.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That may very well be, and that may be five times as much as was proper. I will not undertake to say how much was paid elsewhere; nor do I think it is a just mode of argument to justify one abuse by citing another as a precedent. I do not know whether this sum has been paid; but it appears to me that it must be obvious to any man who knows anything on these subjects, that this is a most exorbitant and shameful price. It is one which the Senate ought never to consent to, unless some further explanations are given than we have yet received. I should like to know, first, the legal authority by which this charter was made; and next, I should like to have some better proof than I can find in the papers in this case of the necessity of giving any such sum as was here agreed to be paid. The charter is here. It does agree to pay that price. But there is nothing before us to show that other steamers could not have been obtained at a lower price. There is nothing before us to show that if a steamer had been wanted for this length of time, it would not have been better for the commander, in behalf of the Navy of the United States, to give $100,000 for the propeller—and then it would have belonged to us—rather than to have us to pay for it, and then to leave it in possession of the party after receiving its full value. It is an operation which I think the Senate will not be disposed to ratify.

Mr. DAWSON. What is the amount proposed to be paid?

Mr. BENJAMIN. One hundred and thirteen thousand six hundred and thirty-eight dollars.

Mr. DAWSON. For how many days was the vessel employed?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Seventy days.

Mr. PRATT. May I inquire of my friend from Louisiana whether he can turn to the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, conferring authority on the naval officer to make the charter party?

Mr. BENJAMIN. That letter itself I find is not here; but I have before me the letter of the Secretary of the Navy of the 1st of August, 1854, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this body, in which the Secretary says:

"I send you the papers explaining fully the facts in regard to chartering the steamer Columbus to aid in suppressing unlawful expeditions in Mexican territory. You will recollect that your committee passed a resolution advising this to be done, and that on inquiring into the facts, the President concurred with me in authorizing Commander Dornin to employ a steamer, if necessary, and if it could be done on reasonable terms. Commander Dornin considered it necessary, and employed the steamer, and with its assistance, he succeeded in accomplishing what he undertook. The opinion is expressed by the navy agent that the price was too high."

The allusion, as I understand, is to the navy agent at San Francisco, an officer of the Government on the spot, who expressed the opinion that the price was too high. The letter proceeds:

"If the committee move an amendment, I would suggest, whether the Secretary of the Navy might not be authorized to pay the amount, unless, on inquiry, he shall become satisfied that a less sum was right and proper."

Now, the amendment is reported without discretion to the Secretary of the Navy to allow a less sum if he should consider it right and proper on examination. That qualification has been stricken out by the committee for reasons which the Senator from California has stated, which were satisfactory to him and to the committee; but I still consider that this is too important a matter, and too large a sum, for us to consent to this payment without further investigation and further explanation.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, in the letter which has been read, the Secretary of the Navy stated that he pursued this course on the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs. When it was supposed that these expeditions were being fitted out, and would probably be mischievous on the Pacific coast, that committee passed an informal resolution, that if, in his opinion, it was necessary, he himself should charter a vessel. At that time it was understood there was one at Panama which could, within thirty days, sweep the whole gulf of California, and accomplish the object. That was the extent of the action of the Naval Committee. It was done for the purpose of preventing the landing of these expeditions, if possible, and to prevent a collision between the expeditionists and citizens of Mexico. In addition to that, it was supposed that the expeditions had been got up by such small numbers of individuals that they would undoubtedly fail, and it was feared that some catastrophe would happen to them, such as happened to the Havana expeditions. It was feared that, as soon as they landed, the Mexicans would take them prisoners, and instantly put them to death. It was thought that the better plan was, if possible, to prevent their landing, or to prevent any disaster to them, by arresting them, if possible, and bringing them back to the United States for trial. The Secretary of the Navy, instead of making a charter, as suggested by the Naval Committee, concluded to send authority to the commander on the naval station at San Francisco; and that officer, who is a gallant officer of the Navy, chartered this vessel. The Senator from Louisiana says it was a shameful transaction. I should like to know on what authority he announces that it was a shameful transaction? I should like to know what authority he has for saying any such thing?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I stated it on the face of the transaction; and I do not hesitate to say that, on the face of the transaction, it is a shameful waste. I say it on my responsibility as a Senator.

Mr. GWIN. That is the Senator's statement, but it will not be sustained by any man who will examine the subject fairly and impartially. The price may be too high, but is there anything shameful in that? The officer was authorized by the head of the Department to make this contract. He made it. The navy agent—so the Secretary informs us, and I suppose the documents bear it out—says the price was too high. Suppose it was too high; what was there shameful in the transaction? The officer thought it was necessary for the public service that he should charter this vessel; otherwise he would not have done it. This gentleman is absent. He is not here to defend himself. So far as any imputations on him personally are concerned, I will repel them. There is not an officer in the public service who stands higher.

Mr. ATCHISON called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and they were ordered.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I should like to suggest an amendment to the amendment, in compliance with the recommendation of the head of the Navy Department, so as to provide that it be left to his discretion.

Mr. WELLER. So it is.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That was in the original amendment, but it was stricken out. I desire to have that clause restored.

Mr. GWIN. I am perfectly willing to agree to that. The Secretary of the Navy, after he sent to the committee the letter which has been read, sent me a private note yesterday morning, stating that, inasmuch as it was a specific contract, he did not see that the amount could be reduced. I read it to the committee, and they agreed to strike out that clause in the original amendment. I believe the Senator from Pennsylvania was not present in the committee at the time.

Mr. WELLER. I can vote for this amendment very cheerfully with the modification suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania and accepted by my colleague. I should desire to have the Secretary of the Navy examine the matter before this large amount of money is paid. I think it was last year that my colleague and myself made an effort to get the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a steam propeller on the Pacific coast for revenue purposes; one that could be used, not only for revenue purposes, but in order to enforce your neutrality laws. Then, I understood, he could have obtained a propeller, the Constitution, belonging to the same class of vessels with this, for $75,000. The Department did not see proper to accede to that proposition. We could obtain very readily last year a steamer of the same class for $75,000 or $100,000, and thus have saved the expense to the Government of chartering vessels whenever the exigency required it.

Now, if this contract has been entered into under instructions given to Captain Dornin, it must be carried out. I am very sure that no gentleman who is acquainted with Captain Dornin would reflect, in the least degree, on his integrity. He is one of the most gallant and fearless officers in the Navy; one of the most faithful and honest men, I undertake to say, who is attached to the public service; and the last man, with whom I am acquainted, who would be disposed to enter into collusion with others to defraud the Government. He may have supposed at the time that the immediate necessity demanded that this vessel should be chartered at once; and being unable, perhaps, to obtain the service of any other vessel, he was compelled to contract for this, at what now is regarded as an extravagant rate. I suppose that was the case. We have very few steamers upon the Pacific ocean disengaged. It is very rarely that you can divert one from the regular trade. It may be that Captain Dornin, feeling that there was a pressing immediate necessity, was induced to take this vessel at the rate fixed on, $1,500 a day. Now, I shall be perfectly satisfied to vote for the amendment in the shape in which it has been placed, leaving the Secretary of the Navy to pay the amount, if, in his judgment, it be right and proper. If there has been anything dishonest in this contract, as a matter of course the money appropriated will be withheld.

Mr. PRATT. I think everybody will admit, Mr. President, that there has been an exorbitant expenditure of the public money. I do not intend to attach blame at all to any naval officer who has been connected with this matter; but we find that the Secretary of the Navy bases his justification for the expenditure of this money upon a resolution stated by him to have been passed by the Naval Committee of the Senate. A committee of this body, Congress being in session, passed a resolution, either directory or requestive, I do not know its terms, on the Secretary of the Navy to charter a steam vessel to do some particular service. The Secretary justifies himself for this expenditure by reference to that resolution. He directed this charter party to be made, if necessary. Predicated upon this resolution of a committee of the Senate, the steamer was chartered at $1,500 a day, the Government paying all the expenses of coaling the boat. All this was done in virtue of a resolution of one of the committees of this body. I understand, from the reading of the report of the Department by the honorable Senator from Louisiana, that this is the ground on which the Secretary of the Navy bases his action, and this is the ground upon which, I understand, he justifies himself for having ordered this charter-party to be made. Looking at the whole matter in this aspect, it is one of great consequence to the country, and of great consequence to the Senate. If one committee can, by resolution, direct the expenditure of public money, or order particular services to be performed which will render necessary the expenditure of the public money, every other committee in the Senate can do the same thing.

Mr. BENJAMIN. And the Senate was in session at the time.

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir, the Senate was in session. If a public necessity existed for the employment of the vessel, the committee, on showing the existence of that public necessity, could have got through both Houses, in the course of half an hour, a bill or resolution giving authority for the employment of the national vessels, or the chartering of other vessels, in the absence of national vessels, to discharge the duty. I know nothing, of course, of this matter, except what is developed in the papers which have been read; but it appears, from the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, that during the session of Congress, by virtue of a resolution of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this body, he authorized this charter party to be made, provided the naval officer on that station should deem it necessary. The charter party was accordingly made, by which a vessel, worth less than $100,000, as I understand, was chartered for seventy days, at an expense of over $113,600.

Mr. GWIN. It was not necessary for the Senator from Maryland to attack the Committee on Naval Affairs. If time would permit, we could defend ourselves fully from the assault which has been made upon us. All that was said by the Committee on Naval Affairs was, that if, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, the public interests would be promoted by putting a stop to those expeditions by chartering a vessel, the committee would, so far as their action was concerned, recommend that a proper appropriation be made. That was the full extent of the action of the Naval Committee. They never pledged the Senate to anything. They never pledged the Secretary of the Navy to anything whatever.

Mr. PRATT. I certainly did not intend to attack the Committee on Naval Affairs, or to charge them with anything improper; but, sir, we are looking to the powers of the Senate and the powers of this Government. Whatever may have been the intention of the committee, certainly the Secretary of the Navy does claim the right to authorize this contract upon the resolution of that committee. I do not desire to attach blame to the honorable Senator from California, or to any of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, because I presume they only exercised a power which they supposed they possessed. I want to understand whether any committee possesses such a power. I wish to ask, for information, how a committee claim the authority to advise, direct, or request one of the executive officers of the Government to do what the committee may think necessary for the public service?

Mr. JOHNSON. This is a question which has detained us for some time, and it seems likely to detain us longer. I would suggest, therefore, whether it would not be better to let it lie over for the present. The amount charged in this case is admitted to be unconscionable. I think it would be better to let the question lie over until the next session, and give us a full opportunity to investigate it.

Mr. MALLORY. I cannot permit this matter to go by without a word of explanation. The honorable Senator from Maryland has assumed that the Secretary of the Navy authorized the chartering of this vessel, upon the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs. That is not so; and, therefore, his argument, being based on improper premises, goes for nothing. It was the act of the President. On inquiry into the circumstances attending the unlawful expeditions which it was alleged, were emanating from California, the President authorized the Secretary of the Navy to charter a steamer. The Secretary of the Navy, by the proper officer, did charter one. It is true the Secretary, in this communication, speaks of the Naval Committee of the Senate having passed a resolution of which I have no recollection; but I presume it was passed in the ordinary course of business to be brought before the Senate for action. The Secretary, in his communication to the chairman of the committee, says:

"I send you the papers explaining fully the facts in regard to chartering the steamer Columbus to aid in suppressing unlawful expeditions upon Mexican territory. You will recollect that your committee passed a resolution advising this to be done, and that, on inquiry into the facts, the President concurred with me in authorizing Commander Dornin to employ a steamer, if necessary, and if it could be done on reasonable terms."

Now, so far as I have any knowledge of the circumstances, I have no recollection of any such resolution, but I presume it was one to be brought before the Senate for action. But the Secretary says expressly, that the vessel was chartered by his orders, under the direction of the President.

Mr. PRATT. But he undertakes to justify his action by reason of the resolution of the committee to which he refers, in the paper which has been read by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, as I understand the proposition before the Senate, it is this: There was an unlawful expedition fitting out in California for the invasion of Sonora, and the Government here very properly thought it ought to be arrested. On examination they found that there was no national ship which was in a condition to be sent there, and they thought it wise and best to send out authority to charter a steamer for that purpose. This vessel was accordingly chartered. The proper officer was intrusted with authority to charter a vessel, and he chartered this one at $1,500 a day. It is a very large sum, I admit, but it was a contract—a contract made under an exigency—and to sustain the credit of the country, to sustain the integrity and honor of the country, and to prevent very disastrous consequences in our foreign relations. It seems to me, then, that the failure of the Government to make payment, whether the sum be large or small, would be much to be deplored.

But, in looking at the case, I am sure it will be seen that this sum, although it is large, is not so extravagant and so unusual as is supposed. The vessel was worth $400,000. The charter of her per day was $1,500. That, though a large compensation, was still not a very extravagant one, in consideration of the circumstances, for she was diverted from her regular occupation, took new hazards, and was diverted from the use of her owners. The Navy Department, it will be seen by reference to official documents, has granted demurrage to as large an amount as $3,500 per day for steamers upon the Pacific coast. Everything on that coast, we know, is on a grand scale of expense. I hope it is coming down; but we cannot bring things down any faster than time and circumstances will enable us to do. There is nothing unreasonable, it seems to me, therefore, in making this allowance, and I do not see that we can have any more propitious time for the settlement of the question.

Mr. STUART. This bill is evidently going to take a good deal of time in its discussion, and I move to lay it aside for a few minutes that we may consider the resolution which I laid on the table yesterday for the extension of the session.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator will let us go on with this bill. We are ready to vote on this amendment, and there are but a few more to be offered.

Mr. STUART. There will be a great many amendments offered to this bill. If we are to do anything at this session, and do it with propriety and understanding, it seems to me that we ought to extend the session until next Monday. I believe that to be the opinion of several gentlemen. I do not know whether it is the opinion of a majority of both Houses of Congress. For the purpose of taking the sense of the Senate on that subject, I move to lay this bill aside for a few minutes, to take up that resolution.

Mr. GWIN. Those few minutes will be hours.

Mr. TOOMBS. If the purpose of the Senator from Michigan cannot be accomplished without unanimous consent, I object.

Mr. GWIN. So do I.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER.) In the opinion of the Chair, this bill can be laid aside by a majority.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I think the Senator from Michigan had better let his resolution lie over until this evening. If we were to pass it now, the Senate would adjourn at five o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion of the Senator from Michigan is in order.

Mr. GWIN. When an amendment is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir. The question is on the motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. GWIN. Until what hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour has not been named.

Mr. STUART. It is now half past twelve. Suppose we postpone the further consideration of the bill to one o'clock. I make that motion.

Mr. GWIN. I hope it will be voted down.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I hope we shall now have the question on the amendment.

Mr. CASS. Allow me to make one suggestion. We have but twenty-four hours of the session remaining, and certainly if we argue every point before us we cannot get through. Is it not best to make a brief statement, and let members, for once, judge for themselves? It seems to me, at this stage of the session, that that is the part of prudence. We can judge, in most of these cases, by a very brief statement of the proposition.

The question being taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Evans, Fish, Gwin, Mallory, Morton, Rockwell, Rusk, Seward, Wade, and Weller—11.
NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Brown, Cass, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, Stuart, Toombs, Toucey, and Walker—30.

So the amendment was rejected.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, (with the concurrence of the Senate,) That in the enrollment of the bill of the House making appropriations for fortifications, &c., the word "not" be inserted after the word "fortifications," in the last item of the bill; the said word having been accidentally omitted to be placed there in engrossing the bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, and concurred therein.

The item where the word "not" should be is: "For contingent expenses of the fortifications not herein mentioned," &c.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. GWIN. The Committee on Naval Affairs have further instructed me to offer the following amendment, to come in after the appropriation for the pay of the Marine Corps:

That the non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the United States Marine Corps shall be entitled to and receive the same pay and bounty for reenlisting as are now or may hereafter be allowed to the non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the infantry of the Army.

I will state that in the Army appropriation bill there is a provision increasing the pay of the privates and non-commissioned officers of the Army, and, if that shall pass, the committee thought it proper that the non-commissioned officers and privates of the marines should have the same pay as the non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I am also instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer the following amendment, to come in after the appropriations for navy-yards:

And the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of a naval depot on the right bank of the river Mississippi, in descending, at the site now owned and held by the United States for that purpose, near the city of New Orleans, and for such buildings and improvements as may be judged necessary for the accommodation of the United States vessels of war in that quarter.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. GWIN. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs is to come in immediately before the appropriations for the Marine Corps:

Provided, That the law approved the 3d of March, 1843, directing advertisements for materials for the Navy, be, and is hereby, so far modified as to require the classes only of materials to be stated in the advertisement, and bidders to be referred to the several navy agents and chiefs of bureaus, who will furnish them with printed schedules giving a full description of each and every article, with dates of delivery, &c.

This is recommended by the Department, and will be of great economy. It will dispense with the necessity of publishing in the advertisement full lists of articles.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I am further directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer the following amendment as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the provisions contained in the act of the 22d of April, 1854, adding a percentage to the pay of clerks employed at the navy-yard in Washington city, be construed so as to include the clerks and messenger in the office of the navy agent for said yard, and the messenger in the commandant's office.

I will state that, by that act, an increase of compensation was made to the officers in the navy-yard. The navy agent here, however, for the convenience of the Government and the Department, does not hold his office in the yard; and, therefore, while the naval storekeeper and all the clerks in the navy-yard get the benefits of that act, the clerks of the navy agent do not get any increase. This is to equalize all the clerks attached to the navy-yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I have but one more amendment to offer, and then I shall be done. It is in the appropriation for the navy-yard at Memphis, Tennessee, to strike out $13,400, and insert $30,400. I will state that this sum is less than one half of the estimate of the Department, the estimate being $65,000 for that navy-yard. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. PEARCE. I think it would be much better to strike out the whole appropriation than to enlarge it. The idea of a navy-yard at Memphis is a perfect delusion. Congress made a great mistake in ever establishing a navy-yard seven hundred miles from the sea, upon a river whose waters, during a large portion of the year, are not of a sufficient depth to allow vessels of a draught of more than seven feet to ascend it. I believe this navy-yard is wholly useless. I know the whole history of it; and I think, if we are to appropriate a dollar more than is already in the bill, it will be better to strike out the whole appropriation.

Mr. BELL. Now, Mr. President, I should like to know what the honorable Senator from Maryland knows so much more than any other honorable Senator. Let him inform us why it would be better to strike out the whole of this appropriation. The honorable Senator says he knows the whole history of it. What was it? I should like to learn it.

Mr. PEARCE. Perhaps you would not like to hear it.

Mr. BELL. I was not here when this navy-yard was commenced, but I know the Government has gone on and established a navy-yard there, and appropriated some $700,000 or $800,000 for it, and for building it up; perhaps the expenditure has gone as high as $800,000 or $900,000. It is said that it is seven hundred miles from the seaboard. I admit that that is a formidable objection; but a great many honorable Senators and members of Congress, generally thought a navy-yard could be established there upon great public principles, in reference to what is called our great inland sea—the Mississippi. Some honorable Senators thought it would be better to establish a navy-yard at Memphis, instead of at Baton Rouge or at New Orleans, because it was in a latitude where more continuous and uniform health could be expected. It was established, too, in the neighborhood of the finest building materials, of fine white-oak and other timber used in ship-building, and in the vicinity of the finest iron and coal to be found anywhere in the United States. As I have stated already, it is above the latitude of those dangerous epidemics which sometime afflict the lower Mississippi at New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Vicksburg. Memphis is about the line where the advantages of health are expected. These considerations undoubtedly influenced Congress in the original establishment of this yard.

But, sir, I will dismiss all considerations as to the wisdom and expediency, or sound policy of the establishment of a navy-yard at Memphis originally, and come to the question of whether, after you have expended $800,000 or $900,000 there; after you have gone on to erect buildings, and after the Government has, as I learn, independently of ship-building, the finest establishment there which exists in the United States, you will not appropriate a sufficient sum. I am told, by those who seem to know a great deal about it, that you have over $100,000 worth of the finest machinery there. I have looked at it, and inspected it, and I understand it is superior to all similar machinery in the country.

I learn that it has been the policy of the Department to make Memphis a place for the manufacture of cordage for the Navy of the United States, and they have fine machinery there for that purpose. The consideration which led to this view was that it was in the vicinity of the finest hemp grown in the United States—the Missouri and Kentucky hemp.

It may be true, sir, as the Senator from Maryland says, that, during some seasons of the year, only vessels of seven feet water could pass over the bars in the Mississippi. I do not know whether that is really so or not. Below Memphis there may be an occasional bar in the lowest stage of the water; but for nine or ten months in the year, I am sure, the largest class vessels may be floated in safety up to that point.

What is now wanting in the completion of this yard? It will cost $400,000 or $500,000, perhaps, to make it adapted, in all respects, to the construction of vessels of war. I do not know that it would be important to discriminate between the largest class of vessels and the lowest, or to take the medium class. Perhaps none but the medium class could be constructed and floated out there. Still, that would be an acquisition. The time may come, sir, when we shall have a contest for the command of the Gulf of Mexico; and then a navy-yard seven hundred miles from the sea-coast, on the Mississippi river, may be a very valuable acquisition for the maintenance of our rights and our sovereignty in the Gulf. There can be no substantial objection on that ground.

Now, sir, as to the pitiful appropriation proposed in the bill, you might as well strike it out altogether. The appropriation in the bill is $13,400 "for excavation and embankment, smith's shop, storehouse, and repairs of all kinds." What is $13,400 for such a purpose? You might as well strike out the amount at once. The Navy Department, who have no disposition to favor the navy-yard at Memphis, recommended a much larger sum. The commandant, and the other officers of the Government having control of this yard, and appointed for the purpose, recommended, I believe, about $500,000 as necessary to complete the yard, and put it in a position where dilapidation could not go on to destroy the works which had already been in part constructed. The Department reduced that recommendation down to $65,000, which, with all their notions of the inferior virtue of this yard, compared with other yards, they recommended to Congress as the minimum sum. Now, the House of Representatives have reduced the amount to $13,400. I prefer greatly that the Senate should strike out the entire appropriation, because $13,400 is a mockery. I will not argue the question; but if you mean to preserve the works which you have already constructed there, at an enormous cost, you ought to make the appropriation at least $30,000. Situated, as that yard is, on the margin of the Mississippi, where another stream, Wolf river, flows into it, we are liable to the loss of more than $32,000 of the work already completed, if we have no greater appropriation than that. But, sir, I trust the Senate, even although they may hereafter conclude that it would be economical and prudent to dispense with this yard altogether, will appropriate enough to preserve the valuable public works which are already constructed, and which are as valuable as those at Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, or at any other navy-yard in the Union. I have understood they have gone on with the works there with a view to the manufacture of cordage, because they supposed they could get there the best material, and could manufacture it at a less cost than at any other point in the United States.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I do not think I ever assume to know more than all Congress, or than anybody else; but I have an undoubted right to give the opinion which I entertain, and it is not to be influenced or controlled by the opinions of others. I simply expressed my own opinion; and I am very sure that, if all of us were compelled to say what we think, whether we desired to do so or not, nine members out of ten in the Senate would say that a navy-yard never should have been established at Memphis. When I said I knew all about the history of this yard, I meant this: that Congress, on the occasion of its establishment, yielded to the anxious solicitude of certain gentlemen, then members of this body and the other House, under the pressure of local influences. Further than that I need not go. I know the proposition was first received with a smile of mirth on every countenance, but at last it was obtained; and it seems that the Government has gone on and expended $900,000 or $1,000,000 on this yard. The Senator tells us that dilapidation has already begun. In ten years we have expended nearly $1,000,000, and never yet built a ship there, and I undertake to say, never will build one. It may be a good place for a national rope-walk for the manufacture of cordage, but that is not a navy-yard. My opinion is, that we ought never to have established a navy-yard there. We have no use for one at that point. If dilapidation has begun already, I think we had better stop it at once. I will not consume the time of the Senate on this question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland undertakes to adjudicate this question, I think, without any facts being before him. He says a navy-yard ought never to have been established at Memphis. Well, sir, the Congress of the United States thought differently. That is a mere difference of opinion between the Congress of the United States and the Senator from Maryland; and I should hesitate long to take the opinions of any one Senator as against the combined action of the American Congress. But, sir, that is not all. At the last session of Congress, the Naval Committee sent to you one of the strongest reports I ever read, in favor of the continuation of this yard as a navy-yard under the government of the United States. The Senator says, however, that it ought to be abolished. That is his opinion; but I entertain a very different view. I undertake to say, that vessels can be built there cheaper than at any other navy-yard in the United States, and of as good material as any to be found in the United States. I will not set up my judgment against that of the Senator from Maryland, but I speak the opinion of every commandant who has been at the navy-yard from its organization to the present day. I have before me a report of the present commandant of that yard, in which he presents to the Department the expenditure necessary to carry out that work, amounting to $700,000, and he has a high opinion of its importance.

The Senator says that it had better be abolished. I would ask that Senator if he can abolish it without a violation of the faith, the honor, and the integrity of this nation. The State of Tennessee and the city of Memphis gave to the Government of the United States a large plat of land, worth now about $500,000, expressly upon the condition that the Government should establish a navy-yard there. Now, before Congress attempt to abolish it, I wish them to go back, and retrocede to us the land which they have taken. I would much prefer that they should do that, rather than go on with the mere pretense of keeping up a navy-yard by appropriating $13,000 a year. That is not enough to keep up the embankments which are put there from one year to another. Your commandant there, one of your own officers, having charge of the yard, sends his estimates, and tells you that it will take $700,000 to carry out the contract which the Government has made with the people of Tennessee to establish a navy yard there. The Department reduced it to $65,000; the House of Representatives reduced it to $13,000; and now the Senator from Maryland wants to strike it out altogether. Of the latter two propositions, I think that of the Senator from Maryland is the best. You had better strike out the whole appropriation rather than give only $13,000, for it will be that much money thrown away; but if you mean to carry out the obligations of the Government in good faith, make an appropriation adequate to carry out the work.

It is said that this navy-yard is seven hundred miles from the sea. What difference does that make if you have as good transportation from Memphis to the ocean as from Baltimore to the ocean? Does it follow that you must be on salt water to enjoy any of the benefits or patronage of this Government? That seems to be the doctrine of some gentlemen here, but I do not subscribe to it. I can tell the honorable Senator from Maryland, that, during eight months of the year, a vessel which can go out from the port of New Orleans can go out from the port of Memphis. The shallowest point is at the mouth of the river, which one of the appropriations in the river and harbor bill is for the purpose of deepening. During eight months of the year, whenever you can go out from New Orleans, you can go from Memphis.

I know, sir, this is no time to debate the question. It is reserved until the last hours of the session, and then we are called upon to surrender the rights of our constituents, or we are charged with consuming the public time, and delaying the appropriation bills. That is not my fault. Whatever charges may be made, I must protest against such an appropriation as is here proposed of only $13,000 for such a purpose. If you intend to carry out, in good faith, the object in which you have engaged, a much larger sum is necessary. You have at this point some of the finest machinery in the Union, which has cost the Government $110,000. That machinery stands still, and your $13,000 will hardly keep it in repair. For what purpose did you buy it? For what purpose did you put it there, unless you meant to operate it. You seem to have been diverted from the original purpose of establishing a navy-yard at Memphis, and have converted it into a rope-walk. You have built your houses, put your machinery in the houses, and there the machinery stands, and you do not give money enough to buy hemp to carry it on. That may be carrying out the good faith of the Government, but I do not so understand it.

Mr. ATCHISON. Mr. President, I was a part and parcel of this Memphis navy-yard transaction, as well as my friend from Maryland. We were here at the time it was proposed by a Senator from Tennessee, who was then a candidate for Governor of that State.

Mr. BELL. Do you mean me?

Mr. ATCHISON. No, sir, you were not in the Senate at the time. The question was asked of the Senator to whom I refer, for what purpose will you establish a navy-yard at Memphis? Is it for the purpose of building vessels of war? Is it for the purpose of building mercantile vessels? Is it for the purpose of repairing vessels, and if so how are you to get those vessels to the Gulf of Mexico after you build them at Memphis, when for a large portion of the year you have not over seven or nine feet of water? The response was made, (and triumphantly, because we all voted for it,) that vessels were to be brought from the Gulf of Mexico, to be repaired, to Memphis, seven hundred or one thousand miles from the gulf. They were to be brought by camels. My friend from Maryland will remember it well.

Mr. PEARCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATCHISON. And, sir, when the question was asked what kind of camels they were, the Asiatic or Armenian camel, the camel with one or two humps, it was said that these camels are iron or wooden boxes to be exhausted and placed on each side of the vessel, and the vessel is to be lightened by those camels, and then in that manner brought up from the Gulf of Mexico to Memphis. [Laughter.] Yes, sir, every word of this is true. That was the argument. Now, I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee, whether a vessel was ever built at the Memphis navy-yard, and whether a vessel was ever repaired at that navy-yard?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will answer the Senator with a great deal of pleasure. There never has been a vessel built there, because the yard has never been completed. It is impossible that we can build a vessel when you will not permit us to finish the yard. We have got the rope-walk, but you will not even let us work that.

Mr. ATCHISON. Well, sir, why has not the yard been finished? It has been some eight or ten years since the original bill for the establishment of that navy-yard was passed; and why has it not been finished? The reason is, that it has been found to be impracticable. So soon as the excitement under which the bill got through both Houses of Congress, passed away, it was found to be an act of folly on the part of the Government to establish a navy-yard at Memphis, or at any other point away from the sea coast. Then it was argued that we might well establish a rope-walk at Memphis. There was something in that. I admit it, and I am willing to make the necessary appropriation for the establishment of a place there to make rope—to make sails, if you please.

Mr. BELL. I wish to know if the honorable Senator from Missouri, and the honorable Senator from Maryland, supported the original proposition?

Mr. PEARCE. I always opposed it.

Mr. ATCHISON. I believe I voted for it; but I will explain that matter.

Mr. BELL. And yet the Senator from Missouri, a western man, denounces it now.

Mr. ATCHISON. I will explain that, as the Senator requires an explanation. There were two gentlemen from Tennessee at that time—one a member of the Senate and the other a member of the House of Representatives—the one a Whig and the other a Democrat—candidates for Governor of Tennessee.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Who were they? Mr. ATCHISON. Brown and Foster. They were candidates for Governor of the State of Tennessee. One would say to his Whig friends, "If you will give me this appropriation for a navy-yard at Memphis, I think I can triumphantly carry the State." [Laughter.] The other would go to his Democratic friends and tell them, "Unless you give me the navy-yard at Memphis I shall certainly be defeated." [Renewed laughter.] Under this state of things, what could either Whig or Democrat do? We were under a kind of duress. We were bound to vote this appropriation in both Houses. But, Mr. President, it seems to me that the proposition made by the Senator from Maryland is the only true one: to strike out the appropriation and cede the lands and works to the State of Tennessee.

Mr. GWIN. I hope we shall have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. My friend from California must pardon me if I detain the Senate for a few moments. He will very well see that I cannot do less. If the honorable Senator from Missouri lent himself to that sort of political bargain and intrigue between Foster and Brown, and suffered himself and the Government to be mulcted in this way, I have no fault to find with him, but the facts remain the same. Whatever Mr. Foster and Mr. Brown may have said to their party friends to induce them to vote for the original appropriation, I will not permit myself to believe for a single moment that the honorable Senator from Missouri lent himself to vote money simply to subserve the purposes of either of those gentlemen as candidates for office in Tennessee. I will not allow myself to think that.

But when we go back to the facts, they stand as I have stated them, and it is simply a question whether this Government will carry out this work or abandon it. I say to you, in all frankness, you had better abandon it than go on as you have done, and unless you mean to carry out, in good faith, the contract you have made, you had better cede the lands to us at once. The Senator from Missouri says he is willing to vote for a rope-walk there. He voted for the original proposition for a navy-yard. He complains that no boats have been built there, and yet he refuses to give us the means of building vessels, and after the Government has converted it into a rope-walk, and has the machinery, and houses, and everything necessary except the money to buy the hemp, he stands still and will not even vote that. His consistency, I think, is a very strange thing. I hope he will remember his own vote, and for the sake of Brown and Foster will carry out this project, and at least permit us to have a rope-walk, if he will not allow us to build vessels.

Mr. STUART called for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Dawson, Foot, Geyer, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Rusk, Seward, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, and Weller—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Walker—24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer the following amendment:

Sec. 1. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, within thirty days from the passage hereof, shall assemble a naval board, to consist of three captains, two commanders, and two lieutenants, which board shall investigate the conduct, the character, and standing of all the officers of the grades of captains, commanders, lieutenants, passed midshipmen, and officers in the line of promotion; and shall ascertain and report to the Secretary of the Navy, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, every officer of said grades that said board shall deem incompetent or disqualified to discharge promptly his whole duty, ashore and afloat. And in every case the said board shall report in two separate classes such officers as the interests of the service require should be dismissed, and such as should be placed out of the line of promotion, with its reasons for the same: Provided, That upon said board, officers shall not investigate, vote, or report on officers of a senior grade. Immediately upon the return of the reports of the board to the Secretary of the Navy, he shall, so far as the President shall approve the same, cause those officers who may be reported for dismissal to be dismissed the service, with six months' sea-service pay; and those who may be reported for withdrawal from the line of promotion to be so withdrawn upon pay, which shall not be more than three fifths, nor less than one fifth their sea service pay respectively, to be determined and approved by the President: Provided, That passed midshipmen and masters in the line of promotion so reported in the second class shall be dropped from the service, and shall thereupon receive one year's sea service pay. The said board shall be convened and regulated as the Secretary may direct, and he shall ascertain, in such manner as he may deem just and expedient, the service, standing, and character of the officers of the grades aforesaid, and submit the same to the board for its better information: Provided, That the promotions which may be made in consequence of such dismissals and withdrawals shall reduce the grade of commanders to seventy, which shall hereafter be the number of said grade.

I will say, in a few words, Mr. President, that this amendment, in effect, has passed this body twice; it has again been carefully considered by the committee; and it has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. It has been modified to meet some suggestions of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives. It is but one clause, and relates entirely to retiring and dismissing.

Mr. CASS. I wish barely to suggest whether, at this stage of the session, it is proper to enter into the consideration of such an important question. I would rather see the proposition in print, so as to understand its bearing fully, before voting on it. One or two things in it struck me unfavorably from the reading of the amendment. Certainly I am not prepared to vote on it at this time.

Mr. WELLER. I believe the whole subject embraced in the amendment has been fully discussed at this session.

Mr. CASS. That may be; but I should prefer to see it in print. It makes a great change in our naval system; and before I vote on it I should like to examine it and understand it.

Mr. MALLORY. Let me say to my honorable friend from Michigan that there is no branch of the public service which stands in need of a measure of this kind, so much as the Navy. This is a proposition which has been carefully considered. It has been modified to meet some just views of the House committee. It is a measure which passed this body after full discussion. It was investigated by the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. Fish] and myself in the Naval Committee. I think it meets the views and wishes of the entire Navy, and it will do more to resuscitate it than anything I know of. It will save money to the Government.

Mr. BAYARD. My impression is that this amendment is substantially different from the naval reform bill which has passed the Senate at this session; and I wish to know from the honorable Senator from Florida whether such is not the fact? I do not like the idea of having a secret inquisition upon the characters of men without any charges being presented against them. I do not like the idea of giving authority to assemble such a board of officers to pass on the merits or demerits of all their fellow-officers in the service. I have a recollection of one board that was convened before, and I wish I had here the protest of one of the most gallant officers in your service (Commodore Stewart) against the action of that board, which made a lasting impression on my mind of the impropriety of all organizations of that kind. At all events, I should like further time to consider this proposition. It does not seem to me to resemble substantially that which passed the Senate in the naval reform bill of this session.

Mr. MALLORY. I will reply to my friend from Delaware by simply saying that this is an improvement on that bill. It meets his view exactly. The board has to give its reasons, and those reasons are to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy and the President. The investigation will therefore be thorough.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that, but the danger is that it removes the responsibility from the Secretary of the Navy, and throws it on nobody. I do not like these boards. I would rather, if this thing is to be done, the Secretary of the Navy should do it on his own personal responsibility, and let him stand before the country as to the justice or injustice of his action. If we are to have the Navy reorganized on this basis, do not throw the responsibility on a board where everybody does it, and nobody does it.

Mr. MALLORY. Then it never will be done. Mr. GWIN. It is perfectly evident that the Secretary of the Navy cannot act unless he gets information, and he cannot get it unless some board lays it before him. I wish to press on the Senate the necessity of adopting this amendment; and I will read, omitting the names, a list of some lieutenants in the Navy whom we have been paying, but who do no service, and are constantly overslaughed. The Naval Committee wished to know why these officers were constantly overslaughed, and they received an answer from the Department. I will read it to the Senate. No. 1 was "passed over in 1832 as physically and mentally incompetent." For twenty-two years he has received pay without doing service, on account of mental and physical incompetency. No. 2 was "passed over in March, 1841, and permitted to remain in the service, with the understanding that he should not be in the line of promotion." There is an officer who has been receiving pay for thirteen years, with a distinct understanding that he should be overslaughed and do no service. No. 3 was passed over "for habitual intemperance. The Department granted him a perpetual furlough in July, 1843, at his own request, and to be considered as out of the line of promotion." No. 4 was "passed over in April, 1851, in consequence of habitual intemperance, which was established before a court of inquiry." These are the men whom we wish to get clear of by the amendment we now propose. These men are constantly receiving pay, and never will do any service, and never can be got rid of while the present system exists. But here, sir, is another case. No. 5 "passed over in December, 1852, in consequence of mental derangement, produced by intemperance." Our object is to get rid of such men as these; and, surely, the service will be greatly improved by it. They should be dropped from the Navy; but they cannot be under the present system.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no doubt the honorable Senator from California is perfectly right. Everybody admits that the Navy requires reorganization. The Senate passed a bill for that purpose at the present session. If I am not mistaken, the provision in that bill, in reference to the mode in which the incompetent officers were to be removed from the Navy, is substantially different from the provision now attempted to be inserted in this bill as an amendment. I am unwilling to attach to an appropriation bill what may be supposed to be a remedy for an existing evil, without having had due time to consider whether that remedy be proper, and especially when I think the mode of reform proposed is one of great danger. I think a tribunal, arranged as is proposed to be done under this amendment, will not lead to proper results in throwing improper individuals out of the Navy. It is on that ground, and not that I do not want reform, that I am opposed to tacking this amendment to an appropriation bill.

Allow me to say, further, sir, that we have passed the bill to which I have alluded; it has gone to the House of Representatives, and I presume they will act on it; or if they do not act on it at this session, they probably will at the next. And it certainly is much more appropriate that in the reorganization of the Navy of the United States it should be done in a well considered, independent bill, adopted for that purpose, rather than forced upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. If the amendment of the Senator from Florida removed only the evils stated by the Senator from California, I should cheerfully go for it. I would readily support an amendment to strike all those officers from the Navy; but this amendment does a great deal more; and I agree with the Senator from Delaware, that it is a very inappropriate time, within twenty hours of the adjournment of Congress, on a money bill, to attempt a reorganization of the Navy of the United States, because you have a parcel of people in it who ought to have been dismissed twenty years ago. If you will put the amendment in such a form as to embrace the cases stated by the Senator from California, and order the President to dismiss those officers, I should cheerfully vote for it, but I cannot vote for this amendment.

Mr. GWIN. I think I recollect that the Senator from Georgia, when a member of the other House, made a very summary onslaught on the Army by moving to cut down the appropriations one half because he thought there were errors that ought to be corrected by cutting down the appropriations. Now, we wish to do some good in reorganizing the Navy; we want to get rid of worthless officers, and therefore we have proposed this amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, this is not an ill-considered or hasty measure. It was brought forward in the House of Representatives, and unanimously recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs of that House. It is only one section of a very elaborate bill for the reorganization of the Navy. There are a great many errors which ought to be corrected, and this is one. The amendment is substantially what has been passed by this body, with one exception. It does not throw the responsibility on the Secretary of the Navy alone, which is equivalent to having no improvement whatever, because the very fact that these abuses exist, shows that no Secretary will take the responsibility of correcting them, but enables him to summon a board of seven officers advisedly; and their finding is not final, but with the approbation of the President.

Mr. BAYARD. I recollect reading the bill of the House early in the session, and I made up my mind then that I could not possibly vote for it, and principally because of the board which it provided for. I think the bill which passed the Senate, and which, therefore, must be taken as expressing the judgment of the Senate, although it gave the responsibility to the Secretary of the Navy, provided for ascertaining by consultation among the officers of the service generally the character of each individual, which is far preferable, I think, to the organization of such a board as this.

Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Gillette, Gwin, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Rockwell, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Houston, Hunter, Morton, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Stuart, Toombs, and Toucey—23.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The appropriation in this bill for the Pensacola navy-yard reads thus:

For continuation of permanent wharf; continuation of deep basin; raising walls of dock basin; engine and blast pipes for smiths' and machine shop; and repairs of all kinds, $143,500.

I move to amend the clause by striking out "continuation of deep basin; raising walls of dock basin." We have in this clause an appropriation of $143,000 for the Pensacola navy-yard; and for what purposes? We find among them "continuation of deep basin, raising walls of dock basin," to keep up a dock which is a nuisance, and so declared by a competent board of officers who were appointed to examine it. They reported that it was unfit, and ought not to be accepted by the Government; but notwithstanding this, the contractors received for the dock the sum of $993,000. I move, first, to strike out the words which I have indicated, and then probably the appropriation can be reduced from $143,000 to about $50,000 for the other items. I make the motion to strike out because the dock is of no use, and the Senators from that State know it very well. I move to strike out because a competent board of officers, appointed to judge of the work, have reported to the Secretary of the Navy—and the Secretary concurs in their report—that the dock is of no use, and that the contractors did not comply with their contract.

Now we are called on to make a deep basin for this dock, which is to be eaten up by the worms in less than three years, and which depreciates twenty per cent. every year. We are to appropriate this amount of money for a structure which is of no use at all, and both the Senators from Florida know it very well. Why continue these appropriations upon this dock, basin, and railway? This may have come from the Bureau of Yards and Docks, but it ought never to have come from there. If we are going to help the contractors out with their contract; if we are going on to complete this structure, which it was the duty of the contractors to do, we had better receive the dock at once and abandon it. It ought to be abandoned. It is of no use there; it cannot be made of any use. Vessels have to be taken into it by camels, I understand, in the same way as they were taken up the Mississippi to Memphis. Now they come with a proposition for us to make a deep basin for their dock. At Philadelphia they ask for an appropriation of $15,000 or $20,000 a year to dredge in front of this new plan of dock, and the very first freshet that comes the river fills up again.

These contractors have received over three millions of dollars for docks, basins, and railways on the Atlantic coast, and now a competent board of officers have reported to the Navy Department, what I asserted two years ago before the Senate, that these contractors, instead of putting up proper docks, were placing nuisances at the navy-yards throughout the country. For these reasons, I make the motion to strike out. I do not, however, wish to detain the Senate. If it were a small sum, I should not have said a word.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania has made himself conspicuous, and I am gratified that he has, on all occasions, in reference to these docks. He has been instrumental in bringing to the notice of the Senate certain abuses in their construction, for which I think the Senate and the country are indebted to him. We were all indebted to him at the last session of Congress for much valuable information in regard to these abuses. I may say, however, that they are connected with the character of the contracts rather than the character of the work to be executed. In relation to this particular amendment, I will say that the Committee on Naval Affairs has refused its approbation to an appropriation of $20,000 to be expended upon this deep basin.

The dock at Pensacola is the ordinary dock now used at the harbors of Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, and other places. It is useless at Pensacola, unless you have a basin or some secure place in which you can put the dock after you have a ship in it. The dock, I may say, is a large scow, which being sunk underneath a vessel, and then exhausted of its water, raises the vessel up, and in that position the vessel can be repaired, provided the dock remains stationary. To keep it in that place, you must have a basin or pier to secure it. It is for such a basin that this appropriation is proposed to be made.

Under the contract for constructing the dock at Pensacola, the Secretary of the Navy was bound to furnish a ship to make the experiment. He sent a frigate, and the experiment was unsuccessful. The dock raised the frigate very well, but could not float it into the basin because the ship, being a frigate, instead of a line-of-battle-ship, was too short, and the main weight came in the middle, and thus gave the dock a curved form, and made it draw more water in the middle than at the ends, and added some twelve inches to its draft. The work, therefore, was not received by the board of examiners, and, according to the contract, no money could be paid until it was received. In defiance of what I think was justice and correctness in the transaction of public affairs, however, the whole contract price, $993,000, nearly a million of dollars, was actually paid to the contractors, notwithstanding the basin would not receive the dock and vessel in it. The only thing for the Secretary of the Navy to do is to bring suit upon the bonds, but I leave it for the Senate to say what chances there are for enforcing payment. If they knew as much about the bonds as those who examined the work, they would say the Secretary ought to use every means to make the dock available, before resorting to suit.

Mr. TOOMBS. Has not the Secretary, under the discretionary authority to build a dock of the same kind in San Francisco, made a contract with the same people against whose dock this commission reported?

Mr. GWIN. I will answer that question presently. I am in favor of these docks, and I will speak on the other side.

Mr. MALLORY. Now, sir, this dock and basin at Pensacola are at present entirely useless, after you have spent $1,000,000 on them; but by making this deep basin in front of the dock you will make it available. The contractors have the money, and there is no question as to whether you shall pay the money; for it is already in their pockets. Now, having this dock on our hands, it is important to have it available. In that view, I think it advisable, under all the circumstances, to make the appropriation which the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to strike out.

I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the manner in which the contracts have been made and the money paid; but I do not agree with him in the position that the dock itself, when completed, will be useless, because, if we have a basin deep enough, we have the experience of Savannah and Charleston, and other places where vessels are being docked every day, to show its practicability. Unless you are disposed to undo what you have done, to throw away this public money at the Pensacola navy-yard, the only navy-yard on the Gulf, it is wisdom to make the appropriation.

I will say, further, that I find among the papers submitted to us here, a very long memorial, numerously signed by the inhabitants of Warrington, who live where the dock is, testifying to its usefulness. Of that I know nothing, but I feel bound to mention the fact. I should not advocate this appropriation if I did not think it essential to carrying on the public service.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I should like to ask my friend from Florida what, in his opinion, is the annual depreciation in value of this dock?

Mr. MALLORY. The dock is coppered to high-water mark. It depends, as a matter of course, on the character of the copper. If it be twenty-eight ounce copper, it will last for seven years. These docks are very faulty in one respect: you cannot get at the bottom so readily as in the sectional dock. So long as the copper lasts, no worms can reach the dock. If it were twenty-eight ounce copper, it would last for seven years; but if it were only eighteen ounce copper, it would not last so long.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, although the appropriation is for a work within the borders of my State, and within my own immediate vicinity. I look upon the establishment of this deep basin as perfectly unnecessary and worthless to the Government. The board of commissioners appointed to make a test of the dock and basin built by the contractors, reported that outside the dock-basin in the Bay of Pensacola there was sufficient water to float any vessel which could pass the bar of Pensacola. There are some twenty-four or twenty-six feet of water there. I would ask, then, where is the necessity of having what is called a deep basin there? I am opposed to it.

The dock-basin there is not now the property of the Government. It made a contract with the contractors to construct a basin for this dock, and appointed a board of commissioners to inspect the work, and see whether that dock had been completed according to contract. The board of commissioners reported to the Government that the dock was not completed according to the contract, and they refused to receive it. Then, if you make an appropriation for raising the walls of the dock-basin, it will be a taking possession of it by the Government, and will place us in a false position before the country if we should bring suit against the contractors for non-compliance with their contract. An effort was made, by application to the Navy Department, to expend $3,000 or $4,000 for the painting of this basin; but the Secretary of the Navy had too much astuteness to do this: because, by taking possession of the dock, or basin, for the purpose of painting, would be construed by the contractors, and perhaps by the courts of the country, as a receipt by the Government. The Government has nothing to do with that basin. It is now in the possession of the contractors. It has never been turned over to the Government. The Government has refused to receive it. Should we, then, make an appropriation to raise the walls of the basin? If we take possession of it, for the purpose of raising the walls, it may be construed by the courts as a taking possession of the dock. I look upon the dock and basin as a nuisance to the Pensacola navy-yard, and unworthy the expenditure of one cent by this Government further than has been expended.

I am not disposed at this time, sir, to go into a discussion of the question whether the contractors have complied with their contract or not? All I can say is, that from the ex parte evidence presented to this body in the report of the Navy Department, and in the report of the commissioners who examined the dock, it appears that the contractors have not complied with the contract. The subject has been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs of this body; and it seems that the contractors have made a response to the report of the board of commissioners. I am not disposed to pass judgment on the merits or demerits of their claim until we have a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs. When that report is presented to the Senate, I think I shall be prepared to show, by incontrovertible evidence, that this contract has not been complied with by the contractors; that the Government should not receive the dock and basin; and that suit ought immediately to be brought against these defaulting contractors for non-compliance with their contract. But, sir, as I remarked before, I do not wish to go into a discussion of the question until we have a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs on the subject. That will be the proper time to enter into the merits or demerits of the claim set up by the contractors.

Mr. MALLORY. I have a few words to say to my colleague. It will be well enough to bear in mind that this dock was all paid for under the last Administration, under an opinion of the Attorney General, that the United States were to find water.

Mr. MORTON. Will my colleague suffer me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. The amount was paid under the last Administration I admit. I make no charge against any Administration. I would scorn, as a Senator on this floor, to pursue a course towards one Administration which I would not towards another. The contractors presented a hypothetical case to the Attorney General, and upon that hypothetical case they obtained his opinion. There was not water enough, as I understand, at Philadelphia, and the contractors reported that there was not water enough at Pensacola also; and the Department submitted the joint question to the Attorney General, whether the contractors should deepen the entrance into the basin, or whether the Government should make the necessary dredgings and excavations? Upon that hypothetical case, the Attorney General gave the opinion that it was the duty of the Government, and not of the contractors, to furnish the necessary depth of water, as the basin had been located on the site designated by the Government. But, sir, when your board of commissioners examined into the matter, what did they report? In contradiction of what had been stated to the Department by the contractors, the board of commissioners reported that there was sufficient water immediately outside this dock-basin, at Pensacola, to float any vessel that could pass the bar of Pensacola; that there were twenty-four or twenty-six feet of water there.

My colleague was mistaken in his first remarks in one point. He spoke of the curving of the dock by the frigate being taken on it. It is true it was thrown out of line some nineteen inches, I believe. The fault was not in floating anywhere outside the basin; but the contractors had obligated themselves to furnish ten feet of water within the basin; and, upon an admeasurement of the water in the basin, there was found to be only nine feet ten inches there. There was not water sufficient in the dock-basin to float the dock with the frigate on it. If my colleague will examine the report of the commissioners, he will find that there was no complaint whatever on the part of the contractors that there was not sufficient water outside the basin; but there was not water enough in the sill or gate of the basin to float the dock in; and neither was there sufficient water within the basin to sustain the dock with the frigate on board, when there.

Sir, it is perfectly unnecessary, and a wasteful expenditure of money, to construct this deep basin, as there is now sufficient water there; and I shall, therefore, vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania; but I do hope that, in liberality to the Pensacola navy-yard, he will not propose a reduction of the appropriation for that yard. Taking it in the gross, it is not, perhaps, equal to the estimate for a permanent wharf there; and every dollar of the appropriation can be advantageously expended in its construction. It is not equal, I believe, to the estimate sent in by the engineers for the continuation of that permanent wharf. It is the only work ever commenced in that navy-yard worthy of the Government which constructed it, and I hope it will be allowed to go on.

Mr. MALLORY. I was going on to say, when my colleague interrupted me with his "one word," that these contractors were paid under the last Administration by a ruling of the Attorney General that, although the contractors were to find the dock, the United States were to find the water, and as the United States had not found the water; and the dock was there, the Department paid the $993,000. However erroneous that ruling may be, such is the naked fact. The contractors have the money, and the dock is moored at Pensacola. If the dock can get into the basin, it will be as useful as every other dock; and they are scattered over the coast from Kittery to New Orleans. This dock is universally used throughout the country. It is very useful, but it needs the basin.

Mr. TOOMBS. Does the gentleman say that the dock, with the basin and railway, was ever used by anybody but this Government?

Mr. MALLORY. The dock needs a basin.

Mr. TOOMBS. I wish to know whether anybody but the Government ever was fool enough to use this dock with the basin and railway?

Mr. MALLORY. I say this dock is being used all over the United States, and ships are docked in it while we are talking about it.

Mr. TOOMBS. My question is, whether it has been used in connection with the railway and basin by anybody in the world except this Government?

Mr. MALLORY. The railway, the gentleman must know, has no connection with the dock and basin. The railway is simply a convenience to enable you to repair more ships than one at the same time. If you have one ship in the dock, without a railway, you cannot repair more than that one at a time; but with a railway, you may repair a large number at once. Now, the question is not whether the basin and railway are entirely superfluous, but the question for the country to determine is, whether they will abandon this dock and basin, for which they have paid $1,000,000, or whether they will make it available and useful by this further expenditure?

I agree with my colleague and the Senator from Pennsylvania, that there are features about these dock contracts which none of us approve; but the contractors have got the money, and I venture the opinion that if suit be brought on the bonds—and I almost know that the Secretary has determined to do it—it will end in nothing; but we shall still have the dock on our hands. Instead of allowing it to deteriorate, why not expend this small sum of money which will make it available and useful? It will enable the dock to be got into the basin, and then you can use it. I have great regard for the opinion of my colleague on this matter; but I have much greater regard for my own; because I have inspected ships and docks, and I have seen many a ship docked in precisely such a dock as this; and I can see, as it were, before me now, the identical difficulty which is in the way.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I wish to ask the Senator from Florida will this appropriation complete the work, or only begin it? Will this finish the dock so that it can be used?

Mr. MALLORY. I hold that this appropriation will enable us to dock a frigate immediately; and I think, without it, you will never be able to dock a ship there at all. That is my position.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, it is very seldom that I occupy the attention of the Senate; but as this is a local matter in which I feel a responsibility to my constituents in opposing an item for my own State, I beg leave to say a few words further.

I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, for the simple reason that this deep basin is perfectly unnecessary. We have the evidence of competent naval officers that there is sufficient depth of water at Pensacola now, without any such expenditure as this. I am opposed to the expenditure for raising the walls of the dock basin, for the reason that the board of officers appointed to examine and inspect it reported that there was not sufficient water within the basin to float the dock with a frigate on it; and the expenditure of this money for raising the walls of the basin will not give you an inch, or a fragment of an inch, additional water in the basin. That board, composed of Navy and Army officers and engineers, reported to the Department that there was not sufficient depth of water in the basin, and that the contractors had not complied with the contract. Now, if you add to the height of the wall of the basin, you will not get an additional inch of water in that basin. How, then, can my colleague say that by raising this wall, or making this basin—when you have now twenty-four feet of water, by expending money to give you thirty or forty feet—it will enable you to take the dock into the basin, which has only nine feet ten inches of water over its gate? Everybody knows that water seeks its own level. You may raise a wall around it as high as you please, and it will not add a fragment of an inch to the depth of the water in the basin.

My colleague spoke of the opinion of the Attorney General. I am no lawyer, but I have no hesitancy in saying that the opinion of the Attorney General was perfectly correct on the case presented to him. The simple case presented to him was, should the contractors or the Government furnish the water outside the basin to bring the dock to the gate of the basin. The Attorney General unhesitatingly decided that the Government was bound to furnish the water, as it had fixed on the site for the basin? The Department submitted that question to the Attorney General, but there was no evidence that there was not sufficient water outside the basin to float the dock into the basin. There was nothing but the statement of the contractors themselves. On that hypothetical case, submitted to the Attorney General, he gave his opinion. Subsequently, when the Government appointed a board of officers and engineers to examine into the whole matter, they reported that there was sufficient water without the gate of this basin to float the dock to the basin, but that there was not enough water over the sill of the basin and in the basin itself to float the dock with a frigate on board.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, as the Senator from Florida [Mr. Morton] wishes the motion to strike out to prevail, of course I shall not object. The only effect is to render it impossible for the Government ever to repair a ship at his navy-yard, or to use this dock in any way whatever. That, however, is a local matter, for the consideration of the honorable Senator and his State.

Mr. MORTON. You will never repair a vessel with the dock.

Mr. GWIN. That is the Senator's opinion. The Senator has been led into error in regard to the insufficiency of the dock and the violation of the contract, by the report of the board of officers to which he has so often referred. Now, I undertake to say that that report is as completely cut to pieces by the answer of the contractors as any document ever was in the history of this country; and if the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Pennsylvania will withdraw their objections to the publication of that document, we shall see both sides without having long speeches on the subject. This morning I proposed to discharge the committee, and have that document published, that we might see the other side of the question as well as one which has been so often and elaborately discussed here; but the Senator from Pennsylvania objected to it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I did object to discharging the committee and printing the document referred to, because the committee had not taken any action upon it. We had not time to examine it and make a report; why, then, discharge the committee and publish the document?

Mr. GWIN. It could very easily be referred to the committee next winter, and examined, and reported on by them. Is the gentleman afraid to see it in print? I undertake to say that the facts and arguments presented by the contractors defend themselves abundantly against every charge brought against them. The whole difficulty, and the only difficulty, is, that at the navy-yard at Pensacola, and the navy-yard at Philadelphia, we ought never to have provided these docks at all. It is a very different thing in other locations. I undertake to say that, in the history of civilized nations, you will never again see a stone dock built; but these are the docks which always will be used in all time to come. They are used by the commercial marine; and all the docks which will be built in future will be on this plan. In regard to the basin and railway, that may be an experiment, but I have no doubt it will succeed; and so far as that is concerned—I speak of my own country—we wish to have it. There we do not want any deepening of the water. Nature has given us water enough, and has given us a place for a dock basin and railway, without any of those appliances. There are four or five places in the United States where we need navy-yards; and although, as the head of the Naval Committee, I sustain all the navy-yards, I believe in a great deal of what the Senator from Maryland said this morning, and I think the time is rapidly approaching when we should consider whether we ought not to abandon some of them, and retain those at proper locations where they are really useful.

I undertake to say this dock in the waters in California will be eminently useful to the country. We want a dock, basin, and railway there. The contract to which the Senator from Georgia alluded has been made in accordance with law, and in accordance with the public necessities of that section of the country. We shall never hear of the Government doing this, that, and the other, to make a navy-yard there. God Almighty has made it. It is unnecessary to dredge, as you are doing at all your navy-yards, except three or four. Look at this appropriation bill, and you find that you appropriate for dredging at Washington, at Philadelphia, at Pensacola, and various other navy-yards. I could refer to some—but I do not wish to discriminate—which were never intended for the purposes to which they have been applied. New York, Boston, Norfolk, and San Francisco, are the points which nature has made for our great navy-yards, and for the docking of vessels. The old stone docks were very fine things in their time, before steam was discovered; but, in my opinion, another stone dock will never be built in this or in any other country. That, however, is entirely immaterial to the point in issue. All I want to do is to state the facts as they are. If the Senator from Florida is for striking out, I have no objection to its being done.

Mr. TOOMBS. I think this motion to strike out is eminently proper. I have a few remarks to make upon it in reply to the Senator from California. When these people came here eight or ten years ago, they asked for contracts for three docks—one at Kittery, one at Philadelphia, and the other at Pensacola. There was a great struggle about it; but finally they got the contracts. They said there was plenty of water at all the places, and that they were very fit places to build these docks, railways, and basins. They went on and built them. I suppose the report of the examination of the docks depends very much on those who examine them. I have not heard anything in reference to the Kittery dock. I have examined the report of the board that examined the Pensacola dock, which the Senator from California says has been triumphantly answered. The board was composed of Commodore Tatnall, of the Navy, Major Chase, of the Army, Mr. Heron, an eminent Civil Engineer of the Navy, who took down all the testimony, and Mr. Hartt, the chief naval constructor of the United States. Their report, accompanied by all the testimony and facts, is before us. The statement of the contractors is utterly denied by the board. They refused to receive the dock, because it was faulty in principle and construction. That is the report made by the commission sent to examine the work; and after all the evasions of the contractors disclosed in the testimony, they came here and demanded the money. They alleged that the difficulty was owing to a deficiency of water, and they referred it to the Attorney General to say whether, under their contract, there must not be a sufficiency of water. He said there must be, and then the money was paid to them. This commission, however, tell us that was not the difficulty. The ship they attempted to dock was not more than two thirds the size required by the contract. One was a ship-of-war; the other a frigate. These parties were paid in the face of the report of this commission.

Mr. GWIN. Will the Senator tell me whether any one of those officers, except one, ever before saw a ship docked?

Mr. TOOMBS. I suppose Commodore Tatnall did; he has been in the Navy all his life.

Mr. GWIN. No, sir, he never did.

Mr. TOOMBS. I should consider that rather strange.

Mr. GWIN. It is so asserted, and it seems to be very well proved.

Mr. TOOMBS. These officers were sent for the purpose of examining this dock. The commission was composed of some of the most scientific officers in your Army and Navy, and I am disposed to believe what they say. The contractors made one excuse after another. They said there was not sufficient depth of water at Pensacola. The commission, after the most accurate measurements, were unanimous that there was an abundance of water to dock that ship; so that the fault must be in the dock. Yet Senators now talk of that report being cut to pieces.

But, sir, I got up chiefly for the purpose of saying this: These men first got a contract for making three docks, and they started at the price of $300,000 apiece; but they have carried the cost up to nearly three millions of dollars. They then built a dock in California for over $500,000; and they got an act passed at the last session of Congress authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, if he thought the public necessity required it, to make a contract for a basin and railway at San Francisco. In the face of the report of the board of commissioners, these people got $993,000 for the Pensacola dock; and according to the intimation of the Senator from Florida, with a straw bond, whereas it is faulty in principle and construction. If the Secretary of the Navy has made such a contract as the Senator from California says, for a basin and railway at San Francisco, his conduct ought to be investigated, and I will take an early opportunity at the next session to cause an inquiry into his conduct in that respect.

Mr. GWIN. I undertake to say that whenever the Senator invites the investigation, the Secretary will be ready to meet him. He has executed the law, and he is not afraid to meet any responsibility that results from his action. I was one who advised and urged him to do it, and I know he did his duty.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I am not disposed to protract the discussion, but I must make one remark in reply to my friend from California. He boasts of having in California sufficient water for the construction of a dock without any outside appliances. I put up the same claim for the Bay of Pensacola. I say we have there sufficient water for the construction of a basin, and the floating of a dock without any of these artificial appliances of scows, dredging, or anything of the kind.

The Senator also said that the report of the board of commissioners was riddled—I think that was the term he used—by the response of these contractors to the naval committee. I have not had an opportunity to read that response. I can only say that, from the report of the Navy Department, and from the report of this board of commissioners to the Navy Department, the evidence is clear and conclusive to my mind, and must be to every one who looks at those reports, that the contractors have not complied with, but have signally failed in, their contract. What evidence they have produced I know not; but I should rely upon the opinion of such men as those who composed this board—Captain Tattnall, who has spent forty years of his life in the Navy of his country, one of the first contractors attached to the Navy, an engineer of distinction attached to the Army, and also one superintending the works at Pensacola—as to the efficiency of this work much sooner than I would on the statement of the contractors.

Mr. GWIN. The facts and the law will determine the case. Any man's statement is not worth a cent unless sustained by the facts.

Mr. BRODHEAD. My amendment is merely to strike out the words "continuation of deep basin, raising walls of dock basin," and does not affect the appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The President pro tempore thereupon signed the above-named bills and joint resolution.

MINNESOTA LAND BILL.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed a resolution suspending the 16th joint rule, so far as related to House bill "to repeal the act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate, in order to allow the bill to be transmitted to the Senate to-day.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, and concurred therein.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, continued the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSK. I move to amend the bill by adding the following as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the existing laws limiting the number of officers in the Navy of the United States be, and they are hereby, so far modified as to authorize the President to incorporate into the naval service of the United States the surviving officers of the late Texas Navy, who were duly commissioned and in the service of said Republic at the time of its annexation to the United States: Provided, That the number of officers to be incorporated shall not exceed eight.

Mr. PEARCE called for the yeas and nays on this amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. I know the great value of the time of the Senate, and I know that there is an indisposition to amend the naval appropriation bill by adding anything which may cause discussion in the House. I struggled to get up this measure as a separate bill. I introduced it at an early part of the session, and I would have brought it before the Senate as a separate bill if it had been in my power to do so. I will now be as brief as it is possible for me to be in explaining the amendment which I have offered, and the reasons why I think it ought to be adopted. It becomes necessary, owing to different constructions being placed by Texas and the United States thus far, on a rather ambiguous term contained in the joint resolutions of annexation. The second section of these resolutions declares: "Said State when admitted into the Union, after ceding to the United States all public edifices, fortifications, barracks, ports, and harbors, navy and navy-yards, docks, magazines, arms, armaments," &c. Texas placed on this language the construction that it intended to provide for the officers of the Texas navy, that under the usual acceptance of the term "navy," she is entitled to have the officers of her navy incorporated into the Navy of the United States. I have not the slightest doubt that such is the true construction of the language, and I think it is injustice on the part of the United States that they have not placed that construction upon it. The joint resolutions after they were adopted by Congress, were sent to Texas by a minister from this country, and he urged them upon our acceptance. Amongst other things which he said in urging them was this. (I read from a letter of Mr. Donelson, of June 15, 1845, to Mr. Allen, then Secretary of State of Texas:)

"Texas should rely on that high sense of honor and magnanimity which governs both the people and the representatives of the United States, and to secure to her all that she can reasonably desire to place her on an equal footing with the other members of the Union."

Such is the language which he used to induce Texas to accept the terms of the joint resolutions of annexation. The very convention which accepted those terms and formed the constitution of the State so construed them. On a petition presented to that convention by Commodore Moore, a committee were appointed who, in their report to the convention, reported a resolution that was unanimously adopted, urging upon the United States that the navy of Texas should be incorporated into that of the United States. That was the action of the convention of Texas on the subject of her navy, under the propositions of the Congress of the United States presented by your Minister, who urged the acceptance of these propositions on Texas. The Legislature of Texas, on the 29th of February, 1848, adopted this joint resolution on the subject:

"Whereas there were connected with the great measure of our annexation to the Confederacy of which we are now a member, various reciprocal rights and conditions prescribed by the terms thereof, as well as others clearly implied, and fairly deducible from the same, all of which Texas has on her part fully and completely redeemed:

"And whereas it is the opinion of this Legislature that the officers of our late navy, by a liberal and just, if not by a strictly legal construction of the terms of annexation, should be incorporated into the Navy of the United States, in their several ranks, and that they are justly entitled to the same, as well from the construction here claimed as from their high characters, personal and professional, and the zeal, fidelity, patriotism, and valor with which they sustained the cause of their country, while its navy was in existence: therefore,

"Sec. 1. Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That our Senators are hereby instructed, and our Representatives in Congress requested, to use their influence to procure the passage of a law by the Congress of the United States, incorporating the officers of the late navy of Texas into the Navy of the United States, in the rank which they severally held in the late navy of Texas.

"Sec. 2. Be it further resolved, That the Governor be requested to cause copies of this joint resolution to be immediately forwarded to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

In February, 1852, they passed a similar resolution, in these words:

"Whereas there were connected with the great measure of annexation to the Confederacy of which we are now a member, various reciprocal rights and conditions, prescribed by the terms thereof, as well as others clearly implied and fairly deducible from the same, all of which Texas has on her part fully and completely redeemed; and whereas it is the opinion of this Legislature, that the officers of our late navy, by a liberal and just construction of the terms of annexation, should be incorporated into the Navy of the United States in their several ranks, and that they are justly entitled to the same, as well from the construction here claimed, as from their high characters, personal and professional, and the zeal, fidelity, patriotism, and valor with which they sustained the cause of their country during her struggle for independence: therefore,

"Sec. 1. Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That our Senators are hereby instructed, and our Representatives in Congress requested, to use their influence to procure the passage of a law by the Congress of the United States, incorporating the officers of the late navy of Texas into the Navy of the United States, in the rank which they severally held in the late navy of Texas.

"Sec. 2. Be it further resolved, That the Governor be requested to cause copies of this joint resolution to be immediately forwarded to the President of the United States, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

Here, then, sir, is the construction which Texas has placed upon the term "navy," as used in the joint resolutions of annexation. It has been contended by some, that because the word "cede" immediately precedes the use of the several terms found together, in the section of the joint resolutions from which I read, the officers, the personnel of the navy, were not intended to be included. Now, is not this a mere quibble? When we speak of the British navy, what do we mean? No man supposes that in talking of the British navy and its efficiency, we mean nothing but the ships and armaments, and leave the men out of view altogether. When we speak of the Navy of the United States, do you exclude your officers? I say, then, that according to the usual acceptance of language, it is putting a strained technical construction upon the term "navy," to exclude the officers of the Texan navy from entrance into that of the United States. If the term stood alone in the joint resolutions, the fair and liberal construction, as a matter of course, according to the understanding of all mankind, would include the officers.

But the matter is not confined to this view. When these resolutions were presented to Texas, and she was asked to accept them, it was admitted by the representative of this Government that they were passed in a hurry, that there were a great many things not provided for, but we were assured that a gallant nation, such as the United States, would put the most liberal construction upon the terms of the resolutions; and that, if any defects existed in them, they would afterwards be remedied by wise, enlightened, and liberal legislation on the part of the United States, whenever the Representatives from that State should call for it.

When we were first annexed there were quite a number of officers who belonged to the Texan navy. They have been thinned by death, until but eight of them remain. They have been prosecuting their claim to what they believe their rights here during the whole time. The amendment I have offered proposes not to incorporate them into the Navy of the United States, but so to amend the law as to authorize the President to include them in the Navy, if he thinks proper. It is left, in the first place, in the discretion of the President of the United States to ascertain who belonged to the Texan navy, and, according to his judgment, to recommend them to the Senate, as he does all other officers, for confirmation.

Sir, when the proposition is reduced merely to that, I can regard it as nothing but an act of long delayed justice. I regret that I have been forced to offer this proposition at so late a period of the session. I know that the Senate listen to me at such a time with great impatience. I know there is much to be done between this time and the close of the session. It has not been my fault however, that I am forced into this late hour. I regret that, under such circumstances, I cannot go more fully into the subject, and support the proposition at length; for it is a case which I believe to be just. I believe it is a right of the State of Texas due from the United States on every principle of justice.

Mr. GWIN. All I have to say in regard to the question now before the Senate is, that the Naval Committee of the Senate, to whom a bill was referred, in the very language of the amendment now offered by the Senator from Texas, after full deliberation, unanimously reported against it. It has been fully discussed heretofore, and rejected by the Senate. I ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. PRATT. I have no doubt, sir, that the officers named in the amendment introduced by the Senator from Texas are entitled to some claim upon the Federal Government. I do not think, however, that we have the right to put them over the officers now in our Navy, as would be done by the adoption of the proposed amendment. I intimated at the last session, when the subject was before the Senate, the course which I was willing to pursue. I think it is the only one which will ever be adopted for the purpose of doing justice to these gentlemen as far as it is in our power. That course is to give them the pay to which they would be entitled if they had been in the Navy from the time of annexation to this period. I would not put them in our Navy so as to interfere with the rank of the officers in our service; but I think we should compensate them in money, which is the utmost we can do, in my judgment, for the rights which they certainly had under the articles of annexation. I have no doubt that, by the resolutions of annexation, they had a right to expect that they would be incorporated into the Navy. If they had been incorporated at that time, there would have been few living now who would have been prejudiced by the act; but if they are put back into the Navy now with the rank which they would have had if they had remained in it ever since, almost all our own officers would be injured by it, and they would have a just right to complain. A great injury would result to the service.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, I need not express my regret at finding myself compelled, at this late hour of the session, to trespass on the time of the Senate; but with my views of justice, and the demands of friendship, if this were the last hour of the session, I should feel it my duty to ask the indulgence of the Senate while I vindicate, as briefly as I may, the character and reputation of a friend. In the remarks which I intend to make, I shall have nothing to do with the personal controversy of any gentleman in the Senate or out of the Senate. With the private and personal relations of gentlemen I have nothing to do. They are always presumed to be competent to adjust their own affairs, in their own way. But, sir, with the public records of the country I have something to do. When I am called upon to vote, under all the responsibilities that attach to me as an American Senator, I have a right to inquire, and to consider, what I am about to vote upon; and I shall exercise that right fully, freely, and independently.

The first question for your consideration, sir, and for mine, is, whether the surviving officers of the Texan navy shall be incorporated into the Navy of the United States? That is the great question which Senators have to determine for themselves; and it does seem to me that every Senator on this floor ought to feel himself bound to examine the question fairly and impartially for himself, so that he may render a just verdict for his country, and for the citizens living under its Government.

By the terms of annexation between the Government of the United States and the late Republic of Texas, it was stipulated that the navy of Texas should be transferred to the Government of the United States. What, sir, do you mean by a navy? Do you mean its vessels, its munitions of war, and do you exclude its men? If you mean that, then upon a technical construction of the terms of annexation, you may exclude the officers of the Texas navy; but, according to every just interpretation, it seems to me that the terms of annexation intended and contemplated that the officers of the Texan navy should go with the navy. I am very well aware, sir, that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that, under the terms of annexation between the two Republics, the Government of the United States is not bound to receive the officers of the Texas navy. I am willing to bow with the profoundest deference and respect to the opinion of that tribunal. The question, however, went there by indirection. It was not directly presented to the Court; but I am free to declare that they announced that, by the terms of annexation, we were not bound to receive the officers of the navy as part of the navy itself. That was the decision in the case of Brashear, which went up to the Supreme Court on a mandamus which had been issued to require this Government to pay him his salary. The Court undertook to decide that question, and decided it as I have stated. That, sir, is not the question for us to decide. We have as much right to construe the terms of annexation as the Supreme Court. I grant, when their decision is made, we are bound by it; and therefore, I admit, we are not compelled, under a strict interpretation of the terms of annexation, to accept the officers of the Texas navy with the navy itself.

Mr. RUSK. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee, that the decision of the Supreme Court was upon an application by Mr. Brashear, contending that, by annexation, he was, without further action, attached to the Navy of the United States. The Supreme Court decided only that the act of annexation did not of itself, without further legislation, bring in the officers of the Texan navy.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. So I understand; and if I was not fortunate enough to convey my idea distinctly, I am sorry for it; but that is what I meant to say. Sir, as I have said, there is a question for the Senate to decide for themselves which is outside the technicalities of the law. There is a question of justice, a question of fairness, a question of magnanimity for the Senate to decide. I apprehend no man on this floor will undertake to say that we have not the right and the power to incorporate this remnant of the Texan navy into the American Navy. Then, if we have the power to do it, the question arises, shall we exercise that power? Are we under obligations of fairness, of justice, liberality, and magnanimity, required to exercise that power? It is upon that point I plant myself, and there I hope to stand, and there I hope to be enabled to convince honorable Senators that they may, and that they ought to do this, without a violation of any principle, or an infringement of the right of any American citizen?

Now, sir, what objection is urged to this? It is said, that if we incorporate the officers of the Texan navy into the Navy of the United States, we shall be violating the rights and privileges of the officers of our own Navy. Sir, if I know my own heart, I should be one of the last men in the world to trench upon the rights of any man in this Government; and least of all should I be inclined to supersede any man either in the Army or in the Navy, or in any way abridge his rights, or in any degree trespass upon a single privilege which he enjoys under the Government. But, suppose you incorporate these eight men into the Navy of the United States, what wrong do you inflict upon any man in your Navy? Do you take from any man in the Navy an iota of power and position which he now enjoys? Not at all. Do you obstruct a single man in the Navy in his progress to advancement? Not at all. So far from postponing his advance, you increase it by increasing the number of chances for his promotion. You add one additional captain to your Navy, and thereby you add to the chances of all who are seeking promotion, by death, resignation, or otherwise; you increase the chances of every officer to that extent, and thus you advance the interests of the officers of the Navy. Ah, but it is said, you bring into the Navy of the United States a man who once belonged to it, but who has joined another Government, and that you put him back into the Navy in a position which he would not have been entitled to occupy if he had remained in your Navy; and this is said to be a crying injustice. Well, sir, as I understand, but one man of the eight now seeking to be incorporated into the Navy of the United States ever belonged to your Navy, and that one is Commodore Moore. You object to incorporating him into your Navy with the position which he held in the navy of Texas, because you say it would be an act of injustice to those now in the Navy.

I am willing to put it on the ground that Commodore Moore has seen more sea service than four fifths of the men in the American Navy who claim priority of rank over him. But, suppose the fact to be as you imagine it, what wrong do you do to them? Here was a man who served creditably to himself, and honorably to his Government, without one stain upon his character, for fourteen long years, in the American Navy. He found a sister Republic struggling for her liberties. Many of the officers of your Navy were luxuriating at home upon leave of absence. This officer, seeing a Republic struggling for its liberty, under the generous and noble impulses of the American heart, determined to go and cast his fortunes with that struggling Republic for the rights of universal liberty. He left your Navy and joined that; and when the two countries are annexed, and all the rights, powers, and privileges of the one are merged in the other, he comes forward and asks that he may retain in this Government the position which he occupied in the Government which was ceded to you. He is told: "Oh, this is very wrong; you left your own country and went and enlisted under the star of another, and foreign Government," and that is set down to the detriment of this man. How consistent are we? How just are we? Why, sir, we may turn back to the history of our own country and see illustrious examples directly in point when we call upon the names of Lafayette and his illustrious compeers. They rendered assistance to us in our darkest days of trial, and our people render them the highest homage of gratitude, and praise, and thanksgiving. Why is this? It is because Lafayette left his own Government and came here to enlist under the banner of a feeble people, struggling for liberty and self-government. The nation's gratitude is poured out to him. Here, however, a man doing precisely the same thing, increased only by the consideration that he was going to fight the battles of his own countrymen who were flesh of his flesh, bone of his bone, and kindred of his kindred, it is said, is not entitled to the gratitude or the thanks of this Government when your statute-book is filled with demonstrations of the nation's gratitude for men who performed precisely the same service.

But, Mr. President, suppose you incorporate this remnant of the Texan navy into the American Navy. You do no wrong; you do no injustice; you deprive no man of his rank; you deprive no man of his chances of promotion; you simply add this number to your Navy. Is that anything new under the sun? Is it anything new in the history of this Government? Why, sir, your statute-book is literally filled with such cases. Have you not gone into the ranks of private life, and put men into your Army? Take the case of the distinguished Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHELTON.] He was taken from the walks of private life and made a general. So with the President of the United States. He was taken from private life and made a general. I might go on with an interminable list of such cases in the Army. You have done the same thing in the Navy. I will refer to one case. You took a French officer, and incorporated him into the American Navy into the same position which he had held in the French Navy:

"The marine committee, to whom was referred the letter from Baron Steuben, recommending Captain Landais, report, that they have had a conference with Captain Landais; that he produced brevet commissions of his being a lieutenant and captain in the navy of France, also a Continental commission, dated March 1, 1777, appointing him captain of the ship Reureaux, or Flammand, which commission is accompanied with a letter from Silas Deane, Esq."

"That Mr. Deane, in letters, to the marine committee, recommends Mr. Landais in the strongest terms." * * * "Resolved, That Captain Landais be continued as a captain in the Navy of the United States."—Journals of Congress, A. D., 1778, p. 547.

No complaint was made of that. No cry of injustice was heard then. That any man in the American Navy should be now found raising his voice in opposition to this proposition is a matter of astonishment to me. This proposition is simply to increase the Navy by the number of eight officers. That is all. You are increasing, without objection, your officers in all the civil departments of life and in the Army. Why may you not incorporate eight men into the Navy of the United States without perpetrating an injustice on the Navy of the United States? Are we not bound, as a just and generous people, to do it? When you annexed Texas to the United States you had power, with her consent, to do it. Here were two sovereignties combining together to accomplish a great national purpose, the amalgamation of two Republics. Now, are we prepared to say that the little remnant of her gallant navy, which helped to secure the liberties of that Republic, the benefits of which you and I are enjoying to-day, shall be turned loose upon the world, divested of their profession at an advanced period of life, to seek some new avocation, or to starve and die of penury or neglect? Is that compatible with the dignity, the magnanimity, the generosity of a liberal and enlightened people—of a constituency such as yours and mine?

Mr. President, I have not the strength to prolong this debate, and I feel that it would be a trespass on the Senate to do it; but there are a few other points on which I must touch before I conclude. Another question for our consideration is, whether the men proposed to be incorporated into the American Navy are worthy of such incorporation? If I believed that a single one of this number was unworthy of association with the officers of the American Navy, I should be prepared to exclude him and to incorporate the remnant. I believe, however, that no charges have been preferred against any of them save one, and that one is Commodore Moore. As I said before, I shall have nothing to do with private quarrels between him and others; but so far as the charges against him are of a public character, and connected with the records of the country I have and shall have something to do.

It has been alleged that this man is unworthy of association with the American Navy, that he has been guilty of deeds which render him obnoxious to the censure of every honorable man, and of every patriot. What are the charges against him? One is that he has been guilty of murder. Upon what ground is that charge attempted to be maintained? I have before me the records of the country; I have looked into them, and they show the facts which I will state.

There was a mutiny on board one of the ships of the Texan navy, a ship upon which Commodore Moore was not present, and which he did not command. That mutiny occurred in the port of New Orleans. The lieutenant of the vessel was killed, and two or three of its officers were wounded. The men were arrested by the authorities of New Orleans, and placed in prison. That fact was communicated to the Government of Texas, and the President of Texas issued an order to the authorities of Louisiana to surrender those men who were charged with this mutiny and murder, as will be seen by the following authentic record:

DEPARTMENT OF WAR AND MARINE, }
September 15, 1842.

SIR: Your communication of the 7th instant, with the accompanying correspondence had between yourself and his Excellency, A. B. Roman, Governor of the State of Louisiana, upon the subject of the detention, by the authorities of that State, of sundry prisoners, (Texas seamen,) charged with mutiny on board the schooner of war San Antonio, while lying in the Mississippi river, in the month of February last, and the murder of some of the officers of said vessel, at the same time and place, have been laid before his Excellency, the President, and he has issued the desired demand or requisition upon his Excellency, A. B. Roman, which is herewith inclosed.

Upon the delivery of the prisoners to you, or as soon thereafter as the testimony of the witnesses can be procured, you will order a court martial for their trial; in the prosecution of which, the regulations of the service and the laws of the land will be strictly enforced.

(Signed by the Secretary of War and Marine.)
To E. W. MOORE, Esq.,
Post Captain, Commanding Texas Navy.

SAM HOUSTON,

In the name and by the authority of the Republic of Texas, to his Excellency, A. B. Roman, Governor of the State of Louisiana, of the United States of America—Greeting: By virtue of a communication received from E. W. Moore, Esq., commanding the Texas Navy, under date of the 7th instant, I am placed in possession of a correspondence between your Excellency and himself, relative to certain individuals, refugees from justice, who are charged as mutineers on board the schooner San Antonio, a Texan vessel of war, and as murderers of one of the officers of said vessel, during the month of February last, then in the port of New Orleans.

The names of the individuals are Seymour Oswald, T. O. Shepherd, J. Allen, William Barrington, James Hudgins, William Simpson, Edward Keener, Benjamin Pomplily, and Edward Williams, who are now held as prisoners in the State of Louisiana.

Your Excellency is hereby requested (and a respectful demand is made) to deliver to Commodore E. W. Moore the above-named men, and all who may be implicated, in order that they may be dealt with in accordance with the laws which they are charged to have grossly violated.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the Republic, at the city of Houston, the 12th day of September, 1842, and of the Independence of the Republic the seventh.

SAM HOUSTON.

Under the order of the Government of Texas, they were surrendered, and an order was issued to the commodore to try the men on the charges which were preferred against them. A court martial was ordered. They were arraigned. Counsel were employed to defend them. They were tried and convicted. What remained for the commodore to do? Here was a command from the President of Texas to the Governor of Louisiana to surrender the men, and he did surrender them. Here was an order to the commodore for a court martial to try them. A court martial was ordered, and they were tried and convicted. What, I ask any honorable man, remained for the commodore to do, but to execute the law? For executing that law he is denounced as a murderer. Will you go into your own Navy, and proclaim to the world that the officer who executes the sentence of a court-martial is a murderer?

Those men were adjudged to be guilty. No one pretends to assert that they were not guilty. They were fairly tried. They were condemned. They were executed as they should have been executed. I have the testimony of Mr. Morgan, who was appointed by the authorities of Texas to go and control the movements of the vessels which the commodore commanded. He was there upon the day of execution, and he declares that it was conducted with the utmost fairness and liberality, and with the greatest feeling of regret consistent with the honest and faithful execution of a sworn duty; which will appear by the following from the records of the special court ordered by the Texas Congress to try Commodore Moore:

TEXAS SLOOP-OF-WAR AUSTIN, }
August 18, 1848.

COMMODORE E. W. MOORE:

SIR: We, the President and members of the court-martial, convened for the trial of Frederick Shepherd and others, have the honor to transmit to you the accompanying documents, being a true record of the evidence and minutes of the court.

In discharge of the painful duty and the awful responsibilities imposed upon us, we have endeavored to confine ourselves strictly to the law governing courts-martial, and to the evidence that has been brought before us, and we have duly deliberated upon the verdicts returned.

In the trial of Frederick Shepherd, we are of opinion that there is no evidence before the court to prove that he was aware that a mutiny was to take place, or that he was in a situation to aid or assist in quelling one on the night of its occurrence. We have, therefore, found the prisoner not guilty, and recommended his discharge.

Of the prisoners Antonio Landais, James Hudgins, Isaac Allen, and William Simpson, we have only to say that we deem the evidence elicited at the trial of each and every one of them sufficiently clear and distinct to convict them each of the various charges and specifications preferred against them, and we have therefore sentenced them to death.

We beg to call your attention to the evidence in the case of William Barrington, from which you will find that he was deeply engaged in the mutiny on board the San Antonio; but it also appears in the evidence that he informed one of the officers that it was to take place. In consequence of this information, the court have sentenced him to receive one hundred lashes with the cats.

Of the evidence in the case of John Williams and Edward Keenan, we think it unnecessary to make any comments. Williams, you will find, is strongly recommended to mercy.

Very respectfully, &c.,
(Signed by the five officers comprising the court.)

From the testimony of Commissioner James Morgan.

"Question 19.—You will please state to the court my conduct as commander of the Austin, from the time we left New Orleans to our arrival off the coast of Yucatan and meeting the enemy, and particularly in relation to the mutineers and murderers who had been tried by court-martial before we left New Orleans, and for carrying out the sentence of said court-martial I am accused of murder?"

"Answer. The conduct of Commodore Moore, on board the Austin, was such as I should have expected from a commander of a fleet—rather more perfect than I should have expected from a man of his age. He was very particular in his discipline, and appeared to understand every discipline necessary on board a man-of-war—the crew were exercised twice a day at the guns, and instructed in all the arts of naval warfare that it was necessary for them to know, so far as I could judge.

"With regard to the mutineers, the third or fourth day after we were out they were brought forward, one at a time; the officers and crew all assembled to hear their sentences read; which were read aloud by Commodore Moore himself, in presence of all on board. The laws for the government of the navy were also read. After the sentence of each one was read, he gave notice to those who were to be executed, to prepare themselves for death; that he gave them to the next day to do so. When the officers and crew were all assembled, and the prisoners brought up for execution, Commodore Moore read the rules and regulations for the government of the navy, and the punishment mutineers were subject to. He then stated to those who were condemned to be hanged, that they had been fairly tried by a court-martial selected for the purpose, and had able counsel assigned them to defend them; that after a patient investigation of the whole affair, they were condemned to the punishment of death, which he, as the officer in command, was bound by his oath, and the laws of his country, to see executed; that it was the first time in his life he had ever to do anything of the sort, and he hoped to God it would be the last. He afterwards made some feeling remarks, at which everybody within his hearing was very sensibly affected.

"On the next day, at twelve o'clock, the ship was hove to, and the four condemned to be hung were accordingly hung up at the yard-arm till they were dead, when they were taken down, prayers read over each separately, and they were cast into the sea."

But, sir, more than this. When Commodore Moore returned to the ports of his own Government, he surrendered himself to its authorities and demanded a trial upon the charges of murder, piracy, and defalcation, and other charges of a grave character preferred against him. The Congress of Texas accorded to him a committee of investigation, and I have the result of that committee's investigation before me, which I will not trouble the Senate by reading, but will refer to, and publish in my remarks, because the investigation is so full, clear, and conclusive, that Commodore Moore might well rest his vindication on this report of the joint naval committees of both houses of the Texas Congress, which commences on page 348, of the printed Journals of the House of Representatives of the Eighth Congress of that Republic; as follows:

The joint naval committee, by Levi Jones, one of said committee, made the following report; which was read, viz: To the President of the Senate, and

Speaker of the House of Representatives:

The undersigned, members of the Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives on Naval Affairs, acting conjointly, by the order of their respective Houses, on the memorial of Edwin W. Moore, late of the Texas navy, have, so far as the time allowed them from the discharge of other duties permitted, given to the matters involved in it that careful and deliberate consideration which seemed to be required; first, by their importance, and secondly, by the high official station and reputation of the functionaries and individuals whose acts have thus become the subject of inquiry, and they beg leave to report, as the result of their investigation—

That on the 19th of July, 1843, Post Captain Edwin W. Moore, then in command of the navy of Texas, was, by order of the President, "dishonorably discharged from the naval service of the Republic," as appears by a letter addressed to him from Washington, of that date, bearing the signature of G. W. Hill, Secretary of War and Marine.

Upon looking at this "order of the President," as communicated by his "Secretary of War and Marine," the first inquiry to which the joint committee directed its attention was, as to the authority of the President to make it. In a Government possessing no power except such as is conferred by the Constitution and laws of the land, the undersigned believe that no citizen can be deprived of a franchise or right, except by the express authority of law; nor even then can it be done in accordance with the spirit of our institutions until after a full and fair investigation, before a competent tribunal, where the party has had an opportunity of being heard in his defense.

In this case, Captain Moore was dismissed from a service

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 136.

in which he had made great sacrifices in sustaining the honor and reputation of his country, and deprived of a high and honorable station, which he had dignified by his official conduct and deportment, without a trial or even the semblance of a trial; and if such a course can be sustained or even excused in the functionary pursuing it, it must be under the provisions of some positive law, or under a state of circumstances, so imperative in their character, as to admit of no delay or resort to other and less objectionable remedies.

The undersigned know of no law that justified it. The constitutional provision which makes the President the commander-in-chief of the army and navy, certainly did not, otherwise the system of military tribunals which seems to have been contemplated by that instrument, and which has since been provided for by law, would be a nullity and even mockery, as the President might, in the exercise of the supposed power conferred in the constitutional provision making him commander-in-chief of the army and navy, capriciously dismiss every officer from either or both branches of the service at his mere will and pleasure. Such power is rarely supposed to exist in those countries where the will of the sovereign is the law of the land; and it can hardly be imagined, that the framers of our Constitution, imbued as they must have been, in the midst of a revolution for the suppression of tyranny, with feelings sensibly awakened to the rights of the citizen, would have been incorporated in the instrument they were preparing to guarantee those rights; a provision which might be exercised for the most tyrannical purposes. Such was not their intention, as the undersigned believe. No fair construction of the language would justify the inference that it was, and the principles of the institutions for the establishment of which they were then laying the foundation, and the history of the times, repel the imputation.

If, then, there is found no authority in the Constitution for the exercise of the power which was brought into action on this occasion, the committee are at a loss to know from whence it was derived. If there is any statute which confers it, the undersigned have been unable to discover it; but in their researches upon the subject, they have found a statute, which expressly declares, that it shall not hereafter "be lawful to deprive any officer in the military or naval service of this Republic, for any misconduct in office, of his commission, unless by the sentence of a court martial." This law was approved on the 4th of February, 1841, and has never been repealed. It was therefore in full force and operation on the 19th of July, 1843, when Captain Moore was dishonorably dismissed, and deprived of his commission in the naval service of this Republic, "by the order of the President," without "sentence of a court martial."

So direct and palpable a violation of the positive provisions of a statute well known to the Executive at the time he gave the order, cannot be justified. In the opinion of the undersigned, it might be excused under very extraordinary circumstances; but the circumstances that would excuse it must be of such a character as to admit of neither delay, nor a resort to a different mode of punishing the refractory officer. In this case, even if there existed in fact any just cause for punishment, the committee can perceive no reason why a positive law should have been violated and set at naught by the Executive to accomplish the object. There certainly existed no emergency which would have rendered delay either dangerous to the country, or injurious to the service. The navy, at the time the order was given to Captain Moore, and for ten days previous, was in the harbor of Galveston, and that officer might have been removed from the actual command by suspension and arrest, with as little difficulty as was found in depriving him of it, by dismissal from the service. That course would have obviated the necessity of violating the law, and have accomplished all the Executive should have desired, as Congress could have constituted a tribunal to investigate the matter, and to dismiss the officer, provided that his conduct, upon investigation, should appear to have deserved punishment to that extent.

The undersigned, however, cannot discover in the papers and documents submitted to them, the grievous offenses and crimes imputed to Captain Moore in the letter from the Secretary of War and Navy, conveying to him the order of the President for his dishonorable discharge, and which are the alleged grounds upon which that order was predicated. These imputed offenses and crimes are:

1. That Captain Moore had not accounted for large sums of money received from the authorities of Yucatan and the Government of Texas, in July, 1842.
2. That he had disobeyed orders issued to him on the 29th of October, on the 5th of November, and on the 16th of November, 1842, directing him to report with the vessels under his command at Galveston.
3. That he had disobeyed orders issued on the 2d of December, 1842, and on the 2d of January, 1843, directing him to report to Washington and report in person to the Department of War and Marine.
4. That he had failed to obey a peremptory order issued on the 23d of January, 1843, "to turn over the command to the senior officer in the naval service present, and report to the Department of War and Marine, at this place, (Washington,) in person."
5. That he was guilty of treason in entering into a compact with the authorities of Yucatan, without the sanction or knowledge of this Government.
6. That he was guilty of murder in causing to be executed, on the 25th of April, 1843, certain mutineers, who had been condemned by a court martial, alleged to have been illegally assembled, after he had received an order issued on the 21st of March, 1843, suspending him from the command of the navy, and directing him to report to the Department of War and Marine in arrest. And
7. That he was guilty of piracy in cruising upon the high seas with armed vessels, under the flag of this nation, while under suspension and arrest.

With regard to the first charge, the undersigned have found abundant evidence in the correspondence between Captain Moore and the Department, showing that he had expended more money for the use of the navy than he is charged with having received; they therefore consider this charge as wholly groundless, and one which does not in the slightest degree excuse the order, in support of which it was made.

As to the second charge, it was necessary to refer to the evidence to see how far it is sustained by the facts.

For several months anterior to the order of the 29th of October, 1842, it seems from the correspondence between the Department and Captain Moore, that it was the earnest desire of the President that the navy should be prepared for sea as early as practicable, to cruise along the coast of Mexico; to lay under contribution the towns and commerce of that country. This desire Captain Moore appears to have labored hard and assiduously to gratify, but from various difficulties and embarrassments, growing out of the refusal of the Government to furnish him with the money appropriated by Congress to fit out and support the navy, he had been unable to accomplish the object at the time that order was written, but still entertained hopes of being able to do so at a future period. The order itself seems to have been written under the anticipation that it might be done; and, after speaking of the subject in general terms, and expressing regrets at the detention of the vessels and wishes respecting their being on the gulf, it proceeds thus: "If you cannot, with the means at your command, prepare the squadron for sea, you will immediately, with all the vessels under your command, sail for the port of Galveston, and, on your arrival there, make a special report," &c. This order, then, was evidently a conditional one, to be executed or not, upon the contingency of Captain Moore's ability or inability, in his opinion, of getting the vessels to sea, with the means at his command, for the cruise. In reply to this communication, Captain Moore acknowledges his inability to get to sea at that time, either for the cruise or to return to Galveston, as he had not men enough to move the vessels from their anchorage, but stated that he had received a letter from the Secretary of War and Marine of Yucatan, written a short time before, from the tenor of which he had been expecting funds from that quarter; a subsequent arrival, however, had materially lessened his hopes, as the enemy were represented to be upon them both by sea and land—at the same time he again expresses a hope that the appropriations previously made by Congress for the navy would be available, in order that he might get to sea.

In this answer, and in the conduct of Captain Moore on that occasion, the undersigned discover no disobedience of orders on his part, nor do they perceive in either any manifestation of an intention to disobey the orders of the Department or the Executive, and such appear to have been the opinions entertained by the Government at the time, as in none of the subsequent communications of the Department to him, previous to the 21st March, 1843, after the arrival of the commissioners in New Orleans, was there any censure or seeming rebuke for his non-compliance with the order.

The order of the 5th of November is merely a letter inclosing a duplicate of the one of the 29th of October, with this additional expression, showing that both were intended to be conditional, and to be obeyed or not, according to the prospect of getting to sea; after speaking of the condition of the schooners San Bernard and San Antonio, the writer adds: "If it is impossible to fit out the two remaining vessels for efficient service, they had much better be in Galveston harbor than in a foreign port. With the hope, however, that some kind fortune may have enabled you to accomplish your purpose, I have," &c.

The order of the 16th of November, is merely a reference to the two former letters of November 5, and October 29, with directions to carry out the instructions previously given. What these instructions were, the undersigned have already shown; and as these three letters contain all the matters embraced in the second charge, the committee have no hesitation in saying, that they do not, in their opinion, sustain it.

In reference to the third charge of disobedience of orders, in refusing to repair to Washington, and report, in person, to the Department of War and Marine, the undersigned would not have regarded the functionary making it as intending to be serious, had it not been connected with other matters of such grave and serious import. The order of December 2, 1842, simply directs Captain Moore, when he shall have arrived at Galveston, and prepared his returns, to proceed to this place, and report to the Department in person. Previous to writing this order, the Department had been informed that Captain Moore, from causes beyond his control, could not then return with the vessels to Galveston; and that he was still making efforts to prepare for the contemplated cruise on the gulf—a compliance with it, therefore, depended upon the same contingencies as attached to the preceding orders from the Department, for the return of the vessels to Galveston; and as a proof that it was so regarded at the Department; when it was given, there is no time specified in it for a compliance with it, but simply directs the duties to be performed after Captain Moore shall have returned to Galveston. In fact, it is not an order to return to Galveston with the vessels at all, but an order prescribing the course for him to pursue, after his arrival at that port—which arrival, depended upon contingencies well known to the Department, at the time it was given. The order of January 2, 1843, which is the only other evidence relied upon to sustain the third charge, like all those which preceded it, directs nothing positively. It speaks of all expectations, founded upon the appropriation made at the extra session of Congress, for naval purposes, as being certain to end in disappointment, as it was subject to such contingencies as to render it a dead letter upon the statute-book; and after expressing the regrets of the President, at the inadequacy of the appropriations to sustain the navy, it directs that Captain Moore will, if practicable, in conformity with previous orders, report at Galveston.

The undersigned believe that they have already shown that, by the previous orders, Captain Moore was only required to report at Galveston, in the event of his being unable to get to sea, upon the cruise which had been previously ordered, and which, at no time, seems to have been finally abandoned; and also, in the event of his being able to bring the vessels to Galveston, provided he should not be able to get to sea, for the cruise. This order was, therefore, subject to all the contingencies which attached to the preceding orders, upon the same subject; and was to be obeyed or not, as circumstances might dictate—having in view those contingencies.

In reference to the appropriations made for naval purposes, by the act of July 23, 1842, the non-application of which seems to have caused all the embarrassments under which Captain Moore labored in getting the vessels to sea, either for the contemplated cruise, or for their return to Galveston, the undersigned can perceive no such difficulties or contingencies, as are spoken of by the Secretary of War and Marine; nor can they imagine why the act making the appropriations should be regarded as a dead letter upon the statute-books.

The first section of that act appropriates $25,000 "for the outfit and provisioning of the navy now in the employ of the Government," and that the amount "be paid out of the first money in the treasury, or at the disposition of the Executive." When it is borne in mind, that at the time this appropriation was made, it was believed that the President had already contracted for the loan of $1,000,000; and that, at the same time, other extraordinary resources were placed in his hands for raising money, by the unlimited and unrestricted sale of four hundred thousand acres of the Cherokee lands, it seems, to the undersigned, that the Congress manifested an unusual degree of solicitude to provide for the prompt and certain payment and application of this appropriation; for they not only provided for it in the ordinary way, by directing it to be paid out of the first money in the treasury, but they went further, by directing, in addition, that it should be paid out of the first money at the disposition of the Executive, evidently intending thereby, that if the Executive should come into the possession of money, either by loan or the sale of the Cherokee lands, before there were means in the treasury to meet the appropriation, that then the appropriation should be paid out of that money, before any part of it was applied to any other purpose.

The second section of the act appropriates $57,659 50 for the pay then due the officers, seamen, and marines, and for their prospective pay for the ensuing six months, and directs that, should prizes be made, or contributions be levied, by the navy, they should be applied to the payment of these appropriations for the officers, seamen, and marines of the navy. The third section provides "that no part of the sum thus appropriated shall be paid over to any commander or disbursing officer for his services or prize money until he shall have rendered to the proper department a full account of all moneys before received and disbursed;" and provides, further, "that the amount appropriated for back pay shall be first ascertained to be due for services rendered in the naval service of the Government, according to the laws in existence at the time of the service." These provisions contain all the restrictions or contingencies which are found in the act; and it will readily be perceived that neither of them apply, in the slightest degree, to the appropriation of $25,000 for the outfit and provisioning the navy, as provided for in the first section of the act. The undersigned, therefore, believe that this appropriation was withheld in violation of law, and that the withholding of it was the sole cause of the difficulties which prevented the navy from proceeding to sea on the contemplated cruise, and which afterwards put it out of the power of the commanding officer to bring the vessels to Galveston; and as that officer was thus prevented from obeying the instructions of the Department by its own acts, they cannot perceive how he can be held obnoxious to the charge of "disobedience of orders," which order it was impossible to obey.

The fourth charge made against Captain Moore, as affording the ground-work for his dismissal from the service, is, that he disobeyed a peremptory order, issued on the 22d January, 1843, requiring him to "leave the ship Austin and brig Wharton under the command of the senior officer present, and repair to this place, (Washington,) and report to the Department in person, as his presence was necessary at the seat of government before final action is taken upon a secret act of Congress with regard to the navy." On the same day upon which this order was issued, (the 22d January, 1843,) another order was issued, directed to Commander Lothrop, "or officer in command of the navy," directing him to report the condition of the vessels, &c., under his command, "to William Bryan, Samuel M. Williams, and James Morgan, who have been commissioned by the President to carry into effect a secret act of Congress with regard to the navy," and to "act under, and be subject to, the orders of said commissioners, or any two of them, until further orders are received from the Department." The order directed to Captain Moore, by name, was not received by him until after the arrival of the commissioners at New Orleans, who had been charged with the duty of carrying out the "secret act" in regard to the navy. They, therefore, found him, without any disobedience of that order, in command of the navy, and, as such, they addressed a letter to him, inclosing the second order of the same date, directing him to report to them, with as little delay as practicable, in obedience to that order. Here, then, were two orders of the same date—the one directed, personally, to Captain Moore, the other directed to the “officer in command of the navy.” The one ordering him to leave the vessels under command of the senior officer present, and report to the Department, as his presence was necessary before final action was taken upon the secret act respecting the navy, and the other showing that that action had already been taken by placing the vessels under the authority and charge of the commissioners, and directing him to report to them, and to act under, and be subject to, their orders. If a proper and reasonable construction of both of these orders should show them to be equally imperative in their character, then there might exist some doubt on the mind, as to which one Captain Moore was bound to obey. They are both directed to him, as he was in command, without having disobeyed any previous order, when they were both received; and it is, therefore, only by such construction, and a just application of the circumstances connected with the issuing and reception of them, that it can be ascertained to which he was bound to render obedience. The first gives the reason why it was issued, to wit: that his presence was necessary at the Department before final action was taken respecting the navy. It is therefore reasonable to infer that but for this reason the order would not have been given. The second shows that the reason no longer existed, and that his presence was no longer necessary at the Department for the purpose mentioned, as the final action had then been taken, by turning the vessels over to the commissioners, and instructing them as to their future disposition. If, then, there was nothing else in the later order showing that the first was rescinded by it, this fact would clearly demonstrate it, as the sole reason upon which the first was predicated was removed by the subsequent action of the Department, and the subsequent order issued in conformity with that action.

But there are other things connected with this second order which leave no doubt upon the minds of the undersigned as to its effect, in countermmanding and rescinding the previous order of the same date. Captain Moore was in command of the navy at the time of the arrival of the commissioners in New Orleans, as the order, directing him to turn over the command to another, was not received previous to their arrival, and they (the commissioners) having the authority to do so, and to take any and all the steps which they might deem necessary in regard to the vessels, thought proper to regard him in that light—to communicate with him as such—to furnish him with the second order, and to require from him the performance of duties imposed by that order, on the “officer in command of the navy.” The undersigned, therefore, cannot view the second order in any other light than as rescinding the first one of the same date; and, consequently, the alleged disobedience of the first, is an assumption unsupported by facts, and seems to have been resorted to as an after-thought, brought forward as an assistant prop to support the subsequent order of dismissal from the service.

The fifth charge is, that Captain Moore was guilty of “treason,” in entering into a compact with the authorities of Yucatan, without the sanction or knowledge of this Government.

Treason is defined by the Constitution, to consist in levying war against the Republic, or in adhering to its enemies, giving them aid and support, and if Captain Moore be guilty of this offense, it must be for a violation of that provision which forbids giving to the enemies of the Republic aid and support, for no one has pretended to charge him with levying war against the Republic. To determine, then, whether or not he is guilty of the charge, it is necessary to ascertain what was the position occupied by Yucatan in reference to this country, as well as to Mexico, at the time the arrangement was entered into between Captain Moore and Colonel Peraza at New Orleans, on the 11th February, 1843. At that time, and for a long time previous, a war was notoriously known to exist between the State of Yucatan and the Government of Mexico, which war was prosecuted for the same purpose, and had the same end in view, which our own country was seeking to accomplish, in the war which she was waging against Mexico. At the same time the authorities of Yucatan and Texas were keeping up and encouraging the most friendly relations towards each other, and had, on other occasions, entered into stipulations, supposed to be for the mutual benefit of both, in the prosecution of the war against their common enemy. These stipulations and agreements had been submitted to the Congress of this nation, and that body, so far from condemning or disapproving them, refused to recall the navy, which was then at sea, and co-operating with the forces of Yucatan, under them.

If, then, the entering into such arrangements with the authorities of Yucatan, be reasonable, the former Administration was guilty of that offense, and the Congress, by sustaining the measures of that Administration in this particular, not only connived at treasonable practices, but actually became participants in them, by failing to adopt the necessary measures, to put a stop to their further progress. As a proof, however, that the arrangements were not considered reasonable, even by the present Administration, Captain Moore continued his operations in connection with the forces of Yucatan for some time after the present Executive came into office, and upon reporting his proceedings to the Department, he was informed, under the date of April 14, 1842, that his proceedings were approved. In addition to this, there is not one word in all the correspondence between the Department and Captain Moore, anterior to the time when the commissioners were sent to New Orleans to take charge of the vessels, which seems to inhibit the renewal of the arrangement with Yucatan, while there is much to indicate that the renewal was not only anticipated but desired. Besides, for the money received from Yucatan under these arrangements, Captain Moore was held to strict accountability by this Government, and one of the alleged grounds for his dismissal from office, is that he had not accounted for moneys thus received, which would hardly have been alleged if it had been obtained by reasonable intercourse. But that Yucatan was not considered as forming any part of the territory of the enemy, is evidently shown by the President's proclamation of a blockade of the whole coast of the enemy, and from which the coast of Yucatan was excluded. Apart, however, from all these considerations, the undersigned believe there never was an instance civilized warfare, where two States were at war with one common enemy, that they did not avail themselves, as far as circumstances permitted, of the aid and assistance of each other, in damaging the common foe, and this, too, in most instances, without any agreement or compact between their respective Governments to that effect; nor is there an instance on record, within the knowledge of the undersigned, where belligerent nations have failed to avail themselves of the intestine war carried on in the enemy's country, where it could be done to advantage. In no point of view, therefore, can the undersigned perceive the propriety of the charge of treason against Captain Moore, founded upon the arrangement entered into with Colonel Peraza—arrangements which were certainly greatly to the benefit of this country at that particular crisis, and which, it is believed, would have resulted in permanent and lasting advantages to the nation, had they not been so untimely checked by the acts of the Government, and the extraordinary proceeding resorted to, for the purpose of carrying out those acts.

The sixth charge is that Captain Moore was guilty of murder, in causing to be executed, on the 26th of April, 1843, certain mutineers who had been condemned by a court-martial, alleged to have been illegally assembled, after he had received an order issued on the 21st of March, 1843, suspending him from the command of the navy, and directing him to report to the Department of War and Marine in arrest.

On the 15th September, 1842, the Department addressed a letter to Captain Moore, inclosing a requisition upon the Governor of Louisiana for the mutineers alluded to in this charge, and then adds: “Upon the delivery of the prisoners to you, or as soon thereafter as the testimony of the witnesses can be procured, you will order a court-martial for their trial, in the prosecution of which, the regulations of the service, and the laws of the land will be strictly enforced.” Here, then, was a positive order to convene a court-martial for the trial of these men, and to cause the regulations of the service and the laws of the land to be strictly enforced against them. These regulations and laws imposed upon them the penalty of death, if found guilty of the offenses charged against them—they were found guilty, and suffered accordingly. But it is said, the court which tried them was illegally assembled, as the officer ordering it was suspended from the command at the time, and had no right to give the order. In the first place the objection, in the opinion of the undersigned, is without force so far as regards the legality of the court, because the order for it emanated from the Department of War and Marine, and was only executed by the officer in command; and had Captain Moore, in point of fact, been suspended from the command at the time, the person who superseded him would have been bound to have carried it out, and the court which assembled, no matter by whose instrumentality, would have been assembled in virtue of the order from the Department.

But the undersigned cannot discover, from the testimony, that Captain Moore was suspended from the command. It is true he had received an order from the Department suspending him, but in that order there was no person designated to whom the command should be given, and according to the law and the regulations of the service, he could not give up the command and leave the vessels, until some other person had presented himself with authority to relieve him, and take charge of them. The order, therefore, was for this reason inoperative. But there is other and stronger evidence, showing that he was legally in command of the vessels at the time the court was convened for the trial of these men. By the order of the 22d January, he was informed that the entire control of the squadron had been given to the commissioners by the President, and he was directed to obey their orders and instructions, and if the order of the 21st of March, 1843, operated at the time of its reception in suspending him, he was immediately afterwards restored to the command by the commissioners, with the view of securing his services in bringing the vessels to Galveston; and being restored he was as much bound to carry out his previous orders, as though no suspension had ever taken place. It is the opinion of the undersigned, therefore, founded upon the testimony submitted to them, that Captain Moore was in command of the squadron by lawful authority at the time the court-martial was convened for the trial of these mutineers, and that he continued in command under and by virtue of the same authority until the arrival of the vessels in Galveston in July following.

The seventh and last charge is, that Captain Moore was guilty of piracy, in cruising upon the high seas with armed vessels, under the flag of this nation, while under suspension and arrest.

Without investigating this new and singular species of piracy—a species which seems to have escaped the knowledge of most, if not all, the elementary writers on international law, the undersigned deem it only necessary to say, that the facts submitted to them do not sustain the charge. They have already shown that Captain Moore was in command of the squadron by the authority of the commissioners, which command, conferred as it was by lawful authority, was a full and entire removal, for the time being, of the suspension and arrest, which was intended to be imposed by the order of the 21st of March, 1843. It is true, when the command was conferred upon Captain Moore by the commissioners, or in other words, when he was retained in the command by them, it was mainly for the purpose of bringing the vessels safely to the port of Galveston, but the evidence abundantly shows, that after the sailing of the squadron from New Orleans he had full and ample authority from the senior commissioner, who was authorized to act in the absence of the others, to proceed on the cruise, which has since been denounced as a piratical one, and this authority, in the opinion of the undersigned, fully exonerates Captain Moore from all blame in reference to that cruise.

But whether Captain Moore were guilty of treason, murder, and piracy, or not, it forms no justification, in the opinion of the undersigned, for the violation of a positive statute in dishonorably dismissing him from the service without a trial, or an opportunity of defending a reputation acquired by severe toils, privations and hardships, in sustaining the honor and glory of the flag under which he had sailed and fought. If he were guilty, the courts of his country were open for his trial and punishment, and he should immediately upon his return have been turned over to those tribunals; and if not guilty, it was worse than cruel, thus to have branded with infamy and disgrace a name heretofore bright and unsullied on the pages of our history; and to have driven from our shores, as an outcast upon the world, one whose long and well tried services, all appreciate and approve.

The undersigned, therefore, recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution,

Mr. DAVIS moved to lay the report upon the table. Lost.

The following is the resolution recommended in the report just read:

“SEC. 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Republic of Texas in Congress assembled, That it is due to Post Captain E. W. Moore, to have a full, fair, and impartial investigation of the charges, upon which an order was issued, dismissing him from the naval service of the Republic; and, as a court-martial is the proper and legitimate tribunal for such investigation, and as such court cannot be convened, composed of naval officers, it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of War and Marine to convene as soon as practicable, a court-martial, composed of the major general of the militia, and at least two brigadier generals, and other officers, next highest in grade in office, which shall constitute a naval court-martial for the investigation of the charges against the said Post Captain E. W. Moore, and said court-martial shall be governed by all the rules and regulations governing naval courts-martial.

“SEC. 2. Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of War and Marine is required to furnish the said Post Captain E. W. Moore with a copy of the charges and specifications against him, a copy of which shall also be furnished to said court, when it shall have convened.”

The committee of investigation of the Congress of Texas took up the charges one by one. They were seven in number, with multiplied specifications. After a long, honest, and laborious investigation, they acquitted him of the charge of murder, of the charge of piracy, of the charge of treason, and of the charge of defalcation to his Government. There, in the public records of the Republic of Texas, are resolutions acquitting him on each and every one of these grave charges.

The honorable Senator from Texas [Mr. Rusk] read to the Senate the resolution of the convention which assembled to form a State constitution, and it is of such a character as to show that they believed in no such charges. The resolution is in these words:

Resolved by the Delegates of the people in Convention assembled, That in closing their labors as the representatives of the people, they respectfully recommend to the favorable consideration of the American Government, their gallant fellow-citizen, Post Captain E. W. Moore, and request that he may be retained and provided for in the naval service thereof.—Journal of Convention, p. 312.

But, sir, the matter does not stop there. After the Congress of Texas had investigated the matter fully and thoroughly, Commodore Moore asked that a court martial might be assembled to try him for the offenses charged against him. The court martial was ordered, and the trial was had, running, I believe, through seventy days. At the end of seventy days, what was the verdict of that tribunal? Out of all the charges preferred against him he was acquitted upon each and every one, except four specifications, out of the six that were preferred under the charge of disobedience of orders, and the testimony is satisfactory to my mind that he could not have obeyed those orders. This is fully made out in the committee report. He was acquitted of every charge affecting his character and integrity as a man of honor and a gentleman. He was acquitted of treason. He was acquitted of peculation, because it was shown that, instead of his being a defaulter to the Government, the Government actually owed him over $11,000. The records show it. He was acquitted of every charge of a capital offense, and was found guilty of disobedience of certain orders, when he alleges it was impossible for him to obey these orders. Does that affect his character, his integrity, his honor as a man? Who is not guilty of disobedience of orders? Where is the officer in your Government who has not been guilty of disobedience of orders? The cases are numerous and multiplied.

But, sir, it is said that he is a defaulter—not only a defaulter to the Government of Texas, but to the Government of the United States. The resolutions passed by the Texas investigation show that he was not a defaulter to the Government of Texas, but that, on the contrary, that Government was indebted to him.

COMMITTEE ROOM, December 29, 1847.

To the honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

The select committee to whom was referred the "Report of the Comptroller of Public Accounts, with the accompanying documents, exhibiting his action under a joint resolution of the last Legislature," by which he was required "to settle the accounts of E. W. Moore, Post Captain Commanding the late Navy of Texas," have given to the subject their most mature consideration, and now beg leave to report to the House the result of their deliberations.

The account current made out by the auditor of the late Republic of Texas on the 27th of April, 1844, and which is contained among the papers submitted to us, shows that Commodore Moore is charged at that time by the auditor with the sum of $72,726 74, of which the sum of $18,812 74 is charged in exchequer bills, and the balance in par funds. He is credited by $21,851 38, leaving a balance against him of $50,875 36 which will appear by reference to document A, accompanying this report.

The comptroller in stating the accounts of Commodore Moore, has arranged his claims against the Government into five classes. The first class, amounting to $35,135 65, includes various kinds of cash disbursements for the use of the navy.

The second class, amounting to $8,138 50, embraces cash disbursements made in the enlistment of men, and bounty paid them upon entering the service.

The third class, amounting to $2,106 74, embraces expenditures for the use of the navy which were liquidated at the time they were incurred, by the individual obligations of Commodore Moore, with the hypothecation of exchequer bills at fifty cents on the dollar.

The fourth class is composed of items of disbursements for the use of the navy, of which $7,999 33 were liquidated by the individual obligations of Commodore Moore, and $1,183 30 were paid in cash.

The fifth class amounts to $1,325 20, and includes expenses incurred for the use of the navy, which were wholly liquidated by the individual obligations of Commodore Moore.

An abstract of the foregoing is among the papers submitted, and is made a part of this report, as document X.

The comptroller indorses all the vouchers for claims of the first class as "equitable and just," except the two last, numbered 143, for $500; and 144 for $355, which he submits "as informal vouchers to be acted upon by the Legislature." Your committee concur in the opinion expressed by the comptroller, that the vouchers of this class are equitable and just, and they perceive no difference between the character of the last two vouchers and that of the preceding ones, and believe that there can be no good reason why they should not be allowed.

The disbursements comprised in the second class are not indorsed by the comptroller, for the reason "that they are not of the kind authorized by the regulations of the service, though rendered necessary by the emergency of the times under which they were incurred." A bare reference to the nature of these disbursements will suffice to explain the necessity which prompted the expenditure. The navy was comparatively without men, and ordered upon an expedition against the enemy; the regulations of the naval service of the United States (which we view as a fair criterion in the absence of any positive law of our own) allows bounty to seamen who enlist, and authorizes the employment of persons for the purpose of procuring recruits. Of this character are all the disbursements of the second class. It is to be recollected that these disbursements were made in the United States, then a foreign country, and was a violation of the neutrality laws of that Government; all parties engaged in the transaction rendered themselves amenable to highly penal laws. Under these circumstances it is not unreasonable to suppose that the cost of enlisting men would have been higher than in ordinary cases. This, however, we do not find to be the case; on the contrary, the committee are convinced that the cost incurred is less than that which usually attends the enlistment of men under the most favorable circumstances.

The third class is composed of five items of disbursements made in the purchase of provisions and other naval supplies. The first four items were liquidated by the individual obligations of Commodore Moore, with a pledge of double the amount in exchequer bills; the hypothecation was forfeited, and the holders took the exchequer bills at fifty cents on the dollar. The last item was paid partly in par funds and partly in exchequers. These were all cash expenditures, and no obligation can exist to the disbursements included in this class.

In the fourth class are included disbursements made for the purchase of naval supplies. No doubt exists as to the correctness of the accounts; the only difficulty arises from the fact that a portion of the account was liquidated by the obligations of Commodore Moore, and the remainder paid in cash.

In the fifth class are included disbursements made for the purchase of naval supplies, and repairs of the sloop-of-war Austin; in satisfaction of which Commodore Moore gave his individual obligations. No disbursements of money were made for any item included in this class.

The auditor has charged in his account current the exchequer bills against Commodore Moore as par funds; this the committee do not conceive to be just. Satisfactory evidence is before us to show the rate at which these bills passed, from which it appears that for the amount of $18,812, he received actually $6,377 78, a fraction over thirty-three and a third cents on the dollar, and a higher rate than the market value at the time they were expended. We are therefore of opinion that the most equitable arrangement would be to require the actual proceeds only, of the depreciated currency to be accounted for; which makes a deduction of $12,434 22, to be placed to the credit of Commodore Moore.

In addition to the accounts stated upon the abstract of the comptroller, the committee believe that there are other credits justly due Commodore Moore.

The comptroller has deducted from the credits allowed, the sum of $777 22, the items of which will be seen by reference to exhibit marked B, accompanying this report; these deductions are made on the ground that no strictly legal vouchers existed for this portion of the disbursements. The evidence before us shows sufficiently that this amount was actually expended for the use of the navy, over and above what is allowed by the comptroller. The greater part is for medicines and clothing proper for the service; and the want of strictly formal vouchers should not, in our opinion, to preclude a recognition of the claim.

Another portion of the accounts of Commodore Moore are not allowed by the comptroller, on the ground that the disbursements were made through third persons, acting for him. We are convinced that all the expenditures of this character, amounting to $1,488 57 1/2, were incurred for the use of the navy, and paid for by Commodore Moore; and as they were actually received on board the different vessels, we can perceive no objection to allowing the account. An abstract of the various items included in this amount will be seen by reference to exhibit marked C.

Another account marked D, exhibits a statement of various cash disbursements for the use of the navy, for which no formal vouchers are shown, but which have every appearance of being equitable and just. This account is for $1,059 52, and all the items contained in it are for naval supplies and bounty to seamen; except one item of fifty dollars for cash advanced Thomas S. Lubbock while engaged in the service of the Government. The committee are of opinion that this item, although for money expended for the use of Government, ought not to be allowed, inasmuch as the disbursement was not strictly for the use of the navy. The last two accounts amount to $2,498 09 1/2.

It is to be observed, so far as relates to the greater part of the disbursements made by Commodore Moore, that the informality of the vouchers arises from the fact that he was, after the passage of the act of Congress of 18th January, A. D. 1841, naval storekeeper and navy agent, as well as commander of the entire fleet; had the two former offices been held by separate individuals, it would have been proper that requisitions should be made by the commanding officer for whatever supplies were needed for the service. But as he held all three of the offices, this formality might well be dispensed with; for it would be unnecessary for an officer to make requisitions upon himself. As this is the only formality wanting in a large majority of the vouchers, it is a mere technical quibble to reject a voucher for a defect so trifling and unimportant.

Your committee are satisfied that it was the intention of the Legislature, in passing the joint resolution under which the comptroller acted, that the accounts of Commodore Moore should be settled upon an equitable basis, and they have been governed by this construction of the resolution. There is no voucher approved by us which has not upon the face of it, evidence of intrinsic correctness. Taking into view the circumstances of the times, and the embarrassments which surrounded the naval service, it is to be wondered that even informal vouchers should have been preserved. We discover by reference to the former settlement made by the auditor, that many accounts are passed of the same character of those embraced in the present settlement, and upon vouchers equally informal.

So far as regards that class of accounts, amounting to $14,011 86, liquidated by the individual notes of Commodore Moore, an abstract of which accompanies this report, marked E, the committee are of opinion that they should not be estimated in settling the accounts of that officer with the Government; and they are of the same opinion in regard to the other class of accounts, for $1,190 20, (the items of which will be seen by reference to exhibit F,) which are unliquidated by any obligation of Commodore Moore, but like the last mentioned were purchased by him for the use of the navy, and upon a credit. The vouchers for both these classes are with the papers submitted to us, and belong to the archives of the auditorial department. These should be made the subject of a separate adjustment.

A recapitulation of the accounts of Commodore Moore shows the following result:

Balance due by Commodore Moore, as per account of Charles Mason, auditor.....	$50,875 36
By cash disbursements for the use of the navy—
—first class.....	$35,135 65
Cash disbursements for enlisting men, bounty, &c.—second class.....	8,138 50
Cash disbursements for the use of the navy—third class.....	2,106 74
Cash disbursements for the use of the navy—fourth class.....	1,183 30
Deductions made by comptroller for want of strict vouchers, see exhibit B.....	777 22
Disbursements not allowed by comptroller for want of formal vouchers, see exhibits C and D.....	2,498 09 1/2
Overcharge in Exchequer bills....	12,434 22
Balance.....	$62,273 72 1/2	$11,398 36 1/2

It will be perceived that a balance is left in favor of Commodore Moore of $11,398 36 1/2, which amount includes only the actual cash expenditures made in furnishing supplies for the navy, paying for repairs, and procuring enlistments in the naval service. In addition to this, Commodore Moore holds the purser's certificate for his pay from the time of entering the service up to the 25th of July, 1843. The sum of $360 was drawn by him in June, 1840, and the balance in his favor up to the 25th July, 1843, is $11,725 54. It further appears from the statement of the comptroller that Commodore Moore has received no part of his pay under the act of Congress passed 5th February, 1844, by which the sum of $16,000 was appropriated, to be paid pro rata to the officers of the navy, which will appear by reference to a certificate from the Comptroller accompanying this report, marked W.

At the time when the disbursements above stated were made, the act of Congress passed July 23, 1842, was in force. That act appropriated $15,000 for the outfit of the steamship Zavala; $25,000 for the outfit and provisioning of the navy, then in the service of the Government; $25,231 for the pay due the officers, seamen, and marines of the navy on the 1st of July, 1842; and $29,428 50 for six months' pay of the officers, seamen, and marines of the navy, for six months from and after the 1st of July, 1842, which amount by the act was required to be paid out of the first money in the Treasury." No part of this was drawn, except $7,487 78, by the Secretary of War and Marine, in December, 1843, from the appropriation for repairing the Zavala.

Commodore Moore, in view of these appropriations, and the assurance held out by the action of Congress that the navy would be kept in active service, incurred the expenses necessary to sustain and support that arm of the national defense, and fit it for active operations against the enemy. It is believed that the sums expended for these purposes were reasonable, and that the navy was fitted for its intended expedition upon the most reasonable terms.

In order to facilitate the outfit of the navy, and enable it to render the service which the country anxiously looked for, Commodore Moore, as the commanding officer, pledged his own credit, after expending the means in his hands belonging to the Government, and drawing largely upon his own private resources. Taking into view the appropriation above alluded to, and the general expectation of the country, which confidently anticipated a glorious result to the contemplated expedition, it could not be deemed unwise or improper that the officer upon whom rested the whole weight of responsibility should exceed the actual amount of Government funds in his hands, when the means used were directed to the achievement of the great object which every patriot desired—the chastisement of an insolent foe. Mexico had already declared our ports in a state of blockade, and menaced our coast with an invasion which we were incapable of repelling, unless by keeping the navy in service.

The honor of the country was vindicated by our small but gallant fleet when an opportunity offered of meeting the enemy.

Far from censuring as extravagant the conduct of the commander in supplying the navy with all the necessary means of bringing to an honorable conclusion the contest he was about engaging in, your committee are more disposed to applaud his efforts and admire the zeal manifested by that officer, directed, as it was, to the promotion of his country's glory. It is the pride of a generous country to bestow merited praise upon the patriotic exertions of its citizens.

Your committee having placed in possession of the House, so far as they are capable, the facts connected with the subject referred to them, and made such suggestions as they conceived to be proper, ask time to prepare and offer resolutions appropriate to the various matters which they have had under consideration.

All of which they respectfully submit.

COMMITTEE ROOM, January 4, 1848.

To the honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

The majority of the special committee to whom was referred the report of the Comptroller relative to the claims of E. W. Moore, Post Captain commanding the late navy of Texas, having further deliberated upon the matters referred to them, and upon which they reported on a former day, beg leave again to report, and offer the accompanying resolutions, which they recommend to the favorable consideration of the House of Representatives. The resolutions only place the accounts upon the same footing as if they had been audited by the proper accounting officers of the late Republic of Texas.

M. M. POTTER,
EMERY RAINS,
M. T. RODGERS,
JAMES WILLIE.

NOTE.—JOHN D. ANDERSON, the other member of the committee, had left the seat of government on sick leave.

Joint resolution to provide for the settlement of the claims of E. W. Moore, Post Captain commanding the late navy of Texas, on account of cash advances made for the use of said navy.

Whereas, it appears upon a settlement of the claims of E. W. Moore, Post Captain commanding the late Texas navy, that there is a balance due said E. W. Moore, of $11,398 36 1/2, from the late Republic of Texas, on account of cash advances made by him for the use of the navy thereof.

SEC. 1. Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That the said accounts and vouchers of said E. W. Moore, together with the report of the comptroller thereon, be deposited in the comptroller's office; and that the claim of said Moore for said sum of $11,398 36 1/2 shall be as valid and shall have the same force and effect as if the same had been audited and settled by the proper accounting officer of the late Republic of Texas.

SEC. 2. Be it further resolved, That this joint resolution take effect from and after its passage.

Joint resolution for the relief of persons who furnished supplies on the credit of Post Captain E. W. Moore for the use of the navy of the late Republic of Texas, while commanded by said Post Captain E. W. Moore.

Whereas, it appears that various supplies were furnished by different individuals for the use of the navy of the late Republic of Texas on the credit of Post Captain E. W. Moore, amounting to $15,202 06, the accounts and vouchers for which are on file among the archives of the auditorial department; therefore.

SEC. 1. Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That said accounts and vouchers, together with the report of the Comptroller in relation to the same, shall be deposited in the office of the Comptroller of public accounts, and when so deposited shall be as valid and have the same force and effect in favor of each claimant who furnished said supplies, as if the same had been audited and settled by the proper accounting officers of the late Republic of Texas; provided that said amount shall not exceed the sum of $15,202 06 as above specified; and further provided, that said claimants shall release said E. W. Moore from any liability on account of the claims above referred to.

Sec. 2. Be it further resolved, That this joint resolution take effect from and after its passage.

Report of Senate Committee.

COMMITTEE ROOM, January 14, 1848.

Hon. J. A. GRIER, President of the Senate.

The select committee to whom was referred the joint resolution for the settlement of the accounts of E. W. Moore, Post-Captain commanding the late navy of Texas, (and a joint resolution for the relief of persons who furnished supplies for the late navy of Texas,) have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report that, in conformity with a joint resolution of the last Legislature, the comptroller was "required to settle the accounts of E. W. Moore, Post-Captain, and report his action to this Legislature for their final ratification."

The accounts and vouchers have been examined and methodically arranged by the Comptroller, and have been subjected to a rigid scrutiny by a committee of the House of Representatives, whose report accompanies the resolutions. The same accounts and vouchers have likewise been examined by your committee, and they deem it proper to state that the resolutions propose a simple acknowledgment of the claims presented, requiring no appropriation of land or money, and if adopted, place the claims among the outstanding liabilities of Texas.

As an act of justice to those who have heretofore gallantly sustained the honor of the late Republic through her naval arm, your committee recommend the resolutions to the favorable consideration of the Senate.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. M. WILLIAMSON, Chairman.

PHILIP M. CUNEY,

A. M. PHILLIPS,

JESSE GRIMES,

HENRY J. JEWETT.

NOTE.—Both joint resolutions passed and were approved by the Governor, January 24, 1848.

It is said, however, that he is a defaulter to this Government. Now, allow me to call your attention to a very short note from the Solicitor of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, }
SOLICITOR'S OFFICE, January 18, 1851. }

United States vs. Edwin }
W. Moore, late Lt. in } Suit docketed to recover $906.11.
United States Navy. }

The clerk of the circuit court of the District of Columbia, for the county of Washington, on the 20th of December, 1850, reports to this office that this case is settled by order of the district attorney.

J. C. CLARK, Solicitor.

Here, then, is the receipt of your proper officer, dated in 1851, showing that the account had been settled. I have no wish to go into the details as to the charges of murder, treason, speculation, and defalcation. There can be no necessity for going into those details. Here are all the resolutions of the committee of investigation. Here is the indorsement of the Legislature of Texas, of three different Legislatures, and by an unanimous vote, declaring that it was their intention, when they annexed themselves to the United States, that the officers should go with the Texan navy. Now, I put it to every Senator here, is not the action of the Texan Legislatures entitled to some consideration? Ought not gentlemen to ponder before they make up their minds to turn these men out into the world, without any protection, without any guarantees, without any means of support unless by devoting their attention to some other profession, of which they know nothing, when no wrong is done to them, when no man in the Navy is superseded, but when eight men are simply added to the American Navy?

I repeat, Mr. President, the question is, whether these officers are worthy of association with the American Navy? I have upon my table resolutions which were passed by the people of Texas, before the return of this little squadron from their cruise on the ocean, at different points of the State, at different times and places, all of the most eulogistic and approving character, a few only of which I will here quote.

At a large and general meeting of the citizens of Galveston, pursuant to public notice, held at Shaw's Hotel, May 20th, 1843, his Honor John M. Allen, Mayor of the city, was called to the chair.

The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, in all time, and in every civilized country, it has been deemed alike the duty, the pleasure, and the pride of communities of freemen to distinguish, by every proper demonstration of esteem and regard, those who have signalized themselves by acts of heroic patriotism for the interest, safety, and honor of their country; wherefore, it is by this meeting,

"Resolved, That the late chivalrous conduct, and almost reckless self-devotion of Commodore E. W. Moore and the brave officers and men under his command on the coast of Yucatan, in a conflict with a greatly superior naval force of Mexico; while it is calculated to elevate our national character abroad, has justly entitled him and them to the fullest measure of their country's gratitude.

"Resolved, That the probable results of the late gallant actions and spirited bearing of our little navy may be justly held as of scarcely less importance to the national weal and independence, than the victory of San Jacinto in 1836, and consequently, that in our opinion Colonel James Morgan, by giving his previously avowed sanction to the naval expedition by the way of Yucatan, has acted nobly for his country, honorably for himself, justly towards a brave and meritorious officer, and, in fine, in such a way as to secure for himself the deep and lasting gratitude of his country."

At a meeting of the ladies of Galveston, May 24, 1845, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Although we feel it does not become us to meddle, in any manner, in public affairs, yielding to the 'lords of creation' the right to applaud or censure the wisdom or folly of political management, we yet claim it as our peculiar prerogative to bestow thanks and applause on the gallant and brave, and upon an occasion like the present, cannot withhold the expression of our gratitude from those who have protected our homes from the incursions of a cruel and barbarous enemy, and relieved us from the fears and anxieties by which we were constantly harassed. During the absence and inactivity of our gallant little navy, we have felt the deepest solicitude for our homes and children. From that we have been most happily relieved by the late well-timed movement of Commodore Moore and our esteemed citizen, Colonel Morgan. The bravery and gallantry of the Commodore, his officers and men, and the wise and prompt action of Colonel Morgan in sanctioning the sailing of the two vessels to the coast of Yucatan, deserve and have our deepest and most lasting gratitude. Therefore,

"Resolved, That we tender the cordial expression of our gratitude and admiration to Commodore Moore, his officers and men, for their efforts in behalf of their country at a most critical period in its affairs.

"Resolved, That we tender a like expression of feeling to Colonel James Morgan, who so nobly and patriotically risked his reputation and life in his country's cause.

"Resolved, That we will furnish, at the earliest opportunity, a badge for Commodore Moore and each of his officers, which we will request them to accept as an evidence of our gratitude and high esteem for their valor and patriotism.

"Resolved, That the secretary send a copy of these resolutions to Commodore Moore, Captain Lothrop, and Colonel Morgan."

The citizens of the county of Matagorda, pursuant to a public call, held a meeting in the town of Matagorda, June 10, 1843, at which a series of resolutions were unanimously adopted, the sixth of which is the following:

"Resolved, That to Commodore Edwin W. Moore, for his daring gallantry, the country owes a debt of lasting gratitude and honor; that we tender him the thanks due to a soldier without fear, and a man without reproach, whose achievements have already adorned the annals of his country. Let his fate be what it may, a splendid victory or an utter wreck, his honor is safe, and his destiny is glorious. Long may he live to wear the laurels he has so nobly won."

We have not only the assemblages of the people at which they indorsed the patriotic services of these men, but we have other and higher testimony. I hold in my hand a book which I think is entitled to consideration, written by an officer of the American Navy, Lieutenant Semmes; its title is "Service Afloat and Ashore." Without trespassing on the time of the Senate to read it, (but which I will publish in my remarks,) I will only say that he declares the whole conduct of Commodore Moore and his little band, throughout the whole of that great struggle for the rights of man, was worthy of the proudest days of chivalry; and he says that, next to the hero of San Jacinto, E. W. Moore is entitled to more credit for the liberties of the Republic of Texas, than any man who lives. More than that, he teaches a lesson to his brothers in the American Navy which it would do good if each of them could hear, and feel, and appreciate. He says, that, so far from opposing the incorporation of this little band into the Navy of the United States, his proud heart, as an American sailor, as a man devoted to his country, beats with longing, anxious expectation, for the hour to come when justice shall be done to this little patriotic band, who sacrificed all but their honors and their lives to vindicate their country, and to add undying honor to their names.

Extracts from Lieutenant Semmes's Book.

"A revolutionary, or a government de facto, must give to itself a reasonable degree of firmness and stability, before it can be recognized. This Texas effectually did, in the course of the next few years. She not only made good a defensive position; she did more: she built and equipped a fleet, and giving her 'lone star' proudly to the breeze, under the guidance of the gallant Commodore Moore, drove her enemy's cruisers from the sea, and shut up his ports.

"The district of country between San Luis Potosi and Saltillo, a march of five or six days, is an arid desert, not even affording water, in many places, to the parched and travel-worn soldier. It was almost a physical impossibility, therefore, for Mexico to carry on a war of any duration against Texas, by land. But what if the sea had been open to her? The result might have been very different, and the United States, instead of being the giant empire she is, might still be circumscribed, on the south and west, by the Sabine, content to delay her great march of progress many years yet. History will bear me out, when I affirm, that next to General Houston, the hero of San Jacinto, Texas owes more to Commodore Moore than to any other man who has figured in the drama of her revolution. With an energy and ability possessed by but few men, he took hold of the discordant materials which Texas was collecting for the formation of a navy, (a work, generally, of time and much patient toil), reduced them to system and order, and presented to the world the spectacle of a well organized marine, bearing the flag of a Republic not four years old.

"In 1840, when President Santa Anna declared the coast of the rebellious Republic in a state of blockade, the gallant Texan commodore put to sea, and not only prevented the enemy from attempting to enforce his blockade, but proceeded off his principal port, (Vera Cruz,) and blockaded him instead. The whole Mexican coast was secured by his little squadron, consisting of a sloop of war, a steamer, and three or four schooners, and several captures were made. He not only kept the coast in a state of constant alarm, but proceeded up the river Tobasco, captured the town of that name, which he retained possession of for three weeks, and levied a contribution on the people, which enabled him to support his squadron for nearly a year, without drawing a dollar from the public treasury! Subsequently he entered into a league with Yucatan, which gave much alarm and concern to Mexico, and from which, among other advantages, resulted the no inconsiderable one, of his being able, still further, to support his squadron, without expense to his then impoverished country. He engaged and beat off the enemy's squadron (consisting of two heavy steamers and other vessels) of much superior force; and, in short, by his gallantry, energy, and judgment, caused Mexico, in the language of Mr. Webster, to abstain, 'during all this time, from any new attempt to establish her authority in this Territory.'

"The reader will pardon me, if I pause to make a remark here, not strictly relevant to my subject. This gallant officer, to whom Texas owes so much, was shamefully neglected in the treaty of annexation. He had been bred in the naval service of the United States, and should have been returned to this service, as the least reward that could have been bestowed upon him, for the gallant and able services he had rendered. He had been involved in some difficulties, it is true, with the authorities of Texas, but it is precisely through those difficulties, that I see him in the most enviable light. He bore himself through the whole of them as a high-minded, honorable officer, who not only had the interest of his country at heart, but understood it, and served it, much better than those who differed with him in opinion. He maintained a discipline in his squadron, which none but a man of firmness and courage could have maintained, and caused the flag of Texas not only to be feared by its enemies, but respected by neutrals.

"It is to be hoped that our own Government will speedily make amends to this gallant man for the neglect with which he has been treated by Texas. Now that Texas is a portion of our territory, any services which may have been rendered to her, have, in fact, been rendered to us. It has been objected that Commodore Moore abandoned his own service to enter that of a foreign State; and that this should prevent him from returning. How shallow must be the reasoning founded on such an objection! This is, on the contrary, one of the strongest arguments why he should come back, since, instead of being a drone, content to grow fat, and idle away his existence in the lap of peace, it shows him to have been a man of boldness and enterprise, worthy of the profession in which he had been trained, and a servant to be sought after, if the interests of the Government are to be considered. In becoming a Texan, he did not cease to be an American—the Texans were all Americans."

Sir, I am vindicating the character of Commodore Moore. Here are the testimonials of his own countrymen in public meetings assembled. Here are the testimonials of his own Legislature, his own Congress, time after time expressed. Here is the testimony of an honest officer of the American Navy. Here are other testimonials, to which I might refer; but I come to one higher than all, and above all, and which eclipses all. I come to an authority which none will dispute, and none gainsay. I will read the testimony of the distinguished, honored, and illustrious hero of San Jacinto—the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Houston,]—and he will pardon me while I read it:

"Some of the most gallant commanders of the American Navy, who had distinguished themselves, and added lustre to the character of the country during the last war, had been taken from our commercial marine, and had, of course, been without any previous training in maritime war, and yet they sustained the honor of the American flag as proudly and as gallantly on the briny surge as could have been done after the most assiduous preparation. He trusted American officers ever would do so; and he was prepared to pledge himself that those of Texas never would disgrace that beloved star-spangled banner which throws its folds to the wind in every sea. If any of them, owing to sickness or any other Providential intervention, had been prevented from that personal experience which they might have obtained in active service; and if others, following the bent of an ardent temperament, and weary of the inactivity of peace, had voluntarily engaged in the service of a foreign friendly power, was it to be made an objection against their being admitted to a place and a command in the American Navy? As well might objection be made to those who resisted the invasion of the Texan soil, and achieved and maintained the independence of the Texan Republic, that they were not graduated at West Point. As well might Texan citizens be excluded from seats in the two Houses of Congress because they had not received a collegiate education, nor enjoyed the same facilities with others of consulting libraries, and becoming familiar with the classics. If a doctrine like this was to be established, Texas might not be fully represented in either House of Congress. But it was not by such a test that the merits of this bill were to tried."

"Some of her officers had devoted themselves for years to naval pursuits alone, and had thereby been cut off from all other avocations. Nor could they, in point of morals, demeanor, or honorable conduct, disgrace American officers as associates. They were themselves Americans; their origin was the same; their political and moral training the same; nor would they disappoint the just expectations of those with whom they were to be connected."

After this I need say no more on this point. But, let me refer again, very briefly, to the points involved in the amendment of the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk.] I think we are bound by every consideration of justice, and equity, and magnanimity, to incorporate these men into the American Navy. It does no wrong to any man; it does no injustice to any man; it postpones no man. The question is, are they worthy of this association? I leave you, sir—I leave the Senate—and I leave the world, to judge from the records of the country whether they are worthy or not.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, I know the importance of time at this period of the session, and I regret that I shall have to limit myself to some four or five minutes; but, sir, I understand that the honorable Senator from Tennessee has read from a speech of mine on this subject, and a few remarks explanatory of that may be necessary for me. I was out at the moment, and did not hear it; but I understand that he has read it. When that speech was made, it was a distinct understanding between my colleague and myself that I should vote for the Texas navy bill, because there were meritorious officers not only impliedly, but directly interested in the result of it. He was to speak on the occasion; but he was very much indisposed when the day arrived, and was too unwell to attend the Senate. In consequence of his absence I delivered the speech in support of the bill. If the Senator will refer to that speech, he will perceive that I spoke of those of the Texas navy who were in service at the time of the annexation. Some two or three years previous to the annexation, I think, Commodore Moore was dishonorably discharged from the service of Texas, for flagrant offenses, and none of the remarks made in the speech applied to his case.

Sir, the Senator has spoken of the resolutions of the Texas Legislature. We know how easy it is to get resolutions passed in a Legislature adverse to the Executive, particularly when they go to impugn his acts. It is very easy to get such things upon ex parte representations. There were gentlemen who emigrated to Texas after the tumults of the revolution, and they were unprepared to investigate these matters, and would of course adopt any resolution, or sign any recommendation, that was handed to them. They had no disposition to investigate the matters, and I do not think, therefore, that the resolutions to which the Senator has referred, help the case at all.

The Senator also referred to the finding of the court-martial in the case of Commodore Moore. He admits that it is conclusive on the subject of disobedience of orders; but he asks who does not disobey orders? I have no doubt Commodore Moore thought it was a perfectly immaterial matter. He was sworn to obey orders, but he did not choose to do it. His obligation was of very light import, and seemed to have no moral or binding force upon him. But, sir, that offense of disobedience of orders embraced, piracy, murder, and treason, all at once. Yes, sir, that act of disobedience of orders, with one fell swoop, embraced the whole catalogue of criminalities charged upon him. Did he not disobey the order by which he was directed to sail to Galveston? He disobeyed four successive orders. He was suspended from command. He was ordered into arrest. Two commissioners were sent, with a proclamation, denouncing him as a pirate, if he dared to sail with the flag of Texas upon the high seas; and in the face of this he ordered a court-martial, and by it men were tried and executed. Could he rightly do it under such circumstances? No, sir. When homicide is perpetrated, except by the sanction of the law, and by the hand of the proper appointee, it is murder. It may not always be murder technically, but it is murder morally. Thus he stands before the world.

We are told, further, that he threw his private fortune into the scale for Texas. What was it. A mere pittance. To be sure, there had been a defalcation here of a few hundred dollars. Where did he take his private fortune? When he was a delinquent to this country, did he munificently bestow it upon Texas? Sir, he was the recipient of all that was stipulated in the contract with Yucatan. He received all the money, and disbursed it himself. He might have called it his private fortune, for he was the proprietor of the navy from 1839 to 1842, when he was dishonorably discharged from the service; but I deny that he performed a day's service under the orders of the Government of Texas, for Texan defense or the vindication of Texan honor. The President of Texas, in 1840, entered into a compact with Yucatan, and subsidized the navy, and sent this commodore with it, and he remained until some time in 1842, at sea, not fighting the battles of Texas, but fighting in a rebellion between a revolting State, and the Federal Government of Mexico. After he came back, he ran away with the navy again, and returned to his old haunts; but he never struck a blow for Texas, for her liberty, or for her honor, and not one day did he sail to protect her ports; but during two successive invasions of the enemy, he was either at Yucatan or in the port of New Orleans. Of seven very fine vessels, he brought back the Austin and the Wharton, with a wounded man on each, as he said. These are the great trophies of his victories; this the proud history of his triumphs, with the exception of dodging the sixty-two pound shot. He did that, and for that reason alone, I suppose, he is entitled to honorable association with the officers of the American Navy. That should give him an admiral's position, because none of them, from Paul Jones down to the last gallant tar who stood upon an American deck, ever had the dexterity to dodge a sixty-two pound shot.

But, sir, there are men in the Texas navy who have merit; there are men connected with that navy who discharged their duty to the last, and showed no disloyalty to the Government, and for them I should be willing to provide.

Sir, it was an easy matter to go to the Legislature at any time, and get through resolutions. It was easy to confederate with the court which was ordered, not in accordance with the law. It was a matter of grace with the Executive, to say that a court-martial might be assembled, because that was an ex post facto proceeding. The law had been, that no officer could be tried but by his peers; there was but one commodore; and therefore it was alleged no trial could take place; but he was to roam the pirate of the world, I suppose, without any reprehension, or liability to removal. The President of Texas, in his case, exercised an inherent right, which resides somewhere. There is a remedy to correct vast evils and crimes that are glaring. The President took it upon himself to rebuke this man in a proper manner, and to exercise the power which, it appeared upon the face of the commission, he was authorized to exercise; for every officer holds his commission during the pleasure of the President. It was so in General Washington's commission; it is so in every commission down to the present time. It was so solemnly adjudicated in a case decided thirty years ago. When Commodore Porter was upon trial, it was decided that the President had the right to dismiss him, without the intervention of a court. Mr. Adams laid it down as a correct principle, and it was acquiesced in by Congress, that it was a right appurtenant to the President. If it were not, what would be the consequence? If an individual who was the general-in-chief, were to invite an enemy into your camp, or attempt to betray the nation, would not the head of the Government have the right to arrest him, though it might have been arranged improvidently that he could only be tried by his peers?

Sir, it is a very strange and remarkable thing, that the sympathies of Texas should be so much enlisted in behalf of this individual, who has traduced and denounced for years to Senators the person who is now addressing you. It is stranger still, that notwithstanding all his efforts to shield his immaculate honor, his redoubtable courage, and his "dodging" faculties, he should find that the person whom he has assailed continuously, has been indorsed by the almost unanimous voice of Texas, by three successive senatorial elections, although he never visited the seat of government from the time it became a State until his third election, and never wrote a letter to a member of the Legislature upon the subject of the election, and one who intends, if he lives, to restore to them the office which he holds, not grudgingly, but to return it to them unspent, with the time unexhausted.

But, sir, I will not descend to the petty incidents connected with the transactions of this individual. All I wish is to vindicate Texas against the imputation of having received any man's services without making compensation. Sir, she has had no contributions of valor, of blood, or of chivalry, which she has not rewarded amply and munificently. Some of them who claim to have rendered her great benefits are like the one I spoke of the other day, and like the one who is now the subject of remark. They say they conferred benefits on Texas, when the fact is that they never met an enemy in the cause of Texas, and never raised an arm to defend her honor or her flag under the orders of the Government of Texas. If they have been filibusters on other nations, I care not for them. I will vindicate Texas to the last. She has enough sons who are worthy of such a mother, and who may well wear her honors; but I will have no bastard to come in and claim their birthright.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was here received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the bill authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, and conferring certain privileges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

Also, that they had passed a bill to repeal the act entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ALEXANDRIA AND WASHINGTON RAILROAD.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the committee of conference on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill "authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, and conferring certain privileges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company," reported that they had had the subject under consideration, and recommend that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and that the said bill, as it passed the House, be adopted, with the following proviso to the second section, which conferred on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company the right to run a branch road on the eastern side of the Potomac to a point opposite Alexandria:

Provided, however, That this section shall remain suspended for two years from the first day of January, 1855, and if, at the end of that time, the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company shall not have completed a railroad to Alexandria, and have the same in good running order, in pursuance of the requirements of the preceding sections of this act, then the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall have the privilege of extending their road by either of the routes authorized by this act: And provided further, That if said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall not have executed so much of the provisions of this act as relates to their company by the first day of January, 1859, then this act shall be void.

The Senate proceeded to consider the above report; and they concurred therein, and resolved that the bill be so amended.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, the question being on Mr. Rusk's amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There are but one or two points on which I desire to reply to the Senator from Texas. I take him, first, at his concluding remark. He says he is ready to vindicate the honor and the character of Texas. Why, sir, he need not have advertised that. His whole history illustrates it; but while he is attempting to vindicate that nationality, and that honor, and that glory, and that chivalry, I ask him to pause and consider whether he is not striking a fatal blow at some of her most glorious achievements. It is true, sir, that the gallant conduct of this commodore may not have equaled the grandeur and the splendor of Sicinius; it is true that he may not have had his untold fleets in his wake; but I am prepared to say that for deeds of gallantry, and nobleness, and daring, by the witness of the honorable Senator himself, he stands vindicated before the world. If a man's deeds are to be counted by the paraphernalia of war, what becomes of the glories of San Jacinto? In its troops, its serried ranks, and its scores of cannon, how does it compare in all the splendor, in all the paraphernalia of war, with Lodi, or Austerlitz, or some of those magnificent achievements? Why will the honorable Senator lessen his own achievements by depreciating those of others? He says he wants to vindicate the honor and glory of Texas; but he is determined there shall no bastards reap of that glory. If this man be a bastard, who is not a bastard of Texas? Is not my honorable friend who sits near me, whose every breath that he has breathed, has been for the honor and glory of his country, a bastard in that sense? While he was exposing his bosom to the shafts of the enemy, and lying unprotected on the cold ground to vindicate the honor of that country, he was a poor miserable bastard! And where is the honorable Senator himself? Does he claim to be a native of Texas? And if Moore be a bastard is not the Senator a bastard? They fought under the same flag for the same rights and the same honor, and exposed their lives in the same cause. If one is a bastard, so is the other.

But, Mr. President, if any man has been wronged, who is the wrong-doer? Has not Texas, that same glorious State, whose honor is now to be vindicated in every form and shape known to the rights of man and the law, indorsed and vindicated the gallantry of this man? Has not the free, the unbought, the unbuyable feeling of the people, proclaimed his gallantry, his patriotism, and his devotion to his country; and three times in the Congress of that Republic reaffirmed and reindorsed that gallant service? And more than that, the very Legislature that sent the honorable Senator here, which he speaks of with so much pride—the Legislature that gave him his commission to stand upon this floor—unanimously, without one dissenting voice, passed resolutions indorsing the conduct of Commodore Moore, and asked the Congress of the United States to incorporate him into our Navy. The very Legislature that elected the honorable Senator passed those resolutions without a dissenting voice; and the Senator himself voted, at the last session, in conformity with those resolutions.

But, sir, the Senator says, that Commodore Moore was dishonorably discharged; and therefore, when he executed the unfortunate men alluded to, that he was a murderer. Who discharged him? The President of Texas. Now, I appeal to the honorable Senator's colleague to know, whether he had any power to discharge him; whether it was not expressly provided for; whether the honorable Senator did not admit in his speech, that, before any man could be dismissed, he should be tried by his peers? The laws of Texas show that the President of that Republic had no power to dismiss Commodore Moore. He was not tried, except upon his own application, and the court-martial acquitted him of all the charges. Here I have the proceedings of that court-martial. Here are the charges and specifications, and here is the finding of the court:

Charges.

Charge 1. Willful neglect of duty—six specifications.

Finding of Court-Martial.

The court having fully and maturely investigated the matter submitted to it, in the case of E. W. Moore, post captain, Texas navy, and considered the charges and specifications, the evidence and defense of the accused, proceeded this 21st day of August, 1844, at which time the court had been adjourned from day to day, to determine the same. And after such deliberation, it is of opinion that the six specifications under the first charge are not sustained.

Charge 2. Misapplication of money, embezzlement of public property, and fraud—three specifications.

That the three specifications under second charge are not sustained.

Charge 3. Disobedience of orders—six specifications.

Charge 4. Contempt and defiance of the laws and authority of the country—five specifications.

Charge 5. Treason—one specification.

Charge 6. Murder—one specification.

That the second, third, fourth, and fifth specifications under third charge, are sustained; and that the first and sixth specifications under same charge are not sustained.

That the five specifications under fourth charge are not sustained.

That the fifth charge and specification are not sustained.

That the sixth charge and specification are not sustained.

The court therefore pronounce it as their opinion, that the accused is guilty of disobedience of orders in manner and form as set forth in specifications second, third, fourth, and fifth, in charge third.

SIDNEY SHERMAN,
Major-General, President.

NOTE.—The report of the joint naval committee will show that the orders included in the four specifications of third charge, were in part conditional, and the others Commodore Moore could not carry out, and so reported upon the receipt of them.

They acquit him of each and every charge except four specifications of the six under that of disobedience of orders. They acquit of this charge of murder. Now, if he was a murderer, and he had not voluntarily came forward the honorable Senator admits he could not have been tried; but he came forward, asked to be tried, and a court-martial was appointed. He was tried on the charge of murder and was acquitted; and now, in the name of reason, in the name of humanity, in the name of liberality, I ask that honorable Senator if it is not time to cease to prefer the charge of murder? He is tried by a court-martial; he is acquitted by the court-martial; should not then the charge be dropped? If you take the veriest villain in your streets, and have him tried by a jury, if he is acquitted, whether in reality he be guilty or innocent, the world says he is innocent. I hope, then, the Senator will cease to stand up and repeat this charge of murder.

But, Mr. President, I desire to allude to another point. The honorable Senator says that Commodore Moore was guilty of disobedience of orders in not going into the port of Galveston. Now, sir, an act was passed by the Congress of Texas, called the secret act, directing the President of Texas to appoint two commissioners to go and take charge of those vessels. Commissioner Morgan went. Moore was then in the port of New Orleans. Morgan went on board his vessel there. I have his testimony before me, and I will publish what of it is necessary to prove that Commodore Moore acted in all things as the commissioner wished, and in what they both believed was for the most vital interests of their common country. This testimony proves the coolness and gallantry of Commodore Moore in battle, against a vastly superior force. It proves that he drove the enemy from the blockade of Campeachy. It proves that he commanded his ship with great skill and ability. It proves that he was retained in command of these vessels by the commissioners, they having secret orders from the President of Texas to do all things necessary for the interest of the country. It proves they found no necessity for using the proclamation which the President saw fit to publish when Commodore Moore, under the control of the commissioners, was in the presence of a greatly superior force of a cruel and barbarous enemy; and above all, it proves that the commissioner reported to the Government, by letter, that "all was right," and that by the timely move of the two vessels, which was suggested to Commodore Moore by him, an invasion of Texas had been prevented.

Here is the testimony—it is full and complete:

"Question—Did you or did you not hand me, on or about the 3d of April, 1843, the letter from the Department of War and Marine, dated March 21, 1843, as stated in specification fifth, of charge third?"

"Answer—Yes; I handed you the letter named in the question."

"Question—Was or was not said letter (dated March 21, 1843) sealed when you handed it to me?"

"Answer—It was not; there was a seal and stamp of the Republic on the envelope, but it was not closed by a seal."

"Question—You will please state to the court the purport of the conversation which took place between us upon your handing me said letter, and after I had read the same?"

"Answer—You looked at it, and observed, 'the letter was unsealed;' I said yes. You remarked 'it was strange the Department should send a letter in that manner,' and asked me if I knew the contents of it; I said yes, I have a copy of it. We met again soon after, and you remarked to me, 'you see the situation I am now placed in. I have been at a vast expense to get these vessels fitted out and ready for sea; you know what a situation the vessels are now. I entered into a contract with the Yucatan Government, which I felt myself legally authorized to do, and am now suspended from command of the vessels by this order. If I obey this order and leave the vessels in the port of New Orleans, every officer under me will resign. The vessels will be left at the mercy of the sailors, who will be sure to mutiny and destroy them—which they threatened to do once before when I could not pay them off.'

"I said to Commodore Moore, the orders the commissioners have now received, are painful to me, I assure you. I accepted this commission with a great deal of reluctance, but I mean to execute the orders, regardless of consequences. He then asked me if I had a communication for any officer under his command; I told him 'I had another communication for Captain Lathrop, to take charge of the vessels.' He asked me if I had delivered it; I told him I had put it under a sealed cover and handed it to Mr. Stephens, who was secretary to the commission, to deliver to him; supposing he was on board the brig under his command, which was at anchor below the city."

"I think Commodore Moore then repeated what he said to me before of his peculiar situation, the liability of the vessels to be destroyed if he left them, the loss the Government might sustain thereby; and remarked to me, 'if I would withdraw the communication to Captain Lathrop, he would proceed with the vessels immediately to Galveston, and go with me direct to the President, and endeavor to satisfy him that he never intended to do anything wrong with the vessels, nor anything that would compromise his own honor, or that of his adopted country.' I remarked to him, 'now that is precisely what I want done with the vessels. If Captain Lathrop has not received and read the communication I have sent him by Mr. Stephens this evening, the arrangement proposed shall be made, and you shall continue in command of the vessels until our arrival at Galveston.' I then sought Mr. Stephens, to know if he had delivered the communication, but did not find him; but soon after I met with Captain Lathrop, and inquired of him if he had received a communication from me, sent him by Mr. Stephens; he replied that he had received no communication from me that he knew of. I then remarked to him, 'Captain Lathrop, if you do receive a communication from Mr. Stephens under a sealed cover, it is from me, and I would be glad if you would not break the seal, but return it to me with the seal unbroken;' upon which he drew from his pocket the said communication, held it up to me, and asked me if that was it? I told him it was, and that it was a communication from the Department of War and Marine; he then remarked that any communication from the Department of War and Marine to him, should come through Commodore Moore. No further conversation took place between Captain Lathrop and myself."

"Soon after, I fell in with Commodore Moore, and remarked to him: 'I have got the communication from Captain Lathrop, and he had not broken the seal; and the understanding between us now is, that you continue in command of the vessels until we get them into Galveston, where we are to proceed immediately.' Commodore Moore replied: 'Yes, I pledge you my honor there shall be no delay, and we will go immediately to Galveston.' I remarked to him, 'As it will be saving the Government some expense, I will take passage with you if you have no objection;' to which he replied, 'I should be happy of your company.'

"In the morning, as soon as I met the other commissioner, Mr. Bryan, I made known to him the arrangement between Commodore Moore and myself, to know if it met his approbation, at which he seemed highly gratified, and concurred fully therein."

"Question—Was it not agreed upon by us that the purport of our conversation and agreement should be put in writing?"

"Answer—It was."

"Question—Did I not address the commissioners the next day after the letter from the Department of War and Marine, dated March 21, 1843, was handed to me?"

"Answer—Yes, you did."

"Question—Did you or did you not communicate to the Government the tenor and purport of your acts, and the arrangement agreed upon between us, after you had received the letter from the Department of War and Marine for me, dated March 21, 1843, which you handed me, as you have already stated?"

"Answer—We did."

"Question—Did you at any time show me any part of your instructions as commissioner?"

"Answer—No; because the commissioners were ordered to keep their instructions secret."

"Question—You will please state to the court, under what circumstances, and where the proclamation of President Houston, dated March 23, 1843, was shown to me, as stated in specification four, of charge four?"

"Answer—After Commodore Moore and myself had made the compromise and entered into the agreement before stated, about proceeding direct to Galveston with the vessels, a day or two after that, I remarked to Commodore Moore, 'I feel particularly gratified that matters have taken the turn between us that they have, for if you had been obstinate or disposed to act incorrectly in any way with the vessels, I had a paper that would have controlled you.' He smiled, and asked me what it was? I told him if he would come to my room at any time, I would show it to him. The next day after this conversation, he called at my room and asked me to let him see the paper I spoke of. I told him it was a proclamation from President Houston, which I handed to him and he read it, at which he made an exclamation after reading it of 'Good God! did the President think I was going to run away with the vessels or turn pirate?' or something to that effect. It was understood that what transpired in the room at that time, with regard to the proclamation, was strictly confidential."

"Question—You will please state the reasons why the proclamation of President Houston was not published before we sailed from New Orleans?"

"Answer—Because the commissioners considered there was no necessity for it.

"Question—You will please state to the court the reasons of our route being changed after our arrival at the mouth of the Mississippi, and all the circumstances connected with the same?

"Answer—The next morning after we arrived at the Balize and came to anchor, there came on board the Austin the captains of two vessels, and a passenger, who stated that their vessels were just from Campechy—the last vessel three days and ten hours. On inquiry we learned from the captain and passenger of the last arrival, that the Yucatacos and Mexicans were about settling their difficulties; that General Ampudia had ceased to bombard the town; that the Governor and authorities of Campechy, and General Ampudia, were having almost daily interviews, and that it was their intention to unite against Texas; that the division of troops under Generals Barragan and Lemos that went to attack Merida had failed in their enterprise, were defeated, and had capitulated, and by an arrangement agreed upon, the troops were to leave there in twenty days; that General Ampudia had sent the steamer Montezuma to Telchac to take the troops on board to bring them up to Campechy; and that it seemed to be well understood at Campechy that Ampudia was concentrating all the forces he had in Yucatan for the purpose of proceeding forthwith to Galveston; and it was believed that he was urging the Yucatacos daily to join him, inasmuch as Commodore Moore had disappointed and deceived them in the aid promised with the vessels under his command, and that it was the belief of Governor Mendez, of Yucatan, with many others at Campechy, that Commodore Moore had been bribed by the Mexican Government not to furnish the aid he had stipulated to do, and that many of the Yucatacos were getting quite exasperated at Commodore Moore's supposed treachery.

"I then made particular inquiry of the gentlemen who furnished this information, of the situation of their steamers, their force, and their other vessels of war, and they corroborated the statements I had had before of them—that their steamers were badly manned, their chief dependence being upon Englishmen they had on board, who were represented in a state of insubordination; and it was believed that our two vessels could whip their whole fleet, if we should fall in with them. The steamer Montezuma was at Telchac alone, one hundred and fifty miles to windward of Campechy, waiting for the troops of Barragan and Lemos; and if our two vessels were to proceed to Telchac, we would find her there alone, and might easily capture her, by which means the balance of the Mexican fleet would fall into our hands. The passage to Telchac from Balize might consume about four days, and as there was no doubt of our finding her there alone, as it would be impossible for the troops that capitulated near Merida to reach the coast and embark before we could get there; and as from the information I had received in New Orleans about the intention of the Mexicans to make an attack upon Galveston in the spring, so fully confirmed by the information received at the Balize; and from what General Houston had assured me in the winter, during the session of Congress, 'that there was to be a formidable invasion of the country; that it was gone, and out of his power to save it; that it would cease to be a Republic in six months!'—all these circumstances taken together, with information so fully confirmed, that the enemy intended to make a descent upon the coast, I was induced to hazard the responsibility by suggesting to Commodore Moore to take Telchac and the coast of Yucatan in our way to Galveston, to save the Republic, if I could.

"Question—Were you, or were you not fully satisfied that I would have proceeded direct to Galveston from the Balize but for your having expressed to me, as stated by you in reply to the last question, the wish or suggestion that we should take the coast of Yucatan on our way to Galveston?

"Answer—Yes; I feel assured that Commodore Moore had not the least intention of going anywhere but to Galveston, when I suggested it to him.

"Question—What was the condition and state of discipline of the Austin during the time that you were on board of her?

"Answer—A more perfect state of discipline than was on board of that vessel is beyond my comprehension.

"Question—At or about what dates did you go on board the Austin, and leave her?

"Answer—The evening of the 15th April, 1843, I went on board in the Mississippi. I left her on the 15th July, 1843, in Galveston.

"Question—You will please state to the court my conduct while in sight of the enemy; my efforts to engage them, and my conduct while in battle?

"Answer—Commodore Moore was cool and collected when we hoisted in sight of the enemy, and the enemy were bearing down upon us; 'at the same time appearing extremely gratified that there was an opportunity of closing with the enemy.' While closing with the enemy, as they were bearing down upon us, he ordered his men to keep cool and be deliberate, and take care not to waste their ammunition, and not to fire unless they felt pretty sure their shots would tell. The enemy commenced firing some twenty or thirty minutes, I think, before the Commodore suffered a gun to be fired; then he observed to the first lieutenant, (for I was standing close by him,) 'they don't intend to let us get any nearer to them; they are paddling off stern foremost, faster than we can come up to them; keep her away a little, so our broadside can bear, and, damn them, give it to them!' and then the action became general between the Austin and Wharton, against the two steamers, the two brigs, and two schooners, all firing into us at once.

"During the whole of the engagement the Commodore kept cool and collected, and managed his ship with great skill, as I thought; the enemy finally ran off without the reach of our guns, it became perfectly calm, and the action ceased.

"While we remained at Campechy, after coming to anchor, Commodore Moore's efforts to engage the enemy were unceasing; which he never could effect until the 16th of May. Soon after daylight, on the morning of the 16th,

I discovered, from the hotel where I boarded, on shore, the ship Austin and brig Wharton under way, standing out of the harbor, and the two Mexican steamers standing out from Lerna to sea, under a press of steam, and a schooner in company. Soon after sunrise I could perceive the ship, brig, and gun boats all in pursuit of them. About nine or ten o'clock the action commenced between the ship Austin, brig Wharton, and Yucatan gun boats, and the two Mexican steamers and schooner Eagle. The steamers, under a press of steam, running out to sea, Commodore Moore and his squadron in pursuit of them; and they kept up a running fight of several hours, until they were not visible from shore.

"Question—You will please state to the court what I informed you on the 30th of April, when I advised you, and insisted on your going on shore in one of the gun boats?

"Answer—I do not remember any precise conversation; my opinion is, there was an anxiety on both our parts that I should have an interview with the Governor of Yucatan immediately, and learn the feelings of the Yucatacos towards Texas. I took with me a letter from Commodore Moore to Governor Mendez, and called upon him immediately on my landing, in consequence of information received at Sisal and New Orleans.

"It was fully understood, previous to the engagement, that the vessels were not to be taken, but they were to be blown up in case we were overpowered.

"Question—You will please state to the court the reasons of our remaining off the coast of Yucatan so much longer than you anticipated when we left the Balize?

"Answer—We were first detained by Commodore Moore waiting to engage the enemy. The steamers and their war vessels were all in sight while we lay at Campechy, and it was evident, if we left there without an engagement, and attempt to capture them, that they might carry their original plan into execution, about concentrating their troops and making an attack upon Galveston. We were determined to prevent it if we could do it by an engagement with their fleet, which never could be brought about until the 16th of May, which was the last engagement before spoken of."

Extract from the official report of Commissioner Morgan, dated at Campechy, 9th May, 1843.

These, and other reasons, which will be still more satisfactory to the Department when known, enhanced the inducement to consent to touch at Telchac on our way to Texas, and we accordingly proceeded for that port, where, from light and occasional head winds, we did not arrive until the eighth day from the Balize; as we did not find any of the Mexican navy there, we proceeded along the coast to Sisal, where we ascertained that the Montezuma had passed on her way to Lerna and Campechy near twenty-four hours before. We accordingly kept along the coast until within some ten or twelve miles from Lerna, where we anchored on Saturday night, 29th ultimo, and on Sunday morning, the 30th, at 4 o'clock, got under way, when at daylight we discovered two large steamers, two armed brigs, and two armed schooners bearing down evidently to attack us; prepared for action, and headed directly for them, the crews of both vessels giving three hearty cheers; but before we could get within long gun shot range of this formidable fleet, headed by their steamers, armed with their renowned Paixhan guns, they evinced a disposition to be off, by going about under a heavy press of steam, and heading directly from us. Commodore Moore crowded sail in pursuit, when the Mexican fleet concentrated and awaited our approach; and so soon as within long range opened their fire upon us from their steamers, to which the Commodore paid no attention, but kept endeavoring to close with them. This, however, the enemy was determined to avoid, their steam enabling them to select their distance, when the Commodore, finding he could not bring them to close quarters, opened his fire from both vessels, and the action became general, and lasted for something over an hour, the steamers then hauling off to windward, entirely without the reach of our guns, and remained there until it became calm, when they recommenced their attack, which continued for nearly an hour, and they again hauled off, and have kept to windward ever since. As for their brigs and schooners, they approached near enough in the first action to get one broadside from the Austin, and never came near us afterwards, but have kept at a distance of some five or ten miles to windward, outside the steamers, ever since.

The Commodore gave his orders with great coolness, and cautioned the men not to waste their powder, but make every shot tell. * * * Captain Lothrop managed and fought his brig handsomely, and the only source of regret in the whole affair, with the officers and men of both vessels, was, that we could not close with the enemy.

Commodore Moore has never been able to bring them to close action since; they keep to windward out of our reach. We have driven their fleet from Lerna, raised the blockade of Campechy, placed General Ampudia with his besieging army in a very perilous situation, inasmuch as he cannot now communicate with his fleet. His soldiers are deserting and coming into Campechy daily.

Thus by the visit of our two vessels to this coast we have prevented the Mexican Government from subjugating Yucatan and invading Texas with the same forces, to have been transported thither by her steamers and transports, and have upset the arrangement of the Mexican Government in regard to Texas and Yucatan altogether; as I have said before, we are on our way to Galveston, via the Mexican coast, with the ship and brig, and I hope to be there in a few days. In the mean time, I send this by a fast sailing pilot boat furnished by the Yucatan Government, to let the Department see that all is straight so far as regards our movements, and will, I hope, meet the approbation of the Government.

I have the honor to remain, with every consideration of respect, your most obedient servant.

J. MORGAN, Commissioner.

Hon. G. W. HILL, Secretary of War and Marine.

They started for the port of Galveston. Morgan says that they got as far as the mouth of the Mississippi when they received such intelligence as satisfied him that it was the duty of the Commodore, and for the interest of the Republic of Texas, to go to Yucatan. Here we have the testimony of the very man sent by the authority of Texas, that he approved and directed this very expedition of which the honorable Senator complains. He says that he approved it. I submit to every Senator if there is anything wrong in that? Was Moore to blame for it, when Morgan was sent there as commissioner, with full power and authority to take charge of the vessels, and he consented to go on the expedition? The expedition was made, with what results I leave posterity to judge.

Mr. HOUSTON. I admire the zeal of the Senator from Tennessee. He thinks he is doing very well. Much reliance has been placed upon a remark that I made, that there were various meetings demonstrative of the strong feeling of Texas in favor of this individual after he returned and surrendered himself to be dealt with. I will explain the reason, for I am fortified on the subject. He surrendered himself, and the demonstrations were of an amusing character, like those which followed the reception of the "dodge" report. When it first came officially, there were torchlight processions in Galveston, on account of the glorious achievements of the navy and of the Commodore. There was one meeting at which there was a gentleman who was a connection of one of the commissioners, another of the name of the President, and another whose name I do not recollect; and they stated that it was a large meeting, and numerous attended. There were just three there. [Laughter.] When two or three persons got together, it would be a numerous and largely attended meeting, and they would pass the most vehement and laudatory resolutions in favor of the Commodore and his glorious achievements; and a reception was prepared for the Texas navy. All these things were done.

But, sir, the course of the Legislature is relied upon. We all know what it is to get resolutions passed by a Legislature, when nobody is gainsaying it, and especially when they want to get rid of an interminable pest, who was at every Legislature until the last, I believe, when Texas was admitted as a State. As for the court-martial and their finding, it was accorded as a matter of favor by the President. He knew it was unavailing. The man had been dishonorably discharged. He knew that if they saw one half the truth, and came to give judgment, they must find him guilty; but they had not cognizance of the charge of murder, or of the charge of treason; and therefore they could not find him guilty of either. That is the reason why he was not found guilty of either. They did find him guilty of flagrant disobedience of orders. Had he power to go to Yucatan? Had he power, when ordered to Galveston, to go to Yucatan, in disobedience of four reiterated orders? Certainly he had not; and all the commissioners in the world could not exonerate him. The "secret act" was passed because he had repeatedly violated orders, and it was believed that it was his intention to run away with the navy and sell it, as was suggested by those who moved the act. That was the reason why it was a secret act; and it was desired that the President might lay hands upon him, through commissioners, before he could have time to perpetrate that atrocious deed. That is the reason why that was done; and that act was made in reference to the security of the Navy, and from the necessity which grew out of his reckless disregard of all orders and of all authority at that time.

These are the facts in relation to it. That he could so contrive it as to get a majority of the Legislature to pass resolutions in his favor, is not surprising; for there was a combination in Galveston who had sworn that they would subvert the Government of Texas, or control the Executive, if it could be done in no other way than by a revolution. The Executive was informed that arms had been secured and distributed through the country, to supersede the Executive authority; but the gentlemen did not go quite far enough. They had organized a most imposing association there—a secret society—of known hostility to the Executive, to Sam Houston personally and politically. It consisted of forty-three members. They had their regular place of meeting, and had a flag staff, and red flag, which was hoisted over them at night. They had their high priest and king; they were regularly organized, and had a constitution of a most stringent character, and most annihilatory to Houston. Well, after all this had been done, after repeated meetings, they sallied out one day into Galveston. A cloud had been threatening; it started up not larger than a man's hand; a flash of lightning came, struck their flag staff, and gave such an electric shock to this secret society that it never met again. [Laughter.]

Mr. WELLER. I have a remark or two to make. It is somewhat strange that at this period of the session, when we have not time to discuss questions which are properly before us, that an hour should be consumed in irrelevant debate. The character of Commodore Moore is not involved in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk.] If what the other Senator from Texas [Mr. Houston] says is true—that Commodore Moore is no longer a part of the Texan navy, the amendment will in no form or shape affect him, because it does not propose to incorporate into the American Navy any one who has been discharged. If Commodore Moore, as the Senator says, was dishonorably discharged previous to the annexation, this amendment in no wise affects him. And again, if the representations of that Senator be true, that Commodore Moore is a pirate and murderer, I apprehend that the Senate of the United States would never confirm him, if the Executive dared to send such a character here for a commission in the Navy. That amendment requires that the persons admitted to our Navy shall be nominated by the President of the United States, and confirmed by the Senate. When the nomination is sent here, then, but not till then, in my judgment, the proper time will have arrived for the Senator from Texas to indulge in his denunciation.

Mr. President, you will allow me to say, whilst I am up, that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] has shown that the Legislature of Texas, on more than one occasion, indorsed the conduct of Commodore Moore, after the transactions to which the Senator [Mr. Houston] alludes, had taken place. Besides, public meetings were held in various parts of Texas in which resolutions were passed applauding his conduct during the revolution in the very highest terms. Nor have I heard anything derogatory to his character from any other quarter than from the Senator from Texas.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will ask the Senator if he heard the documents read?

Mr. WELLER. I did not, because I was not here; but I have read a portion of the speech of the Senator from Texas, which, in my judgment, was entirely out of place. I shall never, at any time, avail myself of my position here in the Senate, to denounce, in the most opprobrious terms, men who have conferred signal advantages upon my State—my personal wrongs must be adjusted elsewhere. It is a matter of taste, however, and the Senator from Texas and myself may differ about it. He sees proper to indulge in it, and he has the right, as a Senator, if he chooses, to bring his personal grievances before the American people, through this body.

But, Mr. President, I say that the Senate has nothing to do, at the present moment, with this question; that if Commodore Moore has been discharged from the Texan navy the amendment does not apply to him; and if he be a murderer and assassin, he is the last man that the American Senate would ever confirm. If he is sent here for confirmation, then, but not till then, will be the time for the Senator from Texas to arraign him before us. But I desire to say, sir, that I was in the other branch of Congress when the resolutions, providing for the annexation of Texas were passed on the 3d of March, 1845; and I undertake here, to-day, to say that in voting for those resolutions I was voting, as I supposed, for the incorporation of the whole of the Texas navy into the American Navy, and that I did not understand by the term "navy," merely the munitions of war, and the few vessels which then constituted the whole of the navy of that Republic, but it included the personnel as well as these. That was my understanding of those resolutions when they were passed; and even if there be doubt now as to the proper construction to be given to it, I ask whether this great and powerful nation is to give such a strict construction as will operate gross injustice upon those gallant men, who aided originally in establishing the independence of Texas, and whose patriotism enabled us to derive the advantages which we have received from the acquisition of that immense territory. Is the grossest injustice to be perpetrated upon them on a mere technical construction? Does it become us as Americans, as magnanimous and generous men to refuse this simple act of justice to those who periled their lives in throwing off the yoke of Mexican bondage and establishing the independence of Texas? Sir, for one I shall be compelled from a sense of duty, no matter what the consequences may be, to vote for the amendment presented by my friend from Texas.

Mr. HOUSTON. I, of course, must tender my thanks to the Senator—

Mr. BAYARD. I regret to do so, but I must call the Senator from Texas to order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have been attacked, sir. I have been attacked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER in the chair.) A point of order is made. The Senator from Delaware will please to state it.

Mr. BAYARD. The point of order is, that according to the rules of the Senate, no member can speak more than twice in the same debate upon the same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand the rule to be so.

Mr. HOUSTON. I cannot but appreciate the position which the Senator from California has seen proper to notice me with, to teach me some of the proprieties of a Senator, and, as I understand it, a gentleman. He is not in the habit of bringing his private quarrels or griefs here, or of availing himself of his senatorial position to assail any one. I commend the propriety of the gentleman. I have not availed myself of my senatorial position to attack any one; but when attacked in my senatorial position, I responded to the attacks made upon me. If the gentleman is acquainted with the facts, he will find that at the last session of Congress, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] asked me a question, to which I responded, but merely in a short sentence, injurious to no one, and attacking no one; and that response of mine, in connection with an attack made upon that Senator by the individual Moore, became a subject of correspondence and of abuse of myself, which was indorsed by an official editor. In response to that, I availed myself of my position to vindicate myself against the charges. I did not assail any individual unprovokedly; but I did repel assaults that were made upon me directly. I had been apprised of their continuance for eight or ten years, but until presented in a tangible shape, I had passed them by. That is the position in which I am placed; and if the gentleman has a new system of courtesy, of chivalry, or gallantry, with which I have not been acquainted, or if he chooses to read me a lecture when it suits him to do so, I certainly ought to feel humbly indebted to him for it. I have lived up to this date in the exchange of courtesies, and an observer of the proprieties of life; but if I have to look to a younger gentleman than myself, I certainly have lived to but little purpose. I should be much obliged to him, whenever he sees a departure from the proper courtesy and respectful senatorial demeanor if he would suggest to me, in a more private manner, what the propriety will be, and I shall be most happy to adopt his suggestions.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the vote will be taken on the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I called the honorable Senator from Texas to order, because I considered the whole of this discussion to be irrelevant to the question before the Senate. The rule of the Senate, under which I raised the point, is imperative, and it was solely on that ground, and no other, that I raised it. I take no part in this dispute. I have nothing to do with it. I do not consider that it has anything to do with the merits of the public business. We have but a few hours left in which we are to close up the business of the session, and pass the appropriation bills which are before us; and it was for that reason, and because I thought that an irrelevant discussion should not go on, contrary to the rules of the Senate, that I called the honorable Senator to order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, [Mr. WALKER.] The Chair owes the Senator from Delaware an apology. He did not, at the time the point was made, remember the precise terms of the rule; but it seems that the Senator was right, and the present incumbent of the Chair was wrong; and that the Senator made the question of order with propriety.

Mr. RUSK. I shall not indulge in any debate All this discussion, and these questions, are totally irrelevant to the amendment which I have offered. It does not present a question as to any individual, but it proposes to authorize the President of the United States to incorporate into the Navy of the United States the officers belonging to the Texas navy at the time of annexation. If it should be adopted, and become a law, (as I trust it will, for I believe it to be nothing but an act of justice,) it remains with the President to inquire who belonged to the Texas navy. That question does not come up here now. It will come before the President, and it must be determined by the laws of Texas.

Mr. DAWSON. Is there no compulsion on the President?

Mr. RUSK. No, sir; none whatever. The amendment "authorizes" him to do it. Then the question will present itself, who belonged to the Texas navy? That will be a question for the President to determine, under the Texas laws. As soon as he determines that, the qualifications of whatever officer he nominates will necessarily become a question before the Senate on his confirmation.

The question was taken by yeas and nays; and resulted—yeas 14, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Pettit, Rusk, Seward, Thompson of Kentucky, and Weller—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Chase, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Gwin, Hunter, Mallory, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—22.

So the amendment was rejected.

DANIEL STEENROD.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill for the relief of Daniel Steenrod.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to amend the bill by adding after the clause "for preparing for publication of the American Nautical Almanac, $28,880," the words:

Provided, That any naval officer who may be charged with the preparation, superintendence, or publication of the Nautical Almanac, shall receive no compensation for such duties beyond his shore duties pay proper.

Mr. PEARCE. I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment. The object of it is to reduce the compensation which is paid to the very distinguished and intelligent officer who presides over this work. He receives now $3,000 a year. That is the sum which you allow to the officer in charge of the ordnance; it is the same salary which is allowed to the officer in charge of the Observatory; and they are his juniors in rank. The superintendence of the nautical almanac requires the very highest degree of astronomical science. I do not believe there was another officer in the Navy competent to begin the work, which Lieutenant Davis has carried through with remarkable success. I believe the American nautical almanac is now universally admitted to be superior to the British. Its tables are fuller. They are more accurate. The work is one of prime necessity. No ship can go to sea without it. It is indispensable to navigation; and it is a great discredit to the country that its publication was not commenced before. Well, sir, the work requiring the very highest degree of science, and arduous and continual labor, it does seem to me the officer in charge of it, ought to receive the salary now allowed to him, which is no more than is allowed to officers on scientific duty in other branches of the service who are his juniors. I know there has never been any act expressly authorizing the allowance of that salary to him; but it has been paid for a number of years, and the appropriations have been made accordingly. That was a recognition at all events of the propriety of it, and I see no propriety in departing from it.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the attention of the Senate for a few minutes while I explain this matter. The honorable Senator concludes that there is no authority of law to pay this salary. That ought to be sufficient. If an officer is getting a salary without authority of law, it should conclude the whole matter; but, sir, in 1849, we appropriated $58,000 for charts and nautical instruments for the Observatory, and put in a proviso that the superintendence of the Nautical Almanac should be given to an officer of the Navy who was not below the grade of lieutenant. That was in 1849. After the officer selected had performed his duty a year, he called upon the Comptroller for $1,500 extra salary. His salary as lieutenant was $1,500. The Comptroller replied to him that he could not comply with his request without authority of law, just as the Senator says. He came to Congress for the $1,500. Congress struck it out. That was in 1850. He came to the next Congress. Congress again struck it out; but in 1852 he went to the new Comptroller, Mr. Phelps, who had just come into office, and made application to him; and in face of the finding of the first Comptroller, in the face of Congress striking out the appropriation twice in succession, he induced that Comptroller to go back as far as 1849, and give $1,500 extra per annum, and I suppose he is getting it now.

I believe the officer is very well qualified for the duties of his office; but that is not the question now. The appropriation for the Nautical Almanac commenced with $6,000. We are now called on to pay $28,880. So it has increased, since 1849, from $6,000 to $28,880; and still the salary of the officer is not in that sum. The appropriation for his salary is in the first clause of the bill for the payment of officers.

The honorable Senator from Maryland says we should pay this officer $3,000, because we are paying other officers double salaries. Why, sir, if the argument is worth anything, it has directly the reverse tendency. We are paying the superintendent of the Observatory, expressly by law, $3,000 a year. We are paying the ordnance officer, expressly by law, $3,000; but this case stands by itself, where an officer is getting $3,000 without any law; and we are called upon now to sanction an abuse which has crept in upon us, because the Comptroller of the Treasury reversed the finding of his predecessor, and the action of Congress, which was had on two different occasions, and has allowed him the $1,500 extra without authority of law.

If I ever expect to have the Senate listen to any suggestion as to naval improvements at all, I can only do so, when abuses like this come in our face, by exposing them. I move in this matter with infinite regret. To cut down the officer's salary is by no means a grateful task; but I see officers leaving their families and going to the pestilential coasts of Africa to do duty at $1,500 a year; while these reserved posts are given to officers who thus remain at home with their families, and come here and ask to have their salaries raised. There is no justice in it. If the action of the Comptroller is to override congressional finding, there is no telling where it is to end. No gentleman can say anything in this officer's favor with which I will not agree; but when it comes to saying that there is no other officer in the Navy competent to perform the task, I take issue on it. When the work was ordered, an officer must be found; and it would be a very adventurous task indeed to say that another could not be found for the service. Look at the examinations through which they pass, fitting them expressly for this very duty. There is nothing in that assertion. The question has never been tried. All I ask now is, if it is designed to give him the $1,500 additional, let us say so. At present he is getting it without authority.

Mr. PEARCE. I propose to obviate the Senator's objection by submitting, as a substitute for his amendment, the following:

Provided, That the pay of the officer in charge of the superintendence of the Nautical Almanac shall be hereafter $3,000 per annum.

Mr. BENJAMIN privately made a suggestion to Mr. PEARCE.

Mr. PEARCE. I will modify it so as to read:

Provided, That the pay of the officer in charge of the superintendence of the Nautical Almanac shall hereafter be the same as he has heretofore received.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope the Senate will not agree to that. We have struck it out twice heretofore.

Mr. BELL. I know the purity of the motives of my friend from Florida, and the principle upon which he proceeds. It is all very well. Nothing can be said against that principle. It is to reform what he considers an improper patronage, which is extended by the Government to this naval officer. But I think I can recall to his mind one fact which will show that his proviso is not strictly just and proper. I shall not take up the time of the Senate by showing that he proposes that this service shall be performed at a rate which is below the second grade of clerks in the Departments. The first grade gets $2,000 salary; the second, I believe, $1,700. He proposes to reduce this officer to $1,500, and says that is strictly right and regular, and that it is wrong to extend the extra allowance to an officer of the Navy. He says there are numerous officers competent to the service. Doubtless there are. Not only is the acquisition of science necessary to a person in his position, but there are other qualities essential—strict, vigilant attention to accuracy of detail, the power of concentration on the minutiae of such a work as the Nautical Almanac. Now, the proposition of the Senator would reduce the salary of that officer, as a lieutenant in the Navy, to $1,500.

Mr. MALLORY. No, sir; he would get $2,100.

Mr. BELL. The honorable Senator proceeds upon the idea that he should have received only $1,500 heretofore.

Mr. STUART. He has got that.

Mr. BELL. I know he has; but the Senator proceeds on the principle that his salary ought never to have been more than $1,500. The ordinary clerks in the Departments get more than that. Now, I will say to my honorable friend from Florida—he will allow me to call him so—I do not question the propriety or correctness of the idea we had in bringing about reform; but how has he succeeded in that reform? How have the Naval Committee succeeded? They can get nothing done in conformity to the general views he entertains; but this is falling from a general reform upon an individual case. I know the Senator's general views on the subject. He does not propose to give this officer the compensation that would be due to him on sea service. He admits that he does not; and yet the law provides that the officers at the naval academy at Annapolis shall be compensated according to the rate of pay to which they would be entitled on sea service. That would raise the compensation of this officer to $2,500. The Senator proposes by the proviso to limit it to about $2,100. I think this service requires higher consideration on the part of Congress. This I say with great deference to the honorable Senator from Florida; for I have witnessed his industry, his vigilance, his labor, and the determined spirit which he manifests to reform all that he considers abuses in the Navy; and, sir, in general, almost in every particular—I would except this case—he has my support. I am sorry to see that he has not been more successful in introducing those reforms which his familiar acquaintance with the subject suggests. I believe there is no man in the country more familiarly acquainted with the Navy than he; and I now invoke on the part of the Senate that deference and attention which I believe is due to him. I have served with him on the committee during the whole of this session, and a more industrious, laborious, vigilant, investigating gentleman, I have not known in the course of my service in either House of Congress. Still, he is falling upon particulars here, having failed in his main object and design in the general connection of what he considers reckless and nameless abuses in the Navy; but, in this case, allow me to repeat, I think there is a higher consideration due to the man who has been charged with the responsibilities attaching to the superintendence of that Nautical Almanac, a work which is not only found to be of the highest utility in the mercantile, as well as in the naval service of the United States, but in other countries. Some consideration is due to the vigilance, and accuracy of detail which must be exercised, and to the eminent success which has attended the supervision of that work on the part of Lieutenant Davis. It may be conceded that there are other officers of equal science; but they have not been tested on such a work. I presume Lieutenant Davis was selected for those qualities which those best acquainted with him knew him to possess. Such a work as that would have been of no manner of use, if it had not been for the confidence felt in its minutiae and details, all of which he supervises. He does not make all the calculations; it would be impossible for him to do so; but he supervises them in the general. He is the man that is entitled to the credit for them; and yet my honorable friend from Florida would not allow him the sea service pay of the rank which he possesses. I hope, under these considerations, that he will concede to this eminent officer what is due to him for the utility of a work which is not only a benefit to the country and the world, but which redounds to the honor and even to the glory of the country.

Mr. MALLORY. The honorable Senator from Tennessee has been kind enough to say very many pleasant things to me. They furnish the best evidence in themselves of the unwillingness with which I move any amendment of this character.

Mr. BELL. I know it.

Mr. MALLORY. But, sir, the Senate does not forget the fact, that the appropriation for this work began at $6,000, and that it has gone on from $6,000 to $19,000, and now to $28,000; and that does not include this officer's salary. We have, on two occasions, refused the increase of salary proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, notwithstanding the last Comptroller's finding. It is not right to allow it. In allusion to the honorable Senator's parallel between the clerks of a Department, who get $1,800 a year, and this gentleman, the parallel is not correct. He should draw the parallel between the officers of the Navy and this officer. That is the parallel to be drawn. What does an officer of the Navy, of the grade of lieutenant, get for active service on the coast of Africa, or in the Pacific, or on the coast of California? He gets $1,500; and it stands to reason that this officer should not get double pay while he is living with his family at home. I have no interest in this; but I trust the Senate will refuse their consent to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The question was taken on Mr. PEARCE's amendment to the amendment; and, on a division, there were—yeas 7, noes 12; not a quorum voting.

Mr. GWIN. I call for the yeas and nays; that will bring in a quorum.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will suggest a compromise in this matter to the honorable Senator from Maryland. I should be unwilling to vote for the salary of $3,000; but if he will substitute sea-service pay, I think it will meet the approbation of every one.

Mr. MALLORY. That would be $2,500.

Mr. PEARCE. I have no desire to raise salaries; but I am entirely unwilling to make fish of one and flesh of another. You give $3,000 to the two others. Here is a man, no way inferior to them in talent, performing higher duties than either of them, and of the profoundest and most intricate science—I am not willing to give him less than the others. If my amendment fails, I shall ask leave to introduce another, by which the salaries of the others shall be brought down.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will go with you in that.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the amendment to the amendment, and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Cooper, Dawson, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Houston, Morton, Pearce, Pettit, Seward, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, and Wade—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—19.

So it was rejected.

Mr. PEARCE. I will now ask the Senator from Florida to modify his amendment so as to allow the pay of the officer while on duty at sea.

Mr. MALLORY. I agree to that. That will give him $2,500. The amendment will then read:

Provided, That any naval officer who may be charged with the preparation, superintendence, or publication of the Nautical Almanac, shall receive no compensation for such duty beyond what he would receive while on duty at sea.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It ought to read, that he shall receive the same compensation for said service that he would receive while on duty at sea. I suggest that modification.

Mr. MALLORY. If I understand the language, that is the meaning of it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The language does not provide that he shall receive as much.

Mr. MALLORY. That is the intention; but he is not to receive beyond that.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It had better be made certain.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. At the instance of several Senators who voted against the amendment which I offered some time ago, I am induced to offer another:

And be it further enacted, That the existing law limiting the number of officers of the Navy of the United States be so far modified as to entitle the officers belonging to the navy of Texas, at the time of annexation, to the pay of the officers of the Navy of the United States, on leave of absence up to the present time.

When the PRESIDING OFFICER put the question, on a division, twelve Senators rose in the affirmative; and he declared that it appeared to be rejected.

Mr. RUSK. Count the other side.

Mr. BROWN. Call for it in the Senate. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. STUART. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from Texas will let the bill be reported to the Senate.

Mr. RUSK. A majority of the members present are in favor of the amendment.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator will have an opportunity of offering it in the Senate.

Mr. RUSK. It can be acted on as well here as there.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAWSON. I hope it will not be inserted in that form. By the amendment, it is proposed not to incorporate the officers into the Navy, but to allow them the same pay as officers of the United States Navy on leave of absence. It does not decide whether they belong to the Navy or not. I should like that question decided at once. It does not put them into the Navy of the United States.

Mr. RUSK. Not at all; it only allows them pay.

Mr. DAWSON. Then I shall vote against it.

The yeas and nays were taken; but previous to the announcement of the result,

Mr. MALLORY said: Before the vote is announced, I suggest to the Senator from Texas, and I think he will concur with me, that we should amend his proposition by adding the proviso that the number of the Texan officers shall not exceed eight, because that was their whole number.

Mr. RUSK. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER.) That is a matter for the subsequent consideration of the Senate.

The result of the vote was then announced—yeas 18, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Brodhead, Cass, Dodge of Iowa, Houston, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Brown, Chase, Cooper, Dawson, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hunter, Pearce, Shadell, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, and Walker—17.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the proviso will now be added by common consent.

Mr. MALLORY. There will be great abuses unless it is agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I hope, by unanimous consent, it will be put on. That is the number that constituted the Navy.

The modification was made by unanimous consent.

Mr. WELLER. I move to amend the bill by adding the following:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the sum of $12,250 be, and is hereby, appropriated to pay James Adams, assignee of William G. Hestep and Treat F. Peck, $10,630, and interest thereon from the 1st day of May, 1851, until the day of payment, at the rate of six per centum per annum, being the balance due on a contract for storage of United States property as certified and payment decreed by the district court of the United States for the northern district of California, on the 12th day of March, 1853, in a cause wherein the United States were complainants, and the above parties, with others, were defendants.

Mr. PEARCE. I raise a point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER.) The Chair is of the opinion that it is excluded by the rule.

Mr. WELLER. It will be seen by the reading of the amendment, that it is to carry out a decree of the district court of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not provided for in the rule.

Mr. WELLER. The rule provides, of course, to carry out an existing law. I suppose there is an obligation resting on every Government to pay its debts. Here is, in fact, a judgment against the United States for that amount of money. A suit has been instituted, under the order of this Government, against certain parties. It turns out on the trial of the cause that the defendants were entitled to a judgment against the Government. The decree is regularly certified by the district court of the United States; and yet, it is ruled out of order to move, by way of amendment, an appropriation to carry out this decree of the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will observe that they appear before Congress as private claimants.

Mr. WELLER. See the situation in which that amendment is placed. If I could get an estimate—

Mr. PEARCE. I must raise a point of order. Is this debate in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. WELLER. I will get through as soon as the Senator from Maryland, if he will allow me. What I was about to say was, simply, that the estimate of an officer in one of the Departments, is, under our rules, infinitely more valuable than the decree of a district court of the United States. That is all I wish to say.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made, as in Committee of the Whole, were concurred in.

Mr. MALLORY. It has been suggested to me by some friends of the Navy who had not read the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole, that they were mistaken in regard to what would be its operation. I now move it again. Its principle is the foundation of all naval reform. I feel anxious, and the Committee on Naval Affairs feel anxious, to have it effected. I offer it from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, within thirty days from the passage hereof, shall assemble a naval board, to consist of three captains, two commanders, and two lieutenants, which board shall investigate the conduct, character, and standing of all the officers of the grades of captains, commanders, lieutenants, passed midshipmen, and masters in the line of promotion, and shall ascertain and report to the Secretary of the Navy, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, every officer of said grades that said board shall deem incompetent or disqualified to discharge promptly his whole duty, ashore and afloat; and in every case the said board shall report, in two separate classes, such officers as the interests of the service require should be dismissed and such as should be placed out of the line of promotion, with its reasons for the same: Provided, That upon said board officers shall not investigate, vote, or report upon officers of a senior grade. Immediately upon the return of the reports of the board to the Secretary of the Navy, he shall, so far as the President shall approve the same, cause those officers who may be reported for dismissal to be dismissed the service with six months' sea-service pay; and those who may be reported for withdrawal from the line of promotion to be so withdrawn upon pay which shall not be more than three fifths, nor less than one fifth, their sea-service pay respectively, to be determined and approved by the President: Provided, That passed midshipmen and masters in the line of promotion, so reported in the second class, shall be dropped from the service, and shall thereupon receive one year's sea-service pay. The said board shall be convened and regulated as the Secretary may direct; and he shall ascertain, in such manner as he may deem just and expedient, the service, standing, and character of the officers of the grades aforesaid, and submit the same to the board for its better information: Provided, That the promotions which may be made in consequence of such dismissals and withdrawals, shall reduce the grade of commanders to seventy, which shall hereafter be the number of said grade.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not think we can get a quorum at this moment to vote on that proposition. I think we ought to take a recess of about two hours, and by that time we shall be able to get a quorum. I move to take a recess until six o'clock. That will be an hour and a half.

Mr. GWIN. I hope that will not be done. I hope we shall go on with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER.) The Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. GWIN. Will not the bill have to be laid aside first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not of the opinion that the motion is in order while another question is pending, unless it is received by unanimous consent.

Mr. COOPER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. STUART. If it is not in order to submit the motion for a recess while the bill is under consideration, I move that the bill be laid aside until six o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I now move that the Senate take a recess until six o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate accordingly took a recess for an hour and a half.

The Senate reassembled at six o'clock, p. m.

LIGHT-HOUSE BILL.

Mr. STUART. The Senate is somewhat thin, and I presume we shall not wish to vote on the Navy appropriation bill for a few minutes. I ask the Senate, therefore, to take up and pass the light-house bill. There are no amendments to it, and there will be no debate in regard to it. There will be nothing but the mere formality of passing it.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that. I do not wish to have any light-house bill passed. At any rate, let us take it in its order.

Mr. STUART. It certainly is in its order now.

Mr. TOOMBS. No, sir; we have the Navy bill under consideration, and unless it be postponed by a vote of the Senate, this is not in order. I am tired of doing things by courtesy, the effect of which is to get measures passed which I think are bad measures.

Mr. STUART. I do not put it on the ground of courtesy. The Navy appropriation bill was laid aside by the Senate until six o'clock. Now, it will require a motion to take it up again; and before that motion is submitted, I move to take up the light-house bill. We can very soon pass it. There are no amendments to it, and there can certainly be no discussion in regard to it. The Senator, of course, being opposed to it, may vote against it.

Mr. TOOMBS. Is not the Navy bill, the unfinished business, first in order?

Mr. ATCHISON. The question has been decided that when the Senate take a recess, they resume business precisely where they left off, as though no recess had been taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER.) That is undoubtedly the case; but in this instance a motion to postpone was made, and agreed to.

Mr. STUART. The suggestion of the Senator from Missouri would be perfectly right if no motion had been made to lay the Navy bill aside.

Mr. ATCHISON. That makes a difference.

Mr. STUART. Certainly it does; and now I submit that it requires a motion in order to take that bill up again.

Mr. ATCHISON. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the question is now on taking up the light-house bill. The naval appropriation bill was postponed until six o'clock, by the vote of the Senate; so that it will require a motion to take it up again.

Mr. TOOMBS. I call for a division on that question. That bill cannot be taken up until there is a quorum in the Senate.

Mr. STUART. Nor can anything else.

Mr. ATCHISON. The Journal will settle the question.

Mr. WELLER. I think the Navy bill was postponed until six o'clock, and when six o'clock arrives that bill comes up without a motion, of course.

Mr. STUART. No, sir, it requires a motion.

Mr. WELLER. I regard it as in the nature of a special order, and when the hour arrives it should be taken up.

Mr. STUART. The condition of things is precisely the same as if the Senate had not taken any recess, but had laid aside the Navy bill until six o'clock and gone on with other business, so that it requires a motion to take it up.

Mr. WELLER. Suppose gentlemen allow us a short time to pass a number of House private bills?

Mr. SLIDELL. I think there can be no objection to the light-house bill. There is no amendment to be offered to it. The bill was adopted after consultation between the committees of the two Houses, and certainly it is desirable to pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question on the motion to take up the light-house bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives "making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes," which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce without amendment.

Mr. STUART. Now, I hope the Senate will consent to take the question on the passage of the bill without reading it at length.

Mr. WELLER. I wish to know what is in it. The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, but before he concluded

Mr. WELLER said: I have heard enough of that bill to satisfy me that it is all right, and unless somebody else calls for its reading, I withdraw my call.

There being no objection, the further reading of the bill was dispensed with. It was then reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MINNESOTA LAND BILL.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask the Senate now to take up the bill from the House of Representatives repealing the act making a land grant to the Territory of Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER.) If there be no objection, the bill will now have its first reading.

Mr. STUART. I prefer not to take up that question now. I have no objection, however, to the bill being read a first time.

The bill from the House "to repeal an act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein" was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will now have its second reading.

Mr. STUART. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed the following bills of the Senate without amendment:

An act to authorize the State of Illinois to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled under the act of 2d of March 1827, granting land to aid that State in opening a canal to connect the waters of the Illinois with those of Lake Michigan;

An act to constitute Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery;

An act to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled under the act of 8th August 1846, for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers;

An act constituting San Pedro, in the State of California, a port of entry and delivery; and

An act to vest in the several States and Territories, the title in fee of the lands which have been or may be certified to them.

Also, that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate with amendments, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate:

An act to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington City; and

An act to constitute Pilatka and Bayport, in the State of Florida, ports of delivery respectively.

MRS. HELEN MACKAY.

Mr. ATCHISON. There are a few private bills, in which my constituents are interested, which I ask the Senate, as a favor now to take up. The first is House bill "for the relief of Mrs. Helen Mackay, widow of the late Colonel Æneas Mackay deputy quartermaster-general, United States Army."

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Its object is to direct the payment of $6,537 09 to Mrs. Mackay, as allowance of commissions for disbursements of special appropriations by her late husband, Colonel Æneas Mackay, prior to September 30, 1838.

General Jesup and Major General Scott bear testimony to the long and faithful service of Colonel Mackay, who disbursed millions of dollars of the public money, without the loss of a dollar to the Government; but the committee do not place the claim to relief on the ground of a faithful discharge of official duty, but on the ground that he performed a service that was extra official, and for which his representatives are entitled to a reasonable compensation at the hands of the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CAPTAIN LENDRUM.

Mr. WELLER. I ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution from the House of Representatives, for the relief of brevet Captain J. H. Lendrum, of the United States Army. The bill is to enable him to settle his accounts by giving parol testimony to supply the loss of vouchers destroyed by the fire in San Francisco.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

It proposes to authorize the accounting officers to credit Captain Lendrum with $2,970 14, being moneys disbursed by him out of the quartermaster's funds, and the sum of $3,725 25 disbursed out of the moneys belonging to the civil fund, the vouchers for which were destroyed or lost by the fire in the city of San Francisco, May 4, 1850.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

M'ELHINEY, MATTHEWS, AND CRIBBEN.

Mr. ATCHISON. There is another bill which I ask the Senate to take up, the bill from the House of Representatives, "for the relief of William J. McElhiney, E. P. Matthews, and Lawrence Cribben." It is only to quiet a title to some lots in the town of St. Charles.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It is designed to authorize McElhiney, Matthews, and Cribben, each, to enter the portions of the southeast fractional quarter of fractional section ten, and the southwest fractional quarter of fractional section eleven, west of the St. Charles Commons, in township forty-six north, of range four east, in the district of lands subject to sale at St. Louis, in Missouri, now in possession of each of them, upon producing proof, to the satisfaction of the proper land officers, of the extent of their possessions, respectively, and paying therefor the minimum price of the public lands, and upon proof and payment being made, certificates and patents shall be issued therefor, as in other cases of the sale of public lands.

It appears that each of the petitioners has possessed and cultivated, for several years, a small fraction of land, part of the southeast fractional quarter of section ten, township forty-six, range four east, lying in the county of St. Charles, Missouri. They derived their possession from one Joseph Aubrey, who entered upon, cultivated, and improved a part of the land, more than twenty years ago, for the purpose of securing a preemption right thereon; and that Aubrey, and those claiming under him, have had continued and uninterrupted possession of the same until the present time. There is no one asserting an adverse claim to the land possessed by the petitioners, and it could not be entered heretofore, as is represented, because the boundary line of the St. Charles commons had not until recently been settled.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

WARREN COUNTY, MISSOURI.

Mr. ATCHISON. There is but one other case in which the State of Missouri is interested, and that is a small matter. It is House bill "for the relief of the inhabitants of school township forty-five, range one, in Warren county, Missouri."

A motion to take up the bill was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Its object is to authorize the board of directors of common schools for the township named, to select and set apart for the use of schools, one half of a section of any of the public lands in the land district within which the county is situated, in lieu of the half of said section sixteen, which is covered by the concession to one Kinaird.

In the year 1800 a concession of six hundred arpents of land, situated in the St. Charles division on the river Tuque, was made by C. D. Delassus, the Lieutenant Governor of Upper Louisiana, to Andrew Kinaird, and was transferred by Kinaird to one John Long, and subsequently by Long to James Macky. In 1810 those claiming under Kinaird are represented to have taken possession of the land embraced in the concession by Delassus, and have made valuable and lasting improvements upon the same. The title to these six hundred arpents was confirmed by the act of Congress of 4th July, 1836, "confirming certain land titles in the State of Missouri." It also appears that, upon the surveys of the land within the State of Missouri by the United States officers, one half of the sixteenth section, which was granted by act of Congress for the use of schools, was located by the survey upon or covered a part of that cession. Of the other half of the section, only one hundred and twenty acres have been sold at one dollar and a quarter per acre; and the only valuable part is embraced within the confirmation mentioned.

The petition is signed by forty-eight inhabitants of the township, and the commissioner, directors, and clerk of school township forty-five, of range one, west, certify that the signers constitute a majority of that township. The committee do not deem it material to inquire as to the title under the act of Congress granting the sixteenth section for school purposes, or that under the act of July, 1836, confirming the title under the concession by Delassus; and as they believe the Government will not be prejudiced by granting the prayer of the petitioners, that the title under its act of confirmation will be quieted, and the school fund probably increased, they think the prayer of the petitioners for the location of a half section, in lieu of that embraced in the confirmation, upon any of the public lands within that land district, ought to be granted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

NATIONAL HOTEL COMPANY.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. There are some Senate bills on the President's table which have been returned from the House of Representatives with amendments. I ask that they be taken up, so that the amendments may be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay these bills before the Senate. Senate bill entitled "An act to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington city," has been returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, to add the following additional sections:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That each of the stockholders in the said National Hotel Company of Washington city, shall be held liable, in his or her individual capacity, for all the debts and liabilities of the said company, however contracted or incurred, to be recovered by suit as other debts and liabilities before the court or tribunal having jurisdiction of the cause.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That it may be lawful for Congress hereafter to alter, amend, change, or repeal the foregoing act.

The amendment was agreed to.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

Senate bill "to constitute Pilatka and Bayport, in the State of Florida, ports of delivery respectively," was returned from the House with two amendments, the first of which was to add the following additional section:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That Keokuk and Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, be, and hereby are, constituted ports of delivery, within the collection district of New Orleans; and there shall be appointed a surveyor of the customs for each of said ports, who shall reside thereat. Said surveyor shall perform the duties, and receive the salary and emoluments prescribed by the act of Congress, approved the second day of March, 1831, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pitsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places."

The second amendment of the House was to amend the title by inserting after the word "Florida" the words "and Keokuk and Dubuque, in the State of Iowa;" so that it should read: "An act to constitute Pilatka and Bayport, in the State of Florida, and Keokuk and Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, ports of delivery, respectively."

The amendments were concurred in.

T. BRONAUGH—MINNESOTA LAND BILL.

Mr. GEYER. I move to take up a small pension bill from the House of Representatives—"A bill for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh."

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to increase the pension of Thomas Bronaugh, who is now on the rolls at four dollars, to the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence January 1, 1854.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no amendment be offered, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. PEARCE. I have an amendment to offer as an additional section:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the bill entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," which passed the House of Representatives on the 20th day of June, 1854, and which was approved by the President on the 29th day of June, 1854, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. STUART. To what bill is that offered as an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A private bill.

Mr. STUART. I raise the question that it is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it is in order. It certainly is not germane to the original bill, but that is a question for the consideration of the Senate as to whether they will adopt it, and not for the decision of the Chair. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. STUART. This thing cannot be done in this way—

Mr. PEARCE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. STUART. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I will state very briefly the reasons which have influenced me to offer this amendment. I am induced to offer it because it is known to this House, as it was to the other, that a bill which passed that House and came to this, was altered before it arrived here, and the change of language was such as materially to affect the import and operation of that bill. The bill became a law in a different form and sense from that intended to be given to it by those who passed it. The House of Representatives, satisfied, from whatever cause it is unnecessary for me to say, that their will was violated by the change of language in the bill which had passed, determined to repeal it. They have repealed it to-day, so far as their vote can do so. They have sent us a bill to repeal it. We have taken it up, but its passage has been objected to, and under the rules, it cannot be passed in the form in which it has come from the House of Representatives.

Now, sir, I desire to enforce the faithful observance of the language of a bill as it has passed either House of Congress. I desire to prevent that going into law which it never was the legislative will should become a law; and I know no way in which we can accomplish the object except by putting it as an amendment to this bill. It has often been done. Some of the most important general provisions known to your laws have been put upon private bills. You will find many such. I will instance but one, the bill for the relief of Chastelin, Ponvert & Co., which contains a provision regulating custom-house fees, and other provisions of general importance. I hope the Senate, in order to vindicate the purity of legislation, will adopt this amendment.

Mr. STUART. Mr. President, it is not, perhaps, the least important thing to proceed, in respect to all business, with proper deliberation. The House to-day have done what the Senator from Maryland says they have done, and I shall not travel out of the rules of senatorial order to say anything about why they did it; but the Senator is considerably mistaken as to his facts, as I shall show. For myself, believing that for the Senate of the United States, at least, whatever it may be proper for the House to do, it is fitting to refer a subject of this sort to a standing committee of the body, to investigate it, and to see, in the first place, what it is proper to do, and, in the next place, what we can constitutionally do, with equity and justice to others, I objected to the second reading of the House bill.

Now, sir, I desire the matter to be fully investigated by the Senate. Both the majority and the minority of the select committee of the House of Representatives appointed to examine the question have reported that there was no improper conduct on the part of anybody in the alteration of the bill referred to. They did not report in favor of repealing this law, but they reported a bill to the House of Representatives to restore the word "or" instead of the word "and" to the original bill which passed the House. That is what they recommended should be done. The House went on, however, very much as the Senator from Maryland now proposes that we should do here, without reference, without deliberation, without respect to the rights of the grantees under that bill, and without examining the question of whether the title to the land had vested, and what the consequences of the repeal may be, suddenly introduced a substitute to repeal the law, and passed it.

Now, sir, I have made the point of order upon this amendment, and I shall state a few more facts, and ask the Senate of the United States to determine solemnly whether they will, upon a private bill to grant a pension, in five minutes' deliberation, adopt an amendment to repeal a law of the United States making a grant of land to the Territory of Minnesota? There is no parliamentary law which will sanction it, and no gentleman can say that there is. The Senator says it has been done in a given case. That may be; but surely he will not undertake to say that the parliamentary law tolerates any such amendment as this.

Then, sir, why should it be adopted? Is there any pressing necessity? There can be no change of rights under the bill; for if the Territory of Minnesota now possesses the title to the land by the grant, Congress cannot divest it. That is clear. If the bill which the other House has sent to us be considered to-morrow, or if it shall be deemed necessary to consider it at the next session, (I care not which, and I do not wish to delay the Senate in its consideration,) it will make no difference in the existing condition of things. I say if the Territory of Minnesota holds the title to the land to-day, it cannot be divested by any act of Congress without the consent of Minnesota. If the Territory does not hold it to-day, it will not hold it to-morrow. The law has been passed and approved for some time, and whatever legal and constitutional effect that law had, has been carried into complete effect. Now, I say that whether this bill be passed three months hence or to-morrow, that legal effect cannot be changed.

Sir, I merely wish to do away with the impression which may have been made on the mind of the Senate by what was said by the Senator from Maryland, and, undoubtedly, as he thought, with great propriety. I do not question that at all; but I say the House of Representatives, by their committee, have examined the subject, and both branches of the committee have reported that no censure attaches to anybody in connection with the matter. There is another significant fact accompanying the transaction. The change in the bill which passed, was made by the clerks under the direction, as the testimony showed, of the Clerk of the House of Representatives. He said "do it." A resolution was introduced into the House of Representatives to-day to expel that Clerk, and it only got fourteen votes. There is the sense of the House of Representatives upon the question. But, sir, it is very obvious how this matter came up. There is pretty nearly, if not quite, a majority of the House of Representatives opposed to making any land grants at all as a general principle. When a substitute was offered for the bill reported by the select committee to repeal this law, of course those holding that opinion voted to repeal it, and there were votes enough added to them to carry it by a decided majority. But that proves nothing at all, as to the propriety of the case. The facts are as I have stated them; and, as I said before, I do think that for the Senate of the United States to proceed precipitately by an amendment upon a private bill, a pension bill, to repeal a law that has granted a title to lands to the Territory of Minnesota, without reference, and without consideration, would be an act of legislation unparalleled in the history of the United States. The question ought to be considered, and deliberately considered.

Now, my views are simply these: I think it should be ascertained distinctly whether the alteration in the law is material. I have heard the opinion of many men, in whose opinions I have confidence, on that subject, who declare that there is no materiality attached to it; and that if the word "or" were in the bill, instead of "and," the effect of the bill and its legal interpretation would be just the same as at present. Then, sir, would it not become the Senate of the United States to consider, by its proper committee, the question whether there was any materiality in this act of the clerks of the House, or of the Senate. Although, perhaps, it is wrong as a custom, a committee that has been sitting for a week or ten days, has solemnly reported there is no blame attaching to anybody.

I ask if it would not become the Senate to refer this question, and to consider, in the first place, whether the alteration affects the bill? That would be the first question; and if the committee should report that the change of the word did not affect the legal result of the bill, then the Senate, I apprehend, would take no action. If, however, they came to the conclusion that it did change the meaning of the bill, then would they propose to repeal the law? I ask, if, because a single word is substituted in a bill, and taken in the connection in which this is, the Senate should repeal the bill? I will state the connection, as all the Senators may not know it. The effect of it is to provide, according to one construction, that a company which is already constituted by the laws of the Territory of Minnesota, shall not enjoy the benefit of this grant. If one construction obtains, that is the effect, and it leaves the grant to be enjoyed in such manner as the Territory of Minnesota shall hereafter provide. If the other construction prevails, then a law passed last winter, by the Legislature of Minnesota, constituting a company, has its effect, and that company can enjoy the benefits of the grant, subject to the control of the Territory of Minnesota. Now, I ask you, sir, should the Congress of the United States repeal a bill in order to settle that question? Is it a measure that was ever heard of before? Would not Congress discharge its duty by passing a law substituting the word which was altered, if that is a material one, and give the law the effect which it is said the House of Representatives intended it should have?

Sir, I think, and I say it with great respect, that it would much more become the legislative character of the Senate of the United States to proceed with this amount of deliberation. My object in objecting to the bill which was presented here from the House of Representatives, was simply to ask its reference to a standing committee of the Senate, in order that the question might be looked into and examined and determined, and the opinion of the committee reported to the Senate, and then let the Senate say what it would do. Such are my views of the impropriety of a hasty proceeding of this sort, that I have deemed it my duty—a duty which, if I neglected to perform, I could not excuse myself—to object to any action here which should thus precipitately, and in a mere stampede, (such as may have been the case in the House of Representatives, but which I never hope to see here,) repeal a law simply because some one or more of the clerks of one or both Houses have made a change of a word, and the committee of investigation have reported that there was no improper motive in it.

I have given the facts. I do not wish, however, at this time of the session, to detain the Senate in discussing a matter of this sort; but I do wish, most emphatically, that this subject shall be deliberately considered, and so acted upon that we may justify our conduct to the country and to ourselves, whenever the question shall arise hereafter. Such is my belief in respect to the impropriety of the course now proposed, that I have raised this question of order; and I shall raise every question that the rules justify, to prevent this precipitate action.

Sir, I conclude by saying that the most which should be done under any circumstances, would be to restore the bill to the condition in which it was when it passed the House, by substituting the word "or" for "and;" but I do not think that when gentlemen come to consider it, it will be regarded as a question so very clear that we can repeal the law, and divest a Territory or a State by our own act of a grant which has been made and taken effect. I do not think that is competent for us.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I should not now say a word but that it may be supposed from what has been said that something fell from me in relation to the parties concerned in the alteration of this bill. I did not do so. I very scrupulously refrained from making such a charge, for it is a very grave charge, and not to be made except upon the amplest proof. It may have been that this alteration originated in a mere mistake; but however it originated, it is better, I say, that we should adopt precipitate legislation than adopt that which violates the legislative will, that legislation in short, which carries into effect as a law that which the legislative body did not intend should become a law. Now, sir, from whatever cause it may have originated, it is very certain that the bill which it is now proposed to repeal is not the bill which passed the House of Representatives, but one which came to this body in an altered shape. Sir, if the Senator from Michigan had been willing to argue this matter upon the bill as it came from the House of Representatives to repeal the bill which passed the House on the 20th of June, I should have been quite content; but it will be recollected that that Senator objected to its consideration, objected to its second reading this evening. To-morrow will be the last day of the session, and if the bill had its second reading then, he might object to its third reading. The consequence of that would be that the act of the 20th of June would have gone into effect, and would have been irrevocable. He says it is irrevocable now. Well, sir, if it be irrevocable, no damage can be done by the passage of this repealing clause, and no vested rights, if there are any vested rights in the case, can be divested by our action; but we can now, as far as is possible, prevent the operation of that act.

Mr. STUART. I should like to ask the Senator one question. Is not the right of the Territory of Minnesota to these lands vested now as much as it will be ninety days hence?

Mr. PEARCE. I think not.

Mr. STUART. Then will the Senator tell me the reason why?

Mr. PEARCE. I do not know what the language of the bill is; but whatever its language may be, I take it an acceptance of the act of Congress is necessary before the rights vest. They have not had time to accept, and, therefore, I think the matter is now perfectly within our control and power.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, I am in favor of this amendment, and I think we ought to pass it now. The history of the matter is this: The House of Representatives passed a bill making a grant of land to the Territory of Minnesota, and sent it to the Senate. That bill was changed before it reached us, it seems by misapprehension or by mistake. I think it seems that it was not by fraud. I think that is apparent; for the House of Representatives who had the question under their jurisdiction have so decided. But the bill was altered before it came to the Senate. We passed it; I think I voted for it; I know I favored it, and I must have voted for it if I was present. The House of Representatives have passed a bill to repeal that law because, as it was approved by the President, it did not represent their will. That could not have been passed without expressing the deliberate opinion of the House. Whether it was hasty legislation or not, it must have been the deliberate judgment of the House, for it required a two third vote to suspend the rules.

Mr. STUART. The Senator is mistaken. It was done in this way: The committee who had the subject under investigation reported a bill to substitute the word "or" for "and," and that bill was, of course, before the House, as it was reported by a privileged committee, who made a privileged report. When it was before the House, a member moved to substitute a bill repealing the law; so that it did not require two thirds.

Mr. TOOMBS. Well, sir, that committee reported, and the House took action upon their report, and passed a bill to repeal the former act. They sent us a message suspending the rules, in order to allow us to receive the bill. We concurred in that action, and they sent the bill to us. They have declared to us that the bill which they propose to repeal is not their will. They have said they would not punish the actors in the alteration, believing they may have acted ignorantly, unwittingly, or unadvisedly. They acquit the members and officers of the House, but they say it is not their will that the bill should be a law in the manner in which it was signed. They tell us they are satisfied that these men did not act corruptly, and, therefore, they do not punish them; but they altered the will of the House, and hence the House have passed a bill to repeal the act. They have sent that bill to us; but the Senator from Michigan objects to its consideration. Well, sir, we have passed a great many bills by suspensions of the rules and unanimous consent involving very great principles. It is very rarely that an urgent question is objected to here. Indeed, it is rather considered indecorous; and I have been reproached half a dozen times within the last two days as being rather factious, because I chose to desire to understand the business on which I was called upon to vote. But here, when this question is called up, the gentleman from Michigan rises and says, "I object." Why? Because he tells us we are acting precipitately in this business. The House of Representatives have had the subject under consideration, in their committee, for one or two weeks; the committee have examined the testimony, and brought it deliberately before the House; and the House acted on it, excusing the parties but repealing the bill. Now, I am willing to carry out that will of the House if I were to ride over forty rules. The gentleman need not appeal to me about rules. Our rules are intended to do justice, but when they are so often used, as they are in this body, to arrest an act of justice, I will ride over your whole Calendar, from number one down to the last bill upon it, to do this act of justice.

But, sir, the Senator from Michigan says that the grantees have rights under the bill which was passed. If so, let them go to the courts. I believe with the Senator from Maryland that they have no rights until the act of Congress be accepted. I believe I voted for the bill, and I will vote for it again. But, at present, when the House send me word that their will has been defeated ignorantly, or innocently, I will repeal the act, and put it back where it was, and I do not think it would be respectful in us to do anything else. That is my judgment.

Mr. PETTIT. Allow me to ask the Senator one question. I certainly concur with him in his views; but I wish to ask, do not all our laws, like those of the Parliament of Great Britain, take effect from the first day of the session? If so, will not this bill and the repealed law take effect from the same day?

Mr. TOOMBS. I do not think that principle has been extended to the laws of this country, but they are, according to the will of the legislative body, from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. PRATT. If they both took effect at the same time, one would nullify the other.

Mr. TOOMBS. But the Senator from Indiana asked me a question, which I answered as a lawyer. I say it depends entirely on the will of the Legislature. I believe it has not been the habit of any of the legislative bodies in America, and certainly not of Congress, to make their laws take effect except from and after the passage of the act, or at some future time after its passage.

Mr. COOPER. The decision of the courts has been that the laws take effect from their passage.

Mr. TOOMBS. Certainly. I say the principle in American legislation is, that laws take effect from their passage; but a wise principle is, that if they affect crimes, they should take effect in futuro, and the Legislature should set the time at such a period in advance as to do wrong to nobody. The old English idea of going back a year to the beginning of the session of Parliament, was a very unwise, harsh, and cruel rule. American jurisprudence has put it on a wiser and sounder basis, and requires that laws shall take effect from and after their passage, or from and after a certain day subsequently, if they affect the interests of citizens. That ought to be the general rule. The act which we propose to repeal, if it is a contract, certainly will not take effect until it be accepted; and I have no evidence that it has been accepted. I wish now to put things back to the condition in which they were when the bill was passed; and if it is wise legislation, I will pass it over again; but when the coordinate branch of the Legislature sends to us a message first to rescind the rule, and next send a bill repealing the act, after the deliberate investigation of a committee, and they ask us to allow them to do it, I will do it, if I ride over every rule of the Senate.

Mr. GEYER. I rise for the purpose of asking for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. STUART. The question now is on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WALKER in the chair.) The Chair decided that long ago.

Mr. STUART. I appealed from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question to the Senate. The Senator from Maryland offered an amendment to the bill now before the Senate, proposing to repeal a law which has been passed at this session of Congress granting lands to the Territory of Minnesota for purposes of internal improvement. The Senator from Michigan objected to the amendment as being out of order. The Chair decides that the amendment is in order; that while it is not strictly germane to the subject-matter under consideration, it is, nevertheless, in order and that the incongruity of the amendment is purely a question for the consideration of the Senate. From this decision the Senator from Michigan takes an appeal. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. CHASE. To what bill is the amendment offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To a bill for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh. The present occupant of the chair will state that his decision is based upon the practice which has prevailed in the Senate as long as he has been a member of this body. I remember a case which I will bring to the attention of the Senate in justification of the decision. An act was passed to organize the Territory of Minnesota, but in the act no provision was made for an appropriation to defray the expenses of the Territory. A private bill came up for the relief of one Norton, I think, and I myself offered, as an amendment to the bill, a clause making an appropriation for the support of the territorial government of Minnesota, and it was adopted. Upon another occasion, the civil and diplomatic bill was under consideration, and I offered, as an amendment, a proposition to provide for the government of the Territory of California. The Senate has uniformly sustained such amendments as being in order, no matter how incompatible they might be with the original bill. The incompatibility is a question for the consideration of the Senate, and not for the Chair. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. DOUGLAS. On a point of order so important as this, relating to taking a bill from the table and offering it as an amendment to a private bill, I should like to have the yeas and nays. I call for the yeas and nays on the appeal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHASE. A few days ago, a bill for the relief of Betsey Nash was pending in the Senate. It was proposed to amend the bill by taking from the table another private bill upon a totally dissimilar subject, and engrafting that upon the original bill.

Mr. CLAY. Both were pension bills.

Mr. CHASE. Both pension bills, it is true; but they were distinct in their character.

Mr. SEWARD. One was a pension bill, and the other a bounty bill.

Mr. CHASE. I shall not go into any discrimination of that sort. Both were intended for pension bills; though one, it is true, was a pension bill, and the other a bounty bill. The Senate ruled that it was in order to ingraft the one bill upon the other. Afterwards, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] moved a general bill for the repeal of the fugitive slave act, as an amendment to the bill thus amended. The then occupant of the chair [Mr. COOPER] ruled that amendment out of order. An appeal was taken from that decision, and that appeal was laid upon the table; but no action of the Senate was had on the direct question. I concur entirely with the Chair that this amendment is in order; and it is only necessary to look at the statute-book to find repeated instances of such enactments. Private bills were ingrafted upon private bills, and public bills upon private bills, and private bills upon public bills, and have been ruled to be in order by the Senate. Whatever may be the expediency or in expediency of the proceeding, one thing is certain: that it is, in order, according to the practice of the Senate.

Mr. WELLER. I believe the precedent was established the other day of laying appeals on the table. I move, therefore, to lay this appeal on the table.

Mr. BRIGHT. I rise to a question of order. Is that motion in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate decided the other day that it was in order; but for that decision the opinion of the Chair would certainly be that it was out of order.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have looked at the precedents, and I find that that was the first instance of an appeal ever having been laid on the table in the Senate. It may be allowed in the House, but not in the Senate. I am often forced to vote against my better judgment by subjects being confounded. I voted against the claim referred to by the Senator from Ohio, the claim of Mrs. Batchelder, because every rule of the Senate was violated in moving it as an amendment to the bill to which it was moved.

Mr. TOOMBS. I rise to a question of order. I say the Senator from Indiana cannot raise a point of order on a point of order. He is sufficiently acquainted with parliamentary law to know that that cannot be done.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am not raising a point of order on a point of order.

Mr. WELLER. I moved to lay the appeal on the table, and that question is not debatable.

Mr. BRIGHT. I raise a question whether that motion is entertainable under the rules of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules, after the decision which has been referred to, that it is in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I ask whether the Senator from California has any objection to allowing me to state, in reply to the Senator from Ohio, what I understand to be the rule?

Mr. WELLER. Certainly not.

Mr. BRIGHT. I was remarking, sir, that I was forced a few days ago to vote against the claim of Mrs. Batchelder, on the ground that it was attached to a bill to which it was not germane; whereas, if the proposition to give her a pension had been brought forward as an independent proposition, I should willingly have voted for it. I know, sir, that Senators are very much in the habit of voting on questions of order in reference to the effect which they will have on the original proposition, but that is not my mode of legislation. We have rules for our government, and we ought to observe them. A proposition such as is now before us is clearly out of order, in my judgment, because it violates rule. It does not give Senators an opportunity of voting according to their independent judgment, but it forces us often to take one thing in order to get another, when our judgment is against the one and in favor of the other. It is a vicious system of legislation. I think every proposition should come up on its own merits. That is the object of our rules. If we break them down by a contrary course, it is our fault, and not the fault of our rules.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. GWIN. I merely wish to ask whether it is now in order to lay the whole subject on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it is.

Mr. GWIN. Then I make that motion, and I call for the yeas and nays upon it. I do not wish this matter to defeat all legislation.

Mr. WELLER. The question must first be taken on laying the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say that he is justified in this decision, according to his views. If the appeal be laid on the table, it will carry the whole subject there.

Mr. WELLER. It was decided the other way a few days ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not so decided by the Senate.

Mr. WELLER. This is the first time in the history of the legislation of the Senate that such a decision has been made, that to lay an appeal on the table carries the whole subject with it.

Mr. GWIN. If that is the decision of the Chair, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. WELLER. And I withdraw mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the appeal. The Chair will state the point to the Senate again. A private bill is under consideration. The Senator from Maryland offered an amendment to that bill to repeal the Minnesota land act. The question of order was raised. The Chair decides the amendment to be in order, notwithstanding its incongruity with the bill; which is a question for the Senate, and not for the Chair. From that decision of the Chair the Senator from Michigan takes an appeal. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Butler, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Houston, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, and Weller—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Brodhead, Douglas, Jones of Iowa, Morton, and Stuart—6.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, its Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a resolution to suspend the 16th joint rule of the two Houses so far as related to the bill of the House "declaring the southern boundary of New Mexico," so as to allow it to be transmitted to the Senate, and a resolution to suspend the 16th joint rule of the two Houses so as to allow the reception of the bill of the Senate "to change the name of the American-built brig Glamorgan to that of Wizard," in which resolutions they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Also, that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate without amendment:

An act to amend the provisions of the fifty-sixth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," approved 2d March, 1797; and

An act for the relief of Sylvanus Culver.

SUSPENSION OF RULE.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution of the House of Representatives for suspending the 16th joint rule, so far as relates to the bill of the House declaring the southern boundary of New Mexico, and the resolution of the House of Representatives for suspending the 16th joint rule so far as it relates to the bill of the Senate to change the name of the American-built brig Glamorgan to that of Wizard, and concurred therein.

T. BRONAUGH—MINNESOTA LAND BILL.

The Senate continued, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE.]

Mr. GEYER. On that I have asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Let the amendment be read.

It was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. And he further enacted, That the bill entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," which passed the House of Representatives on the 20th day of June, 1854, and which was approved by President of the United States on the 29th day of June, 1854, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I understand that the cause for legislation upon this subject arises out of the fact that in the third section of the bill granting land to the Territory of Minnesota for the construction of a railroad, there occurs this clause in reference to the lands granted by it:

"Nor shall they inure to the benefit of any company heretofore constituted or organized."

The printed bill which I have before me reads "constituted or organized." I understand, also, that the House of Representatives have had a committee of investigation as to how the word "or" was changed to "and," and they have reported in substance to this effect: that the bill, when before the Committee on Public Lands, prior to being reported to the House, read as I have it now before me, "heretofore constituted or organized," and also required that it should be submitted to a "future" Legislature of the Territory. I understand the select committee reported that the Committee on Public Lands had instructed the word "future" to be stricken out, and the word "and" to be substituted for "or," and that the gentleman of the House having charge of the bill did, in obedience to the order of the committee, strike out the word "future," and supposed that he had stricken out the word "or" and inserted "and," but, in fact, omitted to do so. He reported the bill to the House with the word "or" in it instead of "and," and it was passed in that shape. After it had passed he discovered his omission to make that change as directed by the committee, and he took steps then to ascertain whether or not the change could be made.

I understand, also, that the committee, upon a full investigation of the circumstances, after finding these facts, acquitted the member from Michigan, who had charge of the bill, of any improper motive in desiring to have the change made as the Committee on Public Lands had directed, and also acquitted the Clerk of the House; but they thought, under all the circumstances, that it was due to the House of Representatives that the bill should be restored to the precise language in which it passed the House. They reported, not that the bill should be repealed, not that the grant of land should be revoked, not that the people of Minnesota should be deprived of the grant of land for their railroad, but that, in order to vindicate the legislation of the House of Representatives, the act should be restored, so as to read precisely as it would have read if the change had not been made. I am informed that when that bill was reported to the House, a member rose, and offered as a substitute a provision repealing the act. The previous question was called for, and sustained, and the amendment was substituted, and in that shape it was passed.

Now, sir, the question which I wish to submit to the Senate is this: The bill, as it now stands on the statute-book, is precisely the bill which the Senate passed; but if the word "or" be restored, instead of the word "and," it will be precisely the bill which the House of Representatives passed. It is clear that it was the determination of Congress to make a grant of land to Minnesota, in aid of the construction of this road. There can be no doubt upon that point; but there was this discrepancy between the House bill and the Senate bill. Now, it occurs to me that all that it is incumbent upon us to do, all that we should do in this hasty manner, is to adopt the course recommended by the investigating committee of the House, and to substitute the word "or" for the word "and," so that the bill shall read precisely as it would have read if there had been no change made in it. That, of course, vindicates the purity of Congress. It vindicates the purity of our records, and of our legislation. It carries out the intention of Congress in making the grant. It saves to the people of the Territory all the advantages they expected to derive from the grant. I think that is all we ought to do under the circumstances. I move, therefore, to amend the amendment of the Senator from Maryland by striking out all after the word "that," and inserting:

The word "and" between the words "constituted" and "organized" in the third section of the act "to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," shall read "or," and shall have the same effect in law as if the word "or," instead of "and," had been in the original bill when passed and approved.

A SENATOR. And the word "future" before "Legislature."

Mr. DOUGLAS. The word "future" was stricken out before the bill passed the House. The amendment I have proposed, I understand to be precisely what the investigating committee of the House recommended, after a full investigation of the subject. Now, I think it is safe to follow the report of that committee of investigation. They gave the subject a thorough examination. They heard all the witnesses. They had time to deliberate on it. They came to the deliberate conclusion that this substitution should be made, and they reported a bill to the House very nearly in the precise words of my amendment, and certainly it has precisely the same legal effect. I think this is all the Senate ought to do; put the bill in the same condition in which it would have been if there had been no change, and carry out all the objects which Congress had in view. Then certainly no censure can attach to anybody on account of this affair.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, I have listened to the Senator from Illinois, in his statement of facts as to what occurred in the House of Representatives; and I am authorized to say that the committee who had the matter under investigation, were unanimously of opinion that the alteration was material, and affected the intention of the House of Representatives. When that report came before the House, the whole facts were made known to the members of that body, and they instantly adopted, as a substitute, a bill repealing the former act, on the ground that the whole matter had been tainted with fraud, and they looked upon the repeal of the law as the only means of shielding and protecting that body from imputations.

Now, sir, it is known to us all that there are imputations against the manner in which business is conducted here, and a feeling is generally entertained that there is no exact certainty in the results of our legislation. For the purpose of making this thing at once prominent, not only before Congress, but before the country, and to carry out the determination of the two Houses of Congress to shield and protect themselves from such imputations, this is the best mode that can be adopted. Your decision that this public measure shall be put a stop to, will make it more prominent on your statute-book, and will rally the feelings of the country in favor of Congress, and the determination of Congress to put down all fraud, and not to shield it in any form or shape. But, even if it be untrue that there was any fraud in this matter, the best plan is to stamp it with the strongest judgment that we can place upon it; and as my colleague said, if this bill in favor of Minnesota be a just and right one, we can pass it again. I voted against it; but, at the proper time, I would rather vote for it than let the bill, as it now stands, remain on the statute-book with the imputation which it conveys to the country.

The people of Minnesota need fear no danger in relation to their rights. They have had nothing to do with this matter. It is one which I hope and believe has been accidental; but we cannot wipe from the mind of the country the impression that there was something wrong, and especially when the investigating committee of the House unanimously reported that the alteration was material, vesting the entire rights in relation to these appropriations of land in one company instead of the Legislature of the Territory.

I repeat with my colleague that it is better to repass the law de novo than to let it pass under any mode we could adopt here to shield us from imputation. Sir, I look upon it as the most unfortunate thing in the world that any charge of impropriety should be brought against the conduct of members or officers of Congress, and we ought to be exceedingly cautious and jealous when we have a suggestion of that kind made. We should let our determination be of such a character as to show that in future such things cannot pass unnoticed. I make no imputations. On the contrary, I hope every member is innocent. But, sir, here was an amendment made to a bill which had already passed both Houses, and passed through the enrolling clerks, and committees of examination, and received the assent of the President. Such things should be guarded against.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, there is a view of this subject which it seems to me, is material, and yet which has not been adverted to at all. When the law was passed by the other branch of the national Legislature it contained a provision by which this land was conveyed to any railroad company which had been "constituted and organized." I learn from the honorable Senator from Illinois, that while this legislation was going on, the Territorial Legislature of Minnesota constituted, or in other words chartered a company. It was then a company constituted but not organized, so that the act at the time it passed the lower branch of the national Legislature was entirely inoperative, because there was no company which was both "constituted and organized." The result, therefore, of the change of the word "and" to "or" made that legislation effective, which was otherwise entirely inoperative, because a company which had been simply constituted, was then privileged to take this land. As the Legislature designed, it was to be a company which had been constituted and organized, and in fact there was no company, both constituted and organized at the time.

Now, Mr. President, the law of Congress is the will of both branches of the national Legislature. It is manifest that the law which is now upon your statute-book upon this subject, is not the will of the lower branch of the national Legislature. They have passed an act repealing that law, thereby announcing in the strongest terms, their disapproval of what has been inadvertently done for them, and we are asked to relieve them of the obligation of an act which was not their will. It seems to me that it is our constitutional obligation to do it. If I am correctly informed by my honorable friend from Illinois, in regard to the facts in this case, it is still more certain that this obligation exists upon us, because there was no company constituted and organized at the time of the passage of the act, and consequently the grant which was made by your law when it passed was entirely inoperative, but was made operative by the alteration.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to ask what is the precise question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. DOUGLAS. So as to make the original bill read as if there had been no alteration.

Mr. BUTLER. Will that not have the effect of sending it back to the House of Representatives?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Either will have that effect. It must go to the House in either event.

Mr. PEARCE. My motive for urging my amendment in preference to that of the Senator from Illinois, is, that the House of Representatives, in which this bill originated, in which the error or perversion of the bill arose, have adopted this mode of remedying the evil; and I think, in deference to that House, we ought to adopt the procedure which is agreeable to them, unless an overruling necessity should require a different course.

Mr. BENJAMIN. And the House refused to adopt the proposition of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, and the question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. PEARCE.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to save the grant to the Territory in some mode, and I will now offer it in a shape to which, I hope, there will be no objection. I offer now the original bill, in the precise form, word for word, in which it passed the House of Representatives, and then adding to it a clause repealing the former bill. I do not think the people of the Territory ought to suffer by this transaction in the House. My object is to save to them the grant of land for their road in some form, if possible, and in a form satisfactory to Congress, at the same time that we vindicate the honor and the records of the country. I offer now, as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, the bill, word for word, which passed the House of Representatives, with this additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," approved June 29th, 1854, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

This will repeal the former act, and at the same time make a new grant; and that new grant will be in the precise form in which the original bill passed the House of Representatives, word for word, comma for comma. Certainly, I think, there can be no objection to that. I move it as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. The only objection to it is, that that bill would necessarily die between the two Houses.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Not at all; no more than this.

Mr. DAWSON. They have sent us a bill in accordance with their sentiments, and if we concur in it, the matter will be closed.

Mr. STUART. The proposition of the Senator from Maryland is an amendment, and will have to go back to the House if adopted.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The difficulty is, that my friend from Georgia is opposed to all these bills.

Mr. DAWSON. Not at all. I have no such feeling. I wish to let the House have their will; and I do not wish to shield this transaction from the House of Representatives. It is just to them that we should pass the provision as they have sent it to us.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What better vindication can the House of Representatives have than for us to pass the bill, word for word, and comma for comma, as they passed it? That is the most thorough vindication that can be made. The only point is, shall we go beyond that, and take away from the people of Minnesota what we have granted to them? My object is to save the grant to the people. If you make the grant now, and repeal the previous act, the grant will take effect from the passage of this bill. I ask for the yeas and nays upon my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MASON. I agree with what fell last from the honorable Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE.] Here has been presented to us by the House of Representatives a case of mal-practice of some kind. Whether it originated in improper motives or otherwise, I am not further informed than by what fell from the honorable Senator from Michigan. He says that the committee of the House have exonerated those who made these alterations from any improper motive. I hope it may turn out so. I have never seen the report, but the fact is, that improper dealing has been had with the legislation of the country. The House of Representatives have raised a committee of inquiry. The report of that committee of inquiry we have never seen; but the House have sent to us a bill to repair what has been done, and that bill is to repeal their former legislation. Now, I think, in that state of things, when we have not time to investigate it, we should not hesitate at once to take what the House have sent us, and adopt it.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I concur in the object the Senator from Illinois seeks to attain. A grant of land has been made by Congress to the Territory of Minnesota; and no person, I suppose, desires to deprive the people of the Territory of the benefits of the grant which Congress has deliberately made. The people of the Territory are not implicated in these transactions, whatever they may be, and it would be wrong to visit upon the people the consequences of certain transactions in which they have had no participation whatever. I rose for the purpose of suggesting to the Senator from Illinois that, while we vindicated the action of the House by concurring in their own proposition, we should, notwithstanding, take up the bill as the Senator from Illinois has indicated it and pass it, and send both to the House of Representatives together. That would answer every purpose of justice to the people of the Territory; and it would at the same time vindicate the honor of the House of Representatives. I will also suggest to the Senator from Illinois whether it would not be better, in passing the bill, to conform to what was the original intention of its framers by including the word "future" in the place where it was stricken out, as well as the word "or," where it was substituted for "and." Then I think every object of honor and justice could be attained.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If it be the wish of any portion of the Senate to put in the word "future," as well as the word "or," I am entirely willing to do that. The reason I did not insert it was, that it was stricken out previously to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHASE. It was not stricken out by the House.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It was stricken out by the committee, and the House concurred in their action. I wish to suggest, however, that I do not think the repealing clause should be separated from the clause enacting the new law, and for a very evident reason: one might be concurred in, and the other lost. My object is to save the grant to the people at the same time that we vindicate the House. The granting clause may just as well go in the same law with the repealing clause, and then everything will be safe. The amendment I now propose is the House bill with this alteration in it.

Mr. CHASE. Then I would suggest that, by unanimous consent, the pending bill be passed by informally, and that we take up the bill proposed by the Senator from Illinois, and pass it, and send it to the House, and await, for a reasonable time, the action of the House. I think there can be no objection to that.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do make objection to that. I object to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. I am satisfied with the amendment as it was first offered by the Senator from Maryland. I will, in a few words, give my reasons for this position.

I think, sir, that the House of Representatives has an undoubted right to demand, at the hands of this body, full control over the legislation which has passed through that body by surprise, fraud, ignorance, or whatever cause you please to attribute it to. The House of Representatives passed a bill in a particular form. The Senate passed the same bill in another form. Therefore, under the Constitution of the United States, that bill never became the law of the land, even after the signature of the President. A subaltern officer of one of the two branches of Congress (I do not know who he is, and I do not care for what cause) altered the bill which the House of Representatives had passed, so as to make that appear the concurrent action of the two Houses of Congress, which, in truth, was not so. The House of Representatives has discovered that. It has had the subject examined by a committee. That committee has reported back to the House a recommendation to put back the legislation where it was before it had been tampered with. The House, acting with a due regard to its own dignity, has declined to accede to the recommendation of its own committee, and has declared that it would not put back the legislation where it was at the time it passed that legislation; but that it would repeal the legislation, and take the matter into its own hands at its own discretion.

Now, sir, as the Senator from Maryland proposes, if we send back to the House a provision to repeal the Minnesota bill as they desire, they will accept that action of the Senate, and will have undisputed control of the further action over the subject. We may then send them over again a Minnesota land bill, and they will be at liberty to adopt it or not, as they shall please. But the Senator from Illinois desires us to send back to the House an amendment which will repeal the bill already passed, but which is coupled with another amendment to force the House to pass a bill which it desires to have full control over. That is just the point. By the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, we repeal the bill already passed, and leave the House to repass the Minnesota land bill or not, as it shall please. The Senator from Illinois desires to put a condition upon the power of the House to repeal that act, with the obligation to reenact the law already passed. I say, under circumstances so unfortunate as those which have arisen in this case, it is the duty of the Senate to concur with the House in everything that may put the House in complete control of its own action, that it may vindicate its own rights in the manner which to it shall seem best.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The pending question having been temporarily laid aside,

Mr. HUNTER. The committee of conference, to whom were referred the points of disagreement between the Senate and House of Representatives on the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending June 30, 1855, have had a meeting, and have been unable to agree.

Mr. WELLER. I would ask the Senator from Virginia, whether there is any particular point of difficulty in the committee of conference which might be obviated by the Senate?

Mr. HUNTER. I believe that if the water question were out of the way, there might, perhaps, be an agreement.

Mr. GWIN. Let me ask the Senator a question. Could not the committee have the action of the Senate on those amendments about which they have agreed?

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir. The report of a committee of conference is an entire thing. We are obliged to act on the whole or none.

Mr. GWIN. Can we not get the action of the Senate on an isolated question?

Mr. HUNTER. The Senate can recede from its amendment in relation to the water works.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate recede from that amendment.

Mr. STUART. I submit that the Senate must have the bill here before that can be done.

Mr. HUNTER. I have the printed bill here. I presume that will do as well as the engrossed bill.

Mr. STUART. I do not object to that.

Mr. WELLER. I do not know what the practice of the Senate has been; but I should think there would be no impropriety in the Senate giving their advice on any particular question involving this difficulty to the committee of conference appointed on the part of the Senate. If, for instance, this amendment be the great cause of difficulty in the committee of conference, and a majority of the Senate be willing to recede from it, the whole difficulty may be settled, and the committee of conference enabled to agree at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] that the conferees on the part of the Senate be instructed to recede from the following amendment:

For continuing the work for a supply of water to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $500,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the corporations of Washington and Georgetown, or either of them, shall appropriate and pay an amount equal to one fourth of said sum for the same purpose, and shall agree to pay in like manner the same proportion of all future appropriations; and full power and authority are hereby given to said corporations, respectively, to raise, by loan or otherwise, any sum of money that may be necessary to enable them, or either of them, to make the appropriation herein required; and the said corporations of Washington and Georgetown, and the inhabitants of the said cities respectively, or the corporation making the appropriation, and the inhabitants of such city, shall be authorized to use the surplus water which may be brought by the Washington aqueduct, after supplying the Government establishments in Washington, under such general rules and regulations as may hereafter be prescribed by Congress; and each of said corporations shall have the right to charge and collect of the inhabitants of such city such reasonable tax or rent for the use of the water as will provide for the regular payment of the interest, and the gradual payment of the principal, of any money which may be raised under the authority hereby given.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should like to know how far it is in order to discuss the subject now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The subject being before the Senate, the Chair is of opinion that it is open to discussion.

Mr. BRIGHT. Being one of the committee of conference on this bill, I desire to make a statement, which, I presume, is entirely parliamentary. The Senate placed a great many very important amendments on the bill; they were doubtless so considered by the Senators who offered them. The committee on the part of the Senate have yielded, I may say, four fifths of our amendments. I speak of the agreement of the two committees, as far as they have gone. At least four fifths of the amendments of the Senate were cut off. When we came to this amendment, the House committee insisted on rejecting it, for the reason that when the proposition was before the Senate, on a call of the yeas and nays, it received only about three votes out of four. The committee did not feel at liberty to yield in this point, after having yielded almost everything to the House before we reached this amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. The House concurred in many of our amendments.

Mr. BRIGHT. But they are few, compared with the great number of amendments. Now, the question is, whether we shall yield this amendment. I am against receding. I believe the amendment to be just, right, and proper. It is an object of national importance, and one that commends itself to every Senator: one that affects his health and comfort, as well as the health and comfort of every citizen within the limits of this District. For one, I am opposed to yielding it.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, that before this amendment was offered to the civil and diplomatic bill—an appropriation bill—it was known to the Senate that a majority of the House of Representatives, as had been demonstrated by two deliberate votes, were opposed to making this appropriation. I consider it improper to place a proposition on an appropriation bill, with a view to force either body of Congress, against their known judgment and deliberately expressed opinions. If Senators, for the sake of these water-works, are willing to hazard or to defeat all the appropriations for the Government, it is for them to take the responsibility. It must be borne in mind, that if it is done, it will be contrary to the spirit and intention of the Constitution, which requires for every measure which becomes a law, the approbation of a majority of each branch of Congress. It was known that, as a separate measure, this could not possibly obtain the sanction of a majority of that House. To place it on an appropriation bill and adhere to it, and thus to attempt to force it on the other House, is, I say, a palpable violation of the spirit of the Constitution. It is for the Senate to determine whether they will hazard the whole bill for the sake of this amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall have the question. It is important that we should act at once.

Mr. WELLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. GWIN. I intend to vote against receding from this amendment, after the statement of the Senator from Indiana, that the committee of conference have already receded from four fifths of the amendments of the Senate. I do not know what has become of my State. I think this amendment will do very well to have a fight upon.

The question being taken on receding, was determined in the affirmative—yeas 27, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Butler, Chase, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mason, Morton, Pettit, Rockwell, Sebastian, Slidell, and Thomson of New Jersey—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bright, Dawson, Douglas, Fish, Gwin, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Stuart, Sumner, Toombs, Wade, Walker, and Weller—19.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose it will be necessary to send a message to the House, to inform them of our action.

Mr. BRIGHT. I think not. I apprehend the vote which has been taken is merely a direction to the committee to recede from that amendment. The bill is still in the custody of the committee of conference.

Mr. WELLER. No message can be sent to the House in regard to it while the bill is in the hands of the committee of conference.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the Senator from Indiana be kind enough to inform me if our receding from this amendment was made a condition precedent?

Mr. BRIGHT. I understood our chairman to ask the sense of the Senate on the single proposition, whether we should recede from this amendment? The Senate have directed that we should do so. We have now but to go to the committee room and yield it.

Mr. TOOMBS. I voted against the water-works from beginning to end; but I am opposed to any such irregular proceeding as this, and therefore I voted against receding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will observe that, instead of being irregular, it is of frequent occurrence.

Mr. TOOMBS. It is against parliamentary usage, and the dignity of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote of the Senate has only been a direction to the committee of conference, on their part, to recede from this amendment, and, therefore, it will be unnecessary to inform the other House of our action.

BOUNDARY OF NEW MEXICO.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill declaring the southern boundary of New Mexico, in which they asked the concurrence of the Senate.

MINNESOTA LAND BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the Minnesota land bill; the question being on Mr. DOUGLAS's motion.

Mr. TOOMBS. I have had some difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to what is right in this matter. My mind was inclined to the proposition of the Senator from Maryland—the first offered. As I stated then, it seems to me that when the House of Representatives have passed a bill, and that bill has been altered, and we pass it with the alteration, if we put it back in the same condition in which it was before the alteration, we do justice to all concerned. I shall, therefore, vote for the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it is a very high duty on this body, to send back the bill with the amendment proposed by the House; that is to repeal the original law entirely, and leave the House with a blank sheet of paper, so far as regards legislation for this Territory on this subject. I understand, as the original bill was passed by the House and came to the Senate, it came with the word "or" in it, forbidding an incipient company to have a franchise; but the word "and," in some way, has found its way into the law—a word that gives an entirely different interpretation to it. The difference between "and" and "or," in the connection in which the alteration is made, is to prohibit a franchise or give one. I think we are bound to send this proposition back to the House in the terms that they ask; and, therefore, I shall vote against all amendments, and accept the proposition which has come from the House.

Mr. BENJAMIN. We cannot put things back exactly as they were. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois will not do it, and the reason is this: The bill, as it originally passed, provided that the grant might inure to a company constituted "or" organized. There was no company then constituted "and" organized, and, therefore, the word "and" was stricken out and "or" inserted, so as to enable the grant to inure to a company then constituted, but not yet organized. Since that period a company has been organized. It is now a company constituted and organized, and if you re-pass the bill, even as it originally passed the House, you carry out the very object that was had in view by those who made this alteration.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Allow me to call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the fact that he has misconstrued the bill as it passed the House. The bill, as it passed the House, contained a provision that the lands should not inure to any company "heretofore constituted and organized." The change which was made was to substitute "and" for "or" so that the land should not inure to any company heretofore constituted "and" organized. Now, I propose to pass it in the precise language of the original House bill, so that it shall read that the land shall not inure to any company heretofore constituted or organized. As the company to which the Senator alludes is both constituted and organized, it certainly cannot take, in any event, under this grant. Under the grant I propose by my amendment, no company heretofore constituted or organized can take the land, and it leaves it to a future Legislature of the Territory of Minnesota to provide what disposition shall be made of the grant, and all companies are cut off.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the Senator put in "future Legislature?"

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will, with pleasure. I so modify it in the third section.

Mr. CHASE. I would suggest to the Senator from Illinois the expediency of withdrawing this proposition as an amendment, and passing it as a separate bill after having concurred in the action of the House. The House has already taken that action, in vindication of its honor, and in vindication of the legislation of the country, which it deemed requisite. Anything less than concurrence with the House in that action would hardly be that courtesy which is due from one branch of the Legislature to the other. While there is no Senator who desires to deprive the Territory of Minnesota of the grant of land, many Senators will be constrained, both from their original principles in respect to these grants, and also from their deference to the House, to vote against this proposition as an amendment, though they would cheerfully consent to allow the Senate to take it up and pass it as an independent proposition.

Mr. PEARCE. I do not think I shall be able to agree with the Senator from Illinois. I think there is, without being able to say what the cause for it is, a stain on our legislation. I feel that it cannot be wiped away except by an unconditional repeal; and I believe, though I will not give my reasons for that belief, since I do not think it would be parliamentary, that this is the only way in which we can effect that purpose, and repeal the bill which has erroneously passed into law. After this amendment shall have been adopted, and the repeal effected, I shall be perfectly willing to vote for the bill of the Senator from Illinois, if he will present it as an independent proposition. Then it will be in the power of the House to do what they think proper. I think, by departing from that plan, you will, in effect, though not in form and intention, sanction the wrong which has been committed, and, therefore, make the evil double.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is evident to every one here that the character of legislation in this instance has assumed somewhat an aspect of vindictiveness. There has been irritation gotten up on this subject; and though I have no idea that gentlemen are conscious of the fact, it does carry with it something of the aspect of vindictiveness; and whenever that is the case, there is almost always something that is not right.

The Senator from Illinois proposes to enact the original bill precisely as the House passed it, and as they declare they meant. What more can they ask? The House passed the bill originally. We know very well that it is difficult to get such bills through that House. If we send this proposition back without amending it in the manner in which the Senator from Illinois proposes, and if we afterwards send a bill making a grant of land, we send it to its certain death. Is it right to act upon the interests of a people living at a distance in this manner, when they have no representative on this floor, and when we must see the result to which it will lead? Why not do what ought to be satisfactory to the House, and so far as coercion may be considered to be used in it, use the coercion which is necessary; that is to say, exercise our proper rights here to pass the bill as the House originally passed it. What more can they ask, or what more ought to be done? I cannot see that more ought to be demanded or expected in justice. It is proposed to pass the bill precisely as the House originally passed it, and as they declare they meant. When we do that, assuredly it ought to be sufficient. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Illinois will prevail.

Mr. SEWARD. It seems to me, Mr. President, that if we are under any obligation to act upon this subject at all, it is on the ground of comity to the House of Representatives. It is in the House of Representatives that this mistake has occurred; it is the House of Representatives that seeks to correct the mistake. The committee of the House has reported that no one is in fault, and it has reported one remedy as sufficient to vindicate the House. The House has dissented from its committee, and has adopted another and more extreme remedy; and if we are to act upon it at all, it seems to me it should be to allow the House, with our cooperation, to vindicate its own integrity, and the integrity of its records; and if so, they are to be the judges of what the form of this vindication should be. Therefore, it seems to me that while we should allow the bill they have sent here to pass, we should allow them also free liberty to correct the mistake, and, at the same time, as it seems to me, we could manifest adherence to our original intention, in the form in which we have once already expressed it; that is, to give the same quantity of land as before, and for the same purpose, to the Territory of Minnesota. The form in which we shall do it is not very material; but I am inclined to think that that would be the proper course, and it would be more in accordance with the spirit in which we should act towards the House. I think we should pass the repealing clause by itself, and then make the grant in a separate bill.

Mr. BROWN. If it be the temper of the Senate to pass the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, I have no objection; but if amendments are offered and adopted, I shall conceive it to be my duty to propose more amendments.

The Senate passed the Minnesota railroad bill, and passed a great many other railroad bills; but the Minnesota bill seems to be the only one which received any favor in the House of Representatives. Now, if, in the present state of this affair, we are disposed to send back the Minnesota railroad bill to the House, I know of no reason why we should not send back to them other railroad bills which we have passed. Two or three have been passed for the benefit of my State; one or two for the benefit of your State, Mr. President, [Mr. WALKER in the chair,] some for the benefit of the State of my friend from Louisiana; and some for the benefit of other States. I know not, sir, what view you and other gentlemen may take of this subject; but I know of no reason which should induce me to vote for a railroad for Minnesota which should not be equally binding upon me to vote for a railroad bill in Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, in Michigan, or in other States of the Union. Why this Territory should be selected out as the pet child of the nation, I am unable to understand. Now, when we have the whole matter in our own hands, I, for one, am for defeating this whole proposition, or else for inducing the House to take up the remainder of our railroad bills and pass them. They have thought proper to repeal the Minnesota bill, and send it back to us. The Senator from Illinois proposes to reinstate the original Minnesota bill, by way of amendment to that act of repeal; and if that be done, I am disposed to put my Mississippi railroad bills in the same act, as amendments, and send them to the House of Representatives, and say to them "let the Minnesota railroad bill stand as it is, or we will do nothing."

If, however, as I said in the outset, it be the temper of the Senate to concur with the House in the repeal of the Minnesota bill, and then to adopt the views of the Senator from Ohio, and reenact the Minnesota bill afterwards, as a separate measure, I, for one, will stand aloof. I shall not, however, consent to see the Minnesota bill passed a second time through the Senate, and go to the House, giving favors to that Territory, to the exclusion of all the land States in the Union. I know of no reason why my State, and half a dozen other land States, should not receive, at the hands of the Government, favors at least equal to that which you give to the Territory of Minnesota. With that view I give notice to the Senate now, that when it shall be in order, I mean to move my Mississippi land bill as an amendment to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WELLER. I sincerely hope we may be able to obtain a vote now. Every Senator here must be ready to vote upon the question. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois be adopted, the effect will be to make that the law of the land, which neither branch of Congress ever intended should become a law. That will be the inevitable effect, whether the Senator from Illinois desires it or not. Such, in my judgment, must be the effect. There will be no great public loss in postponing this question till the next session. At the next session we can pass the original bill, as the House intended it should pass. In the mean time, the temper in which the House have passed this bill, clearly demonstrates that they intend to do nothing—but wipe out this law; and, under the circumstances, I am in favor of wiping it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. I propose to let the Senator from Illinois, if he pleases, to strike out the last section of his amendment—the one repealing the former law.

Mr. DOUGLAS. There would not be any necessity for reenacting the law, if the old one were not repealed.

Mr. DAWSON. I do not wish both to go together. I wish to separate them.

Mr. DOUGLAS. My idea is to put them both together, so as to save time and carry out the wishes of Congress, so that Minnesota shall have the grant; but that it shall not go to certain companies.

Mr. HOUSTON. As the House have taken action on this subject, I shall vote, under the circumstances, to concur literally in the provision made by the House, and let them adjudicate their own matters which originated in that body.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon the amendment to the amendment, resulted—yeas 15, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bright, Brodhead, Cooper, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Geyer, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Morton, Stuart, Toombs, and Toucey—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Butler, Chase, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Houston, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Seward, Slidell, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—28.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the question recurred upon the original amendment offered by Mr. PEARCE.

Mr. BROWN. After the vote which has just been taken, I shall not propose the amendment of which I gave notice.

Mr. STUART. Mr. President, I should not say a word further on this subject, for I have been desirous all day to save time, but for a suggestion from the Senator from Georgia which seemed to intimate that I was very wrong in objecting to the bill which came from the House. I endeavored to state very distinctly that my object was to have that bill referred to a standing committee of the Senate, to inquire into the facts, and to report immediately what action, in the opinion of that committee, the Senate ought to take. I thought it was not proper, without any examination at all, to repeal this act; but a decided majority of the Senate evidently think otherwise. Now, sir, I am not going to put myself in resistance to the will of the Senate. I have done enough, with what I shall do hereafter, to show the correctness and constancy of my views. But, sir, to show the propriety of this sort of legislation, I ask the attention of the Senate for a minute while I state a fact which has occurred on the civil and diplomatic bill, to show how accidents happen, and with what propriety we act upon them.

To the civil and diplomatic bill the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, of which committee I am a member, offered an amendment in the Senate, to provide for the erection of certain custom-houses and certain marine hospitals, all as one amendment. He stated so distinctly when he offered it, and the Senate voted on it as one amendment, and adopted it. The clerks of this body certified it to the other House as two amendments—one for custom-houses and the other for marine hospitals. The House of Representatives agreed to both of them; but the clerks of the House of Representatives certified to the committee of conference that the House of Representatives had disagreed to both of them, and they had it so before them to-day. Here, sir, was a clear and unqualified error, without intention and without censure—such an error as must inevitably occur when there is such confusion as we know sometimes exists here. Here was an error of the clerks of both Houses, misrepresenting the action of both Houses. With equal propriety, I think, might some Senator get up here and move to repeal the civil and diplomatic bill as to repeal the Minnesota land grant, because our own clerks have made a mistake. We see fit to say, by this bill, (and it can receive no other interpretation,) that we will sacrifice, so far as we hold the power, the interests of the people of the Territory of Minnesota because our officers have done wrong. Mr. President, that is a doctrine which, with as much respect, I apprehend, for the House of Representatives as any other Senator, I cannot make up my mind that it is my duty to vote for.

Mr. RUSK. I have uniformly voted for grants of lands for railroads. I think it is good policy. I am willing to vote for them again. But as a friend of that system of granting lands for the construction of railroads, I shall vote for the repeal of this law. It has a suspicion thrown around it. There are many charges that those laws are the result of combinations of companies. I think the only way and the best way for this interest is to repeal this law, and act fairly upon it anew.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER.) The Chair will observe, in justification of the clerks of the Senate, that he took occasion to-day to examine, with one of the clerks, the condition of the proposition mentioned by the Senator from Michigan, and he found that they were in fact two separate propositions, and two separate sections; one section for custom-houses and another for marine hospitals.

Mr. STUART. They may have been so certified, but the Senator from Maine, chairman of the Committee on Commerce, of which I am a member, was directed by the committee to report them as one amendment. He so reported them, and he so stated them from his seat, and they were so understood by the Senators around him. Now, I do not wish the Chair, or the Senate, or the clerks, to understand that I complain of them. I say there is no blame on account of it, but it is one of those accidents which will happen when, at the heel of a session, you are doing things by the way of what I call a stampede.

Mr. BAYARD. There is a wide difference between the two cases, however. In the case adverted to by the honorable Senator from Michigan, supposing there is an error, it is an error of slight inattention or neglect in the course of business. Without saying anything as to the motive in the other case, it was a deliberate and intended error at least.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to ask, in justification of the clerks, whether the propositions referred to by the Senator from Michigan were not voted upon separately in the Senate.

Several SENATORS. That is out of order.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the amendment of Mr. PEARCE, to add the following additional section:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the bill, entitled "An act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," which passed the House of Representatives on the 20th day of June, 1854, and which was approved by the President of the United States, on the 29th of June, 1854, be, and the same is hereby, repealed;

—and resulted—yeas 36, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Seward, Slidell, Sumner, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Geyer, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, and Stuart—10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Minnesota land bill is about to be repealed. The advantages which were conceded by the bill in the first place, as it passed the House, and not as it stands, are now virtually repealed. It is done, I believe, under a spirit of irritation which pervaded the other House, and the general spirit of opposition to the granting of alternate sections in aid of railroads. All the people of that distant Territory are interested in this matter. We have exercised over them a guardian care hitherto. They have no voice upon this floor to defend or protect their rights. There should have been calm consideration in this matter, particularly when no individual fraud is alleged. There should have been some reference of the question to the appropriate committee, and we should have had their report before acting upon the subject. If it was necessary to have an immediate report, I trust there is sufficient confidence on the part of this body in the Committee on Public Lands to believe that they would have made an immediate report. This could have been done, but it was not. The fever that has raged in the House has reached this body, and the friends of the system of alternate sections have turned the cold shoulder to it. They have struck it a blow; and I cannot refrain from saying, Mr. President, that I believe they have struck down the last hope of the new States, and I fear we shall get no more grants of this character. There is now amongst those who advocate the policy of this class of measures, a war, which must afford high gratification to those who have so bitterly opposed everything like relief to those who have suffered beneath the curses of your whole public land system. That is the way in which the matter stands. Now, sir, I have nothing more to say so far as I am concerned; no constituents of mine suffer by this act; but I wish to call attention to the fact, that a people who have no voice on this floor to defend or protect them, are the victims of this policy. I think it is a piece of bare naked injustice.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill, as amended, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. PEARCE. I move to amend the title, by adding "and for other purposes."

Mr. GEYER. I should like to have the title amended so as to indicate the objects of the bill, and that can be done by adding: "and to repeal the act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein;" so that when persons read the title of the act, they will know what it contains.

Mr. PEARCE. Very well; that can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WELLER. I propose that we change the order of the sections of the bill. Let the repealing section come first, and then the pension. I do not like this putting the cart before the horse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That cannot be done, as the bill has been passed. The question now is on amending the title, as proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to; and the title, as amended, was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had, this day, approved and signed the following acts:

An act granting the right of way over, and depot grounds on, the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, in the State of Michigan, to the Port Huron and Lake Michigan Railroad Company; and

An act for the relief of Jonas P. Levy and José Maria Jarrero.

RELATIONS WITH SPAIN.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States of the 1st of the present month, in reply to the resolution of the Senate, asking information "whether anything has arisen since the date of his message to the House of Representatives of the 15th March last, concerning our relations with the Government of Spain; which, in his opinion, may dispense with the suggestions therein contained, touching the propriety of 'provisional measures' by Congress to meet any exigency that may arise in the recess of Congress affecting those relations," reported that the committee entirely concur with the President in the declaration contained in his message to the House of Representatives, and reiterated in his message to the Senate, that "in view of the position of the Island of Cuba, its proximity to our coast, the relations which it must ever bear to our commercial and other interests, it is vain to expect that a series of unfriendly acts, infringing our commercial rights, and the adoption of a policy threatening the honor and security of these States, can long exist with peaceful relations;" and are satisfied that, whatever measures may be found necessary to insure the future security and repose to the country, (menaced from the quarter indicated,) and to vindicate the honor of our flag, will be adopted by Congress. An earnest hope, both on the part of the President and of Congress, that the difficulties with Spain, referred to in the message, would have been adjusted before the termination of the present session by an amicable arrangement, has, as it would appear, caused both to forbear, until but a short interval remains between the close of the present and the stated commencement of the next meeting of Congress.

The full repatriation that has been demanded by the Executive, with adequate guarantees for the future, will alone satisfy the just expectations of the country; and the committee would not hesitate to recommend the "provisional measures" suggested by the President, to be executed by him in the recess of Congress, even under the difficulties of maturing them when the close of the session is already at hand, were the interval to be long before the next meeting of Congress. As that will be, however, but of four months' duration, they have deemed it better, on the whole, to leave the subject, as it is at present, with the Executive. Should the occasion unfortunately render it necessary, it must, of course, occupy the earliest attention of Congress at its next meeting. And for the above reasons the committee ask to be discharged.

The committee was discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and the report was ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th of June, 1855, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MALLORY to provide a retired list.

Mr. MALLORY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Walker, and Weller—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Evans, Geyer, Morton, Norris, Pettit, Stuart, Toombs, and Toucey—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I have another amendment:

And be it further enacted, That naval pursers shall hereafter be styled paymasters, and all laws, rules, and regulations applying to pursers shall apply to them as paymasters: Provided, That this change of name shall not be held to affect their pay, rank, or duty.

That is simply a change in the name of a grade of officers. No money or interest is concerned in it one way or another.

Mr. SLIDELL. I think this is very idle legislation. We all know what pursers are. I cannot conceive the necessity for this.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I offer the following:

And be it further enacted, That the two general orders of the Secretary of the Navy, dated August 31, 1846, and May 27, 1847, upon relative rank, shall have the force and effect of law.

That is to legalize the relative rank of pursers and surgeons in the Navy as it now exists. It is deemed to be necessary in consequence of an opinion of the Attorney General that it is a matter coming within the cognizance of Congress, and not that of the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I have one other amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the pay of the boat-swains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers of the Navy, shall be as follows: On leave or waiting orders, per annum, $600; shore duties, per annum, $700; sea service, per annum, $900; and an addition of two per centum upon the foregoing rates for every year's sea service, and an addition upon sea pay of ten per centum when serving in ships with four hundred men, and twenty per centum when serving in ships with nine hundred men.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the bill will now be ordered to its third reading.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is now in the Senate, and I have an amendment to offer. I propose to strike out the clause appropriating $13,400 for the navy-yard at Memphis, and to insert the amendment which I offer in these words:

And be it further enacted, That all the grounds and appurtenances thereto belonging, known as the Memphis navy yard, Shelby county, Tennessee, be, and the same are hereby, ceded to the mayor and aldermen of the city of Memphis, for the use and benefit of said city; and that the Secretary of the Navy order the commandant of the said navy-yard at Memphis to surrender to the mayor of Memphis said property.

Gentlemen have said that it was nonsense to have this navy-yard. I hope the Senators from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] Missouri, [Mr. ARCHISON,] and Georgia, [Mr. TOOMBS,] will vindicate the amendment.

Mr. TOOMBS. I understand from the Senator from Tennessee that the grounds were given for this purpose by the city of Memphis. If that be so, believing that it is unwise in the Government to appropriate them for any such purpose, I will return them with a great deal of pleasure, so far as I have power.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. In order to satisfy the Senator, I propose to read from a report of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GWIN. Oh, no! We will take it for granted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to stand right about the facts; and I shall hold the Committee on Naval Affairs, and especially the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] responsible for them. Here is an extract from a report made by that Senator from the committee two years ago:

"By the act of 15th June, 1844, Congress authorized the selection and purchase of a site for a navy-yard and depot at Memphis, the language of said act being as follows:

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to select and purchase a site for a navy-yard and depot at the city of Memphis, and to erect such buildings, and make such improvements thereon, as may be necessary for the construction and repair, and for the accommodation and supply of vessels of war of the United States; and that the President is authorized and empowered to purchase any water-rights which may be necessary to propel the machinery appertaining to said navy-yard; and which may be useful in the operations of said navy-yard; and that he be further empowered to receive any donations of lands water rights, or rights of way, which the authorities of the city of Memphis, or any other body-corporate, or any person or persons, may deem proper to make or grant to the Government of the United States; and that the sum of $100,000 be appropriated;" &c.

"In pursuance of this law, a site was selected within the city of Memphis, by a board of officers duly appointed for that purpose. A number of private lots, and a large portion of the 'public landing,' and of several streets and alleys, were included within the limits of the site thus selected for the navy-yard and depot. These private lots were sold by the owners to the corporation of Memphis, at a price believed to have been very inadequate; and the said corporation, with the consent and approval of the citizens, in public meeting assembled, conveyed the whole property to the United States, without demanding anything more than the cost of the private property which had been purchased as aforesaid. The motive for this liberality on the part of the citizens and public authorities of Memphis, was to secure to that city the advantages of such a naval establishment as had been provided for in the law above quoted. For the same reason, the Legislature of the State surrendered jurisdiction over the premises to the United States."

That was the report of the committee two years ago. If that is nonsense, just give it back to us, and let us have it.

Mr. GWIN. The first question is on striking out the appropriation for the navy-yard at Memphis entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALKER.) Will the Senator from California allow the Chair to make a suggestion? The Senator from Tennessee proposes to strike out a certain part of the bill, and then comes up his amendment to insert, as follows: "that all the grounds and appurtenances thereto belonging," &c. "Thereto," points to something previous.

Mr. GWIN. Belonging to the navy-yard at Memphis. I suggest to the Senator that he should let it be an additional section.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not desire the Congress of the United States to make an appropriation for the navy-yard, and then give it away. My proposition is to strike out the appropriation for the navy-yard. Strike that out, and then I shall offer this as an additional section.

Mr. GWIN. That is it. The first question is on striking out the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the reading of what he proposes to insert in the bill. It is a separate section: "that all the grounds and appurtenances thereto belonging, known as the Memphis navy-yard, Shelby county, Tennessee." Then it is not designed to be attached to any other part of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. My purpose is to strike out the appropriation for the navy-yard at Memphis; and then I shall move that as a separate and additional section.

Mr. GWIN. Then the Senator must add "the navy-yard at Memphis," because that is not in the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Of course that is in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then is on striking out the following clause:

Memphis, Tennessee.—For excavation and embankment, smiths' shop, store-house, and repairs of all kinds, $13,400.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. Now, the question is on the additional section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now arises on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, in the form of an additional section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. The bill is now in the Senate. I renew the proposition which was rejected when it was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole:

Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury, in settling the accounts of the late navy agent at Memphis, shall not deduct the sum of $2,964 59, received by him, and passed to his credit on the books of the Treasury Department, from his salary as acting purser, provided for by the act making appropriations for the naval service of the country for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853.

I propose not to say a word upon the subject, unless some gentleman chooses to discuss it further. If that should be done I shall think it due to read the law in regard to it.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes nineteen, noes not counted.

Mr. MASON. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill to provide for the introduction of gas into the navy-yard at Portsmouth, Virginia. I understand it has met the approbation of the committee, and is recommended by the head of the Bureau.

Mr. GWIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MASON. The amendment will be in the following clause:

Norfolk, Virginia.—For brick saw-sheds, completing store-house No. 14, sheds and machinery for saw-mill, setting up engine, boilers, and machinery, culvert, continuation of quay walls, dredging channel, reservoir, commencing foundry, and machinery for the same, extension of ship-house and slip, and repairs of all kinds, $152,281.

To insert after "slip" the words "gas fixtures and pipes for lighting ground and building," and to make the appropriation, $162,281.

The gas has been introduced into the town. The object of the amendment is to introduce it into the navy-yard and the large public building there.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were then ordered to be engrossed, and the bill ordered to a third reading. It was read a third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

An act to constitute Pilatka and Bayport, in the State of Florida, ports of delivery respectively, and Keokuk and Dubuque, in the State of Iowa;

An act making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes;

An act for the relief of William J. McElhiney, E. T. Matthews, and Lawrence Cribben;

A joint resolution for the relief of brevet Captain J. H. Lendrum; and

An act for the relief of Mrs. Helen McKay, widow of the late Colonel Aeneas McKay, deputy quartermaster general of the United States Army.

Which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

EXTENSION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. STUART. I placed on the table yesterday a resolution for the purpose of extending this session if it should become necessary. I have been appealed to by several Senators to call it up, and let be disposed of. I should like to do so at this time, prefacing it simply by saying that, individually, I have no solicitude about it. I have been informed by the Committee on Enrolled Bills, that it will perhaps be impossible, or very difficult, some say impossible, for them to read all the enrolled bills between this and the time fixed for adjournment. I only want to take up the resolution, and let the Senate dispose of it as they think proper. The time has arrived, when, if anything is to be done, it should be disposed of.

Mr. GWIN. I am informed that the House have acted upon this question, and have refused to extend the time. I hope the Army appropriation bill will be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Michigan is first in order. The resolution was introduced yesterday, and the question is on taking it up.

Mr. GWIN. I hope it will not be taken up.

Mr. PETTIT. We had better exercise a little calmness and caution in what we are doing. I am informed, and I do not doubt its truth, that if the bills which we must necessarily pass before we adjourn, were at this hour in the hands of the clerks in the Secretary's office, they could not be enrolled by twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. GWIN. Who is your informant?

Mr. PETTIT. That is what I feel under no obligation to answer, although desiring to be very polite in that.

Mr. GWIN. I am utterly opposed—

Mr. PETTIT. I believe I have the floor. If the Senator has it he can proceed to talk. We have legislative business which must be acted upon; we must have an Executive session for the ratification of one more treaty—I think that will take but a short time—and for the confirmation of a few more appointments; and it is certain that we cannot, without leaving everything in perfect confusion and chaos, adjourn at twelve o'clock to-morrow. We ought, therefore, to extend the session until Monday at twelve o'clock. That will give time enough, in my opinion. I am satisfied, notwithstanding the House has refused to extend the time, that if we send them a resolution with a discreet committee, if it be necessary, they will accede to it. The House is composed of reasonable, sensible men; and it seems to me that we should, to save ourselves and the country from disgrace and ruin, rescind the adjournment resolution so far as to extend the session to Monday, noon.

Mr. SEWARD. I have a speech to make on this subject in three words. I ask for the yeas and nays on the resolution.

Mr. PRATT. I rise to a point of order. The question is simply whether the Senate will take up the resolution?

Mr. CLAY. It has been taken up.

Mr. PRATT. I do not so understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GWIN. And on that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to state to the Senate that I am one of the members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and that I concur fully in what was said by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PERRIN.] I do not believe we can possibly get through by twelve o'clock to-morrow. We cannot read over the bills.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Foot, Houston, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Chase, Cooper, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Johnson, Pratt, Rockwell, Seward, Slidell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Wade—23.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; which was as follows:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the time fixed by the resolution of the 1st July, for the adjournment of the present session of Congress be, and the same is hereby, extended to—the instant, at twelve o'clock meridian.

Mr. STUART. I move to fill the blank by inserting "Monday next, the 7th instant."

The amendment was agreed to; and the question recurred on the resolution, as amended.

Mr. PRATT. The simple result of the adoption of the resolution will be that we shall sit all Sunday night instead of to-night. Under it we shall adjourn on Monday. We shall meet to-morrow and Saturday, and sit here all Saturday night and Sunday.

Several SENATORS. Oh no.

Mr. PRATT. There will be no other result from it. We have experienced it heretofore. I hope the resolution will not be adopted.

Mr. CLAY. I trust, if the resolution is not adopted, that those Senators will assist us who are engaged in reading the bills.

Mr. TOOMBS. We agreed, about a month ago, that this session of Congress should close to-morrow. We have plenty of time in which to dispose of the public business. The idea of the Senator from Indiana, that we cannot get through the appropriation bills, is a mere idea. A few years ago three or four of the most important appropriation bills were not taken up in the Senate, on account of their eagerness to pass the internal improvement bill, until nine o'clock of the day on which the adjournment was to take place at twelve o'clock, and they were accomplished. They were all engrossed; and Mr. President, a bill appropriating public money never yet failed to get through for want of labor to work it out. This Government has been in existence seventy years; and if it stands seven hundred years, those bills will never fail. They will all get through. There will be plenty of labor and of time. The lobby will come and volunteer, without pay, to carry them through. As to the Senate and House getting ready, they may sit here until Monday, or the Monday after, or the Monday after that; they may sit here until the angel stands with one foot upon thesea and the other upon the land, and proclaims the end of time, and then they will not be ready to adjourn any more than they will be to-morrow at twelve o'clock. I hope the Senate will adhere to its own order. As to the ten million dollar appropriation, we have had the question up for three months; the House of Representatives would not agree to it; there is no necessity for it, none in the world. We have no speck of war; there is no danger of anybody attacking us. The appropriation bills could be passed, and we could leave for home in six hours. There is no necessity for the resolution. We can adjourn to-morrow at twelve o'clock just as readily, and do the business as well, as two months hence; and the result will be the same as I have said. As for being ready, you never will be ready. You never were ready. Nobody was ever done with legislative business. It is an eternal, perpetual business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. PRATT and Mr. TOOMBS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered, and taken—yeas 24, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Dodge, of Iowa, Douglas, Foot, Houston, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Chase, Cooper, Dawson, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Johnson, Pratt, Rockwell, Seward, Slidell, Sumner, Toombs, and Wade—23.

So the resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It is necessary at this stage of the business that the Senate should go, for a brief period, into Executive session. The Army appropriation bill, of course, will be next taken up; and before that is done, we should consider Executive business, which will not occupy more than five minutes. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 22, noes 10.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time, the doors were reopened.

POST OFFICE BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department, during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that the Senate insist on their amendments to the bill, disagreed to by the House, and ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. On that committee I do not wish to be placed.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That the managers on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore: and Mr. NORRIS, Mr. RUSK, and Mr. MORTON were appointed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message from the House also announced that the Speaker had signed

An act for the relief of Daniel Steenrod; and

An act to establish certain post roads.

The President pro tempore signed these bills.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House, "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855;" which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

The first amendment was in the clause, "For subsistence in kind, $1,028,497;" to make the appropriation, $1,285,621 25.

Mr. HUNTER. That is according to the estimate of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of all laws heretofore passed which authorize the appointment of military officers to superintend the operations at the national armories be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and from and after the passage of this act, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a competent and well qualified civilian as superintendent at each of said armories.

Mr. WELLER. That, I believe, is a question upon which the Senate committee equally divided. I shall have to ask for the yeas and nays upon it. I understand that the House have agreed to a provision placing the superintendence of these armories under civil administration. The Committee on Finance propose to strike that out. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am in favor of striking out that proviso; and, as the best argument I can make, I send to the Secretary, and ask to have read, a letter from the War Department, in response to an interrogatory of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, July 26, 1854.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 25th instant, informing me that the Army appropriation bill has come to the Senate from the House of Representatives, with a proviso requiring the removal of the ordnance officers from the armories, while those works are still continued under the direction of the Colonel of Ordnance, and requesting my opinion of the effect of the proposed change in the law, and, in particular, whether the Department will experience any serious difficulty in executing the two laws in regard to the control and government of the armories.

In reply I have the honor to say, that there will be found that difficulty, in the operation of the two laws which your letter indicates. The one interposes a civil superintendency between the Colonel of Ordnance and the armories, in order to remove the military control; while the other law requires the military department to continue to exercise the control. Formerly, when civil superintendents were placed over the armories, the direct and efficient control of the armories was, by law, vested in the military department to which they belonged. The new law will create a difficulty which, to me, appears practically insurmountable.

It is the decided and repeatedly declared opinion of this Department, founded on the results of actual experience, that the enactment of the proviso which has passed the House, will seriously impair the efficiency and utility of the national armories. The law, as it now stands, proscribes no class, but authorizes the President to select persons for the control and management of the public armories, from civil or military life, and affords the greatest possible latitude for proper selection. But, if it shall be determined by law that the public manufactories of arms for the military service ought not to be under the direction of military officers, then I respectfully suggest, that those establishments ought not to be continued under the authority of a military department, but made independent of it as a branch of the civil service. The national armories, as now conducted, have been, and I think will be, highly useful establishments; but if they are to become the objects of class legislation and partisan conflict, I believe it would be better to discontinue them, and to procure arms for the military service from private armories, by contract.

I am, however, as assured in the opinion that the munitions of war ought to be provided at public armories, under the direction of military officers, as that forts, arsenals, navy-yards, and dock yards, belonging to Government, ought to be controlled and administered by the officers of that department of the public service with which they are naturally connected. It is not necessary under such organization—it is not true that the hired mechanics and workmen now employed at the armories are subject to military law, or restrained of any of their civil rights. Only the officers and enlisted men of the Army are subject to military law. The mechanics hired at all public works, engage only for such term as they please, and leave the service whenever it suits them. That the service is not a hard one is evidenced from the eagerness with which it is sought. In this respect, the nature of the control exercised by the military officers is the same at the armories as it is at the arsenals, in the navy yards, on the fortifications, the works of internal improvement, and wherever hired mechanics engage to execute any work for the military service.

I have serious doubts if the continuance of the armories in the manufacture of muskets is at this time desirable. We have now six hundred thousand stand of small arms in the United States arsenals, and a large number have been distributed to the States. The many changes and improvements in fire arms render it unadvisable to accumulate a very large number of one model, and the discovery of weapons of greater range than muskets, make it doubtful if the musket will continue to form the principal weapon for foot soldiers.

In conclusion, I would ask, why should the national armories have been specially selected as trusts for which a soldier is unworthy? It is not there alone that mechanics are employed in constructions and manufactures for the military service under officers both of the Army and of the Navy. It cannot be because the military profession implies ignorance of arms, or leads to carelessness in their manufacture.

I believe the proposed exclusion of officers of the Army from the right to be selected as superintendents of the national armories, to be a discrimination unmerited by their conduct in peace and in war, uncalculated for by considerations for the public good, and probably detrimental to the efficiency of our military weapons.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

Hon. JAMES SHIELDS, Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee, who has caused this communication from the War Department to be read, whether this matter has been up for consideration before the Committee on Military Affairs at all or not?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. In reply to the Senator from Arkansas, I will state to the Senate that the Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, [Mr. SHIELDS,] the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] and myself met, according to order, I think on Monday last. I am not sure as to the day. The three of us concurred in support of this proposition. Since that time the Senator from Illinois has been called away by the sickness of one of his colleagues in the other House; and I believe every day since we have had a called meeting of the committee, not one of whom was there except the Senator from California and myself. We refused to report any proposition which was before us, unless we were satisfied that a majority of the committee approved it. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. DAWSON] concurs with us in this proposition. Having had no majority of the committee present, after the Senator from Illinois left, we agreed to refer the communication of the Secretary of War to the Senate. We have had two or three meetings, but there was nobody there but the Senator from California and myself.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is by the action of the Finance Committee, I understand, that this amendment is brought forward.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Not at all; by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GWIN. The Committee on Finance move to strike out the proviso.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As I understand it, this proviso comes from the House of Representatives, and the Finance Committee propose to strike it out. As many of the Committee on Military Affairs as were present instructed me to deliver to the Senate the communication of the Secretary of War in response to the interrogatory propounded by our chairman, I have done so. That is all the connection we have had with it.

Mr. JOHNSON. What I wanted to know was, how the matter got before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HUNTER. It is an amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, undoubtedly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, sir, this matter comes up here now in the last hours of the session. I hope and trust that the provision which has been made by the House of Representatives will not be altered or changed. We have a letter from the War Department before us. It is on one side of the matter, and that is all that we have. I can state, what perhaps is familiar to the whole Senate, that this subject has been before the House of Representatives for certainly more than one session; that it has had long and deliberate consideration there; that it has undergone repeated debate; that there have been many facts collected upon it; that full reports have been made in regard to it; and after mature, long, and deliberate consideration, this is the action which has been had there. I believe the consideration that can be given to it by the Senate will amount to less than nothing. Certainly it will amount to nothing in regard to the investigation to be made by this body, of the amount of facts that can be brought before it properly now. It is a question as to whether military supervision should be extended over employments that are purely civil. I believe the military ought to be restricted to their own peculiar duties, and kept in their proper province, and clear of the politics of the country. I think that we ought to keep them out of civil employments, and leave it to civilians to perform the duties of civilians. I hope the Senate will reflect thus much at least in agreeing to the amendment; that it will be a work in direct opposition to, and in destruction of, what has been the result of the long and mature deliberation of the House; and that, if done at all, it will be done by us without consideration.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Although this is not a proper occasion for much debate, yet I have a few words to say in reply to the Senator from Arkansas. While this has not been debated in the Senate, it has been much considered in the House of Representatives. It got into that body. They have had much to do with it. They have had a long and tedious investigation about—what? Why, sir, to ascertain whether the superintendents of the two armories should be military men or civilians. That is the whole subject. How does the law now stand? And what is the provision which the proposition now under consideration proposes to repeal? Under the existing law, the President of the United States has the right to select the two superintendents of our armories either from the civil or military list; and why should he not have that right? Is it not consistent with the provision of the Constitution conferring upon him the appointing power? The honorable Senator from Arkansas says that this is purely a civil employment. How does that happen? Who is more competent to judge as to the quality of an arm to be used in the military service, than a military man? It is an employment which requires a certain amount not only of military but mechanical knowledge. Where can you find any mechanic in the country who has sufficient, or any reasonable degree of, military knowledge?

Mr. JOHNSON. If my friend will allow me, I will ask him what amount of military knowledge is necessary for a man to make a musket, or any other weapon that has to be made?

Mr. BRODHEAD. The man who is to use the weapon is most likely to know what kind of an arm should be made. Mechanics are employed in most of the branches of the military service. They are employed in fortifications. Does the honorable Senator from Arkansas say that our fortifications should be constructed by men from the civil list? Mechanics are employed in the Army generally. A gratuitous cry has been got up by some gentlemen in relation to this matter, and a collision attempted to be produced between the military men and the mechanics of the country. The great body of the mechanics have nothing to do with the question. They care but little about it. They are attending to their own business at home, and not coming here for the purpose of seeking Government employment. I might say much more, Mr. President, upon this subject, but I know the impatience of the Senate to proceed to business, and therefore desist.

Mr. BAYARD. I am entirely in favor of the amendment. As the bill comes to us from the House, it disfranchises the officers of the Army from holding the office of superintendent of our armories, the duties connected with which they ought necessarily, from their profession, to be well acquainted with. I do not mean to say that every officer of the Army would be fit to superintend the manufacture of arms; but I do mean to say that there are many who would be; and I can see no principle, unless it is the jobbing principle, which should induce you to restrict the Executive authority in the selection of a man for the superintendency of the national armories, on account of the occupation of the party. I know nothing in the character of our officers, which should disqualify them entirely en masse for such duties. I think with the guardianship of the Senate over the employment, by way of confirmation of the selection, the President ought to be left free to select any citizen of the United States for the performance of the duties, whether he be an officer of the Army or not. I can see no reason for the provision sent to us by the House unless it is to multiply civil offices with a view to increase the patronage of the General Government. I can see no other effect of it, and I am utterly opposed to it in principle—so strongly opposed to it, that I would hazard the bill, as far as my vote is concerned, if the House should insist on it. I do not believe they would do so. I have often seen measures adopted by an apparent majority, and when the Senate made an amendment, it has been disposed of much more easily than it was supposed it would be.

This question has been before the Senate as well as before the House. It may be perfectly true that the commission which was sent out, found that the incumbents had or had not conducted the affairs of these armories properly; but that is nothing as to the general rule of military or civil superintendence. The House knows no more about it than we do. The question was before the Senate, and discussed at a former session, and the majority were then in favor of the propriety, in general, of military superintendence. If it were proposed to leave the selection to the President, to take either a civilian or an officer of the Army, I should not object to it; but the effect of the bill, as it passed the House, is to exclude the selection by the President. Sir, it may be well questioned—I do not say as strictly a constitutional question; but certainly, in the intent and spirit of the Constitution, it may be well questioned—with what propriety you undertake to disfranchise an officer of the Army, and say that he shall not be appointed to a particular situation, when that situation is necessarily connected with the performance of his duties. The officers ought to be acquainted certainly with arms—with their utility. They ought to be able to judge of the manufacture of an arm, and to say whether it is a good and useful one or not. There is nothing in the character of the soldier, nothing in his education as we educate our officers, that would disqualify him from having mechanical genius, and being able to superintend mechanics. Looking at the provision of the bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, as I do, I consider it nothing more, I was going to say, than what is called a Bunccombe provision; and I mean to go against everything of that kind.

Mr. TOUCEY. I do not rise to debate this question. It was before the Senate on a former occasion, and it resulted in authorizing the appointment of a commission to investigate and report upon it. A very able commission—the names I need not repeat—was sent, and they have reported in favor of civil superintendence.

The construction of arms is a mechanical employment. It is understood most perfectly by mechanics. If you will go into the establishments for the manufacture of fire arms which are under the superintendence of mechanics, you will there see their superiority. Your own establishments, under military superintendence, are behind them. I am, therefore, sir, in favor of concurring in this provision of the House of Representatives. I say that this employment belongs to the mechanical profession. If the mechanics of the country are not competent to do this business, I have yet to learn it. The measure is right, and I will say it is irresistible. I hope, therefore, the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MASON. This question was before the Senate at the last session on a proposition to amend the Army appropriation bill, with a view to abolish the military superintendence of the armories, and place them under civil superintendence by the action of Congress. From the consideration which I could give to the question thus brought before us, I voted, according to my recollection, upon the direct proposition to change the mode of superintending the armories from military to civil. I doubted about the vote at the time I gave it. The consideration of the subject resulted, however, in the Senate making an amendment to the bill which I will now read. At the last session, in 1853, this proviso was put in the Army appropriation bill:

"That the act of Congress be so modified that the President may, if, in his opinion, the public interest demand it, place over any of the armories a superintendent who does not belong to the Army; and in order to enable him to decide to his satisfaction, he is hereby authorized to cause the necessary and proper inquiries to be instituted through the medium of a commission of civilians and military men, with the view of ascertaining which of the two systems is more economical, efficient, and safe for the management of the public armories—that formerly existing under the superintendence of civil officers, or that now existing under the superintendence of officers of the Ordnance Department."

The President raised that commission—the one spoken of by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. TOUCEY.] They made their report, as I have been informed. I have never read it. I have been informed that it is a very voluminous one. They made it to the President. The President has not thought proper to change the mode of the superintendence. The armories are left now in charge of the military, as they were before. The letter of the Secretary of War, which has just been read to us, I presume, may be taken as the exponent of the President's opinion on the matter thus submitted to his discretion. Now, having so legislated twelve months ago, and having left it to the President to determine, I am unwilling to disturb it. I can form no private judgment in the matter. As long as it is the policy of the Government to manufacture their own arms, the Executive must be responsible for the management of the armories. The honorable Secretary has said in terms that if you cannot leave the Executive responsible for the manufacture of the arms, but take from him his discretion, they never will be done right.

I have wished only to state to the Senate why it is I cannot go now to change the determination to which Congress came at the last session. To have the arms properly made, they must be under the superintendence of the Executive, and we cannot change the responsibility in the mode proposed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had concurred in the resolution of the Senate for suspending the 16th and 17th joint rules of the two Houses for all bills which have been passed, or which may be passed during the present session.

Also, that they had passed the following bills; in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate:

An act to repeal the first proviso in the fourth section of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850; and

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of John Putnam.

THOMAS BRONAUGH.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act to constitute Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery;

An act to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the lands to which that State is entitled under the act of 8th August, 1846, to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers;

An act to authorize the State of Illinois to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled under the act of 2d of March, 1847, granting lands to aid that State in opening a canal to connect the waters of the Illinois river with those of Lake Michigan;

An act constituting San Pedro, in the State of California, a port of entry and delivery; and

An act to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington City.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the above named bills.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. The honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD] seemed to read the amendment now before the Senate as a denial of the right of the President to select either civilians or officers of the Army to perform the services required. I do not so understand it. As the provision came from the House, it was an absolute denial, so far as it regarded the right of the President to employ any other than civilians. The Committee on Finance propose to give the President discretionary power, so that he may take either civilians or military men. How that can be tortured into an absolute obligation on the part of the Executive—

Mr. BAYARD. If the honorable Senator refers to me, that is exactly the ground I take. I think it ought to be left to the Executive discretion. As the law now stands, it gives the President that discretion. It ostracizes nobody. He may appoint a mechanic or an officer of the Army; but the House have agreed to a provision which we seek to strike out, and which disqualifies an officer of the Army,

Mr. BRIGHT. I so understand it. The Committee on Finance, as I understand the amendment, propose to give the discretionary power to the President, so that he may take either a civilian or an officer of the Army, and by concurring in that amendment we shall give that discretion. I understand, then, that the Senator from Delaware is in favor of that.

Mr. BAYARD. I am in favor of the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then no one is opposed to it. Let us vote. Time is much more important than the amendment.

Mr. TOOMBS. The honorable Senator from Indiana declares that nobody is opposed to the amendment. Well, sir, as far as I can speak for myself, he is mistaken. I am opposed to it. I am in favor of the provision as it came from the House. I do not think that military men are fit for this employment. I think they are very expensive—much more so than anybody else in our employment. They do everything upon a most expensive scale. They spend plenty of money for their own comfort and officers' quarters, and very little for the public interest. If the Senator supposes nobody is in favor of this provision in the bill, he is mistaken. I am one who favor that provision as it came from the House, and am against the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. TOUCEY, (and others.) So am I.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. This is not the first time I have given my attention to this subject. This thing of opposing military superintendence of the armories has a local origin. Yes, sir, it originated about Harper's Ferry and Springfield; and I recollect in 1853, committees from those localities came here besieging Congress and making representations that were not true. I undertake to assume the responsibility of saying that they made representations which were not true. At that time my friend, Colonel Huger, was superintendent of the armory at Harper's Ferry; and I recollect a respectable gentleman was superintendent of the armory at Springfield; and now I undertake to say that this proposition to exclude military gentlemen from the superintendency of those armories is an implied censure upon them. The military superintendency is the system which has been in operation for some time; and has it not worked well? Why should it not work well? What temptation has a military man to see that the work is not well done? Surely, we can trust it to the soldier, who is under military responsibility, that the arms shall be made uniformly the best. He has no temptation to give way to the money-making spirit of the contract system. I say it is unjust to exclude a military man from the employment, if he should otherwise be fit for it; and yet I hear the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Toombs] say that the very thing which he is in favor of, is to pass a law ostracizing and proscribing a class of persons who are more fit for the position, as experience has shown. I understand very well the temper in which this originated, for I had a conference with those committees; and I understood the marked and positive manner with which they spoke of military gentlemen. I can see no reason for changing the system. So far from giving the superintendency to mere civilians, I would confine it exclusively to military men; but I am willing to leave it to the President, to select whom he pleases.

Mr. SEWARD. I am in favor of that view of the subject which has been taken by the House of Representatives. I think it is all moonshine to suppose that it is necessary to have a military officer to superintend the making of muskets for the Army. I think I can demonstrate that view of the proposition. In the first place, all the ordnance of the United States is made by civilians, and we have no national armory for it, under the care of military officers. In the next place, all the side arms are made by civilians, by mechanics, and are not manufactured at public armories. In the next place, Mr. Colt, who invented the revolver, and has brought it into use in this country and in Europe, is the great armorer, so far as that arm is concerned, for the armies of this country and the armies of the eastern world, and he is a civilian. Now, all that is necessary is to have officers to test the arms in the armories, and let their manufacture be open to competition. If that shall be done, there will be no necessity for putting officers of the Army into mechanics' and artisans' vocations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Putnam, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. TOUCEY. I shall only state one fact which may not be in the recollection of the Senate. The legislation that took place here in 1853 was by general consent, intended to leave the matter in the mean time to the President, but intending, also, that there should be a commission, which was carried out. A commission was sent, and made an examination. It consisted of Chancellor Walworth, of New York; Andrew J. Stevenson, of Virginia; ex-Governor Steele, of New Hampshire; and Colonel Henry D. Smith, of Illinois, who was a practical mechanic, and had been concerned, through the most of his life, in the construction of fire-arms. As I understand, they were unanimous in favor of the change, and reported in favor of it. There were one or two military men—I do not now remember the number—connected with the same commission, and they dissented from the report. The War Department goes with the Army. That is the state of the case.

Now, sir, I undertake to say that the provision which comes to us from the House of Representatives carries out the voice of the public with regard to these institutions. I am not willing, for one, in a purely mechanical establishment, where the whole knowledge of the subject belongs to mechanical skill and experience, to put over the body of men there who are mechanics, and who are acting professionally, a military man who may be a perfect adept in war, and in the use of fire-arms, but yet could not manufacture a fire-arm, or direct its manufacture without the aid of mechanical skill. I am not willing to subject citizens to military rule while acting in their own proper business.

Mr. PEARCE. I should like to know what the Senator from Connecticut means by "military rule" being enforced over the mechanics in the armories?

Mr. TOUCEY. I will answer. I mean the military rule to which those men are subjected in those establishments.

Mr. PEARCE. I say there is no "military rule" there. The superintendency is exercised on the same principle, and under the same rules and regulations, whether you have a civil or military superintendent. There is no such thing as "military rule" exercised over those men. The most of the armorers are mechanics; and the superintendent is put there with a general superintending power; but he exercises no military law. The difference between the two superintendencies is that the rules which exist by law and by the authority of the Department are enforced under one system, and not under the other. I doubt very much whether it is necessary to keep up the armories at all. We have now over six hundred thousand stand of arms.

Mr. CASS. That is more than we want.

Mr. PEARCE. And more than we shall want for a long series of years, probably.

Mr. CASS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to state that, I think, it will be found, on an examination of the arsenals, that we have now as large a stock of muskets as Napoleon had when he went to Russia.

Mr. PEARCE. That, I think, ought to be enough; but still allegations have been made here, in reply to which I desire to say a few words. Nobody has pretended to show to the Senate that there will be any increased economy by adopting the civil superintendency. It would be very easy to make that charge, if it were made. But something has been said about the petitions which have been sent here, and the unanimous report of the civilians who were part of that commission. Sir, I do not hesitate to say, that I would not give a rush for their opinions. There was not one of them, so far as I know, of equal authority with that which we have on the other side. The law, as it now stands, authorizes the President to select either military men or civilians; and I have confidence enough in that Executive, if his own party has not, to believe he will exercise his power faithfully; and further, I have that confidence in the Secretary of War, in his intelligence, his honesty, and his capacity to judge of this subject, which makes him, in my opinion, outweigh the testimony of a thousand such civilians as were on that commission. I know very well how this thing is got up. I know how it was when the civil superintendency was put down in 1842. I ought, perhaps, to blush to say, but I know the fact, that politicians at that day arrested the setting up of military superintendence because they wanted to make political machines of these national armories. They complained that the Democratic party would not, as they heretofore had done, use them as political agencies. They desired to do so still. I am happy to say that the Whig Congress of that day had the honesty and courage to do their duty, and refuse to use these armories to stimulate, and gratify, and pander to an inordinate thirst for political place.

I am told that on the list of petitioners who come from Springfield there are not only the names of discharged armorers and disappointed applicants for the position, but runaway negroes have their names on it. I have been credibly informed, and believe it to be so. I will state a fact. I have before me a letter addressed to this committee by citizens of Springfield. It is signed by forty-five persons. Out of the forty-five there are twenty-five who are either ex-armorers, who have lost their morsel of mammon, and are greedy to get it again, or candidates for the offices of superintendent and military storekeeper, or employees, clerks, of one of the persons who is himself a candidate for one of those offices. Those are the sort of papers on which this public opinion is got up! I hope, therefore, no one will renew these clamors here. Hear what the Secretary of War says:

"Viewing the national armories as a part of the military establishment of the country, I think it desirable to exclude from them the influence of party politics. Their superintendence by officers of the Army, it is hoped, will always secure such exclusion. Permanence of a good and competent superintendent and the prompt removal of an incompetent one are equally desirable. The employment of Army officers who do not owe their position to the success of political friends, and who can at any moment be transferred to other duty, it is believed offers the most certain means of securing both these objects. A civil superintendent, who owed his appointment to political considerations, would naturally feel his position to be temporary, and would rarely resist the importunity to bestow the subordinate places upon his political friends. The end to be anticipated from this would be a deterioration in the character of the military weapons, upon the efficiency of which so mainly depends the military power of a country, and its triumphs or defeat, its glory or shame, in a period of war."

I need read no more than that. But gentlemen talk about the superior skill displayed in the private manufactories of arms. It is very true that fancy arms are made in perfection at private armories; but it is equally true that a military man, with proper intelligence, is more qualified than any other man, to judge of the efficiency and proper construction of the weapon which he is to use in the field. That is a very different thing from the fancy weapon. In 1842 we changed the superintendency. Prior to that time, it was supposed by many persons that civilians invented much better arms than under military superintendence. Hall's rifle, which was loaded at the breech, was invented, but it is now not used at all. A remarkably ingenious and skillful man got up Hall's rifle, and filled the armories with it; but when taken into action, it was found that it would not answer at all, and it was absolutely abandoned. It is very true that our armors, under the civil superintendency, were superior to the arms of Europe, as a general thing; but it is as true that our arms now are superior to what they were in 1842, when the superintendence was changed. The superiority keeps pace with the progress of time. We are still ahead of the arms of Europe; and I believe the arms of Europe are not to be compared with our own. We have improved them; and we have diminished the cost since the establishment of the military superintendency. I do not know that it is asserted to the contrary.

Mr. TOOMBS. How about the houses for officers to live in?

Mr. PEARCE. I take it that if officers desire to live in good houses, the civilians will desire the same; and I rather think the former keep the establishments in a great deal better order. I am satisfied of it from all I have read and heard on the subject. I do not believe there is a solitary reason for changing this system except it is to throw it into the general scramble which seems now to be the object in this country. I should like to have one green spot on the face of the earth, if no more. Let us keep party politics, if we can, out of the national armories. God knows what Administration may come in hereafter. Many things happen, and great disappointments are incurred, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] well knows. I have no doubt he thinks it would be prudent to have it in his power to choose and select able men, whether military or civil, for the superintendency; and if I could fancy the time when he would have that power, I should very cheerfully leave it to him, as well as to the present President, to make that selection. Certainly, sir, there is no good reason for making the change. Besides, what propriety is there in compelling the President to appoint civilians? It ostracizes military men. They have done nothing in peace or war which justifies our passing such a censure as this, declaring that they are not fit to be at the head of establishments which are a part of the military system of the country. I know nothing to justify our casting such a censure upon them; and I trust the Senate will not agree to it.

Mr. CLAY. Before the Senator from Maryland takes his seat, I desire him to answer me two questions for information. I wish to ask, whether the military superintendents receive any additional pay for that service?

Mr. PEARCE. I believe not.

Mr. CLAY. Then I desire to know whether the civilians who are candidates for the office propose to serve for the honor or pay?

Mr. PEARCE. I suppose they would hold honor in the same estimation as Jack Falstaff did. [Laughter.]

The yeas and nays were ordered on the amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. When this question came before the Senate, on a former occasion, I voted against it, and since that time I have given some little attention to the subject. If any Senator has doubts about the facts involved upon the other side of the question, from reading the report of the House committee, I recommend him to give a glance at the able statement which the Hon. Mr. KERR, of South Carolina, made as a minority report. He has accumulated a vast quantity of facts, and disclosed, which has not yet been mentioned here, that a large number of the employees at Springfield have come forward voluntarily and appealed to Congress to make no change in what they denominated the admirable system prevailing there at this time. They subscribe their names, and the armorer gives us his affidavit that the signatures were obtained by himself with others. As the honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Toucey] has referred to the report of the commission lately appointed, I will say that when this subject was broached in 1841, Mr. Charles Davis, so well known as a man of science, and two other highly respectable gentlemen were appointed a board of examination, and they reported unanimously in favor of the military superintendence. I will also say that the matter underwent a thorough investigation in the House in 1842, and that Mr. Goggin, of Virginia, made a report in favor of it. It is the most effective system, because it produces a better arm at a lower price than was done under the civil superintendency. We have not before us one fact which prudent men, in private life, would be governed by, in changing the superintendency. The committee disclose the fact that much of the testimony upon which the House have acted in the matter has been obtained from persons directly interested in it.

Mr. ADAMS. I only wish to say that I understand the House have refused, by a large majority, to concur in our resolution in regard to the time of adjournment.

Mr. BAYARD. Notwithstanding that, I beg leave to make a few remarks on this question. When it was under consideration before, as the law then stood, it required the appointment of military superintendents. I thought the restriction then wrong, and voted in favor of the alteration of the law, so as to leave the discretion to the President to select the superintendents from either civil or military life. I hold this principle of restriction to be entirely unjust and injurious. It is attempted to be represented here as if this were the action of the mechanical interest of the country opposed to the military organization. There is nothing of the kind in the case. It is purely a local matter. It is one in which the vast mass of the mechanics of the country have no interest. If the principle of restriction is justifiable or right, carry it further. If gentlemen adhere to it, let them carry it to its full extent. Is a carpenter fit to be the superintendent? No; but he is a mechanic. Is a tailor fit to be the superintendent? No; yet he is a mechanic. Is a lawyer? Is a merchant? Is a doctor? No. None of them is fit to be a superintendent in one of the armories. If gentlemen go for this restrictive principle, in the selection of officers, and say they must be selected from a particular class of men, let them carry it to its proper extent, and say that none but an armorer or gun-smith, shall be appointed by the President of the United States. That is the extent to which their doctrine should go, or it is untenable altogether.

Mr. HOUSTON. From the noise prevailing in the Chamber, I have not found it possible to hear what has been said in the discussion, and, therefore, I may repeat what has been already said. I investigated this subject some sessions since, and came to the conclusion that it was proper to place the armories under the management of civilians. I have this session had an opportunity of reviewing the report made in the House of Representatives upon it; and from all the lights contained in that, assuming that the alleged facts which support it are true, it has only confirmed me more certainly in my former opinion that it ought to be given to civilians, and that they ought to exercise the control of it under the direction of the Secretary of War. I think it is no complement to an officer in the line of the army or in the staff to detail him to mechanical or civil duties. His service is either necessary in the line or staff of the Army, or he is not in his proper sphere and his service is unnecessary. Civilians are the best practical men in matters of business of this kind as mechanics. Officers of the Army may be very scientific and skilled in it theoretically, but they have not that practical knowledge.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to put the Senator one question. I understand he can answer as a military man, and, therefore, he can give me information on this point. What is the duty of an ordnance officer? Is it not connected with the preparation of arms?

Mr. HOUSTON. It is to take care of the arms when prepared, and see that they are kept in proper order; that they are constructed of good material, and are fit for efficient service when they are to be used. That is the business of an ordnance officer.

Mr. BRODHEAD. While on this subject, I desire to put a question to my friend from Texas. If we adopt the provision which comes to us from the House, will not the armories be under the superintendence and control, under the existing laws, of the Colonel of Ordnance?

Mr. HOUSTON. It would be very proper that he should become the inspector of these various armories.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Is it not then under military rule?

Mr. HOUSTON. It is under military inspection. The mechanics and contractors have to conform to the inspection, or their work is thrown upon them, and they will meet the reprehension that is due to their incapacity or neglect of duty; but that does not assume, as I understand it, that the officers are the most competent persons. Their attention has been drawn to science; but the mechanics are the men who have been attentive to the practical operation of mechanics, and not to theory alone. For this reason, without any change of opinion, without having had any conversation on the subject this session with any member of the Senate or House of Representatives, or with any lobby member or person connected with the armory, I am established in my opinion that it is proper to give the superintendence to civilians, as it has prospered under their administration with the guidance and general direction of the War Department, and the inspection of ordnance officers in former times. I shall continue of the opinion that I now entertain, until better lights are given to me; and I shall vote, in accordance with those I now have, for the civilians.

Mr. CASS. I shall not detain the Senate. I merely want to observe that we have certain staffs and departments here to supervise our Army. We have the ordnance department, and the fortification department, the engineer, the quartermaster, and the commissary departments. Officers from the military academy are taken and put into the several departments. They belong there. They understand their duties. They are detailed for that service; and the interest of the Government is, that they should watch over that service. There is not a word to be said against the superintendence of the armories by officers of the ordnance department, that cannot be said against the superintendence of forts by engineer officers. You may say let them give you their plans, and then let them go on under the command of civilians; you may say of the quartermaster's department, that all the persons employed under it should be under the command of civilians; so of the commissary department; so of every branch of the Army; and what then becomes of your staff? What are they to do? If the ordnance department has nothing to do with ordnance, you had better disband it. If the engineer department has nothing to do with fortifications, disband them; and so on with every branch of the service.

I have heard imputations upon the officers of the Army. I regret it. I believe that a more intelligent, able, honest, faithful body of officers were never in the service; and, thank Providence, recent events have shown that they know how to do their duty with credit to themselves and honor to the country. The defalcation of a military officer, on the books of your Treasury, is a statistical fact almost unknown in the history of your country. I have had some opportunity to examine, and I do not know that there is one. I do not say that there is not; but I say they are very rare.

What are the allegations made against the military superintendent? That he is a tyrant. He is not compelled to stay there. You will not deny, nobody will deny, that the superintendent should see the work carried on faithfully. It is his duty. He is there for that; and the officers of the ordnance department can judge of the nature of arms better than anybody else. It is for their interest, character, and reputation to have them properly made. Everything they have is connected with it. I repeat, I do not see the evil if the superintendent requires the persons under him to do their duty faithfully. He only does his duty when he does that. I do not understand how he can tyrannize in this country any more than a civilian. I do not know why he should have any more reason to do so. I have not heard a word of complaint about military superintendence except from the two armories at Springfield and Harper's Ferry. I have heard none from the forts—not a syllable in my own portion of the country, where we have arsenals and forts; and I cannot but think, Mr. President, that there is a great deal in what has been said, that there is a popular clamor about those particular places for particular purposes. So believing, and believing that the public interest will be best secured by adhering to the present system, I shall vote in favor of the amendment to strike out the provision of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know that the distinguished Senator from Michigan intended to imply that I had cast any reflection upon the officers of the Army.

Mr. CASS. Not at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. Because I certainly intended nothing but compliment to those officers. There is no Senator who entertains a higher estimate of them than I do, as gentlemen of propriety, of sobriety, of gallantry, of bravery; but I think it is not consistent with their duties to detail them, and appropriate all their talents to the construction of arms, when mechanics are found competent to do it. When no improvement, through the channel of invention, that I have heard of, has reached us in consequence of military gentlemen being at the head of the armories—when no reflection is intended to be cast upon the officers by withholding the superintendence from them—and when, in the outset, we succeeded well in the construction of arms under the guidance of civilians, I can see no necessity for establishing the rule that the military alone shall have charge of it, and exert what was formerly accorded to civilians. Why, sir, it has now come to this, that all the money that is appropriated by Congress for the construction of public works, I believe, is to be placed under a military officer, and he is detailed for the express purpose of disbursing the public money and supervising the public works. In appropriations to the Army for the defense of the country, with all the accomplishments that pertain to military gentlemen, I am for according to them the object for which they are appointed, and to which they have been detailed; but I am for having another sphere unoccupied by them, and permitting civilians, whenever they can be successful in executing the desires of the Government, or meeting its expectations, to fill the sphere proper to themselves. I am not for permitting civilians to usurp the rights of officers of the Army, or interfere with them in the discharge of duties pertaining to their sphere; nor do I think it is necessary to thrust military gentlemen upon civilians to displace them from their rightful and appropriate sphere, and incommode those who are qualified for the discharge of duties which should not be assigned to military men. For this reason, and this alone, I shall vote against the amendment. I do not know the gentlemen who is in charge of either armory; nor do I know those whom the President would place there; and being ignorant of this, I view the subject as it is presented to me, and vote according to my apprehension of the propriety of assigning to civilians that branch of our military defense which properly pertains to mechanics, and not to the range of science assigned to the purely military arm of the service.

Mr. TOUCEY. I shall not be drawn into any debate in regard to the supposed abuses at either of the armories. If Senators are not informed on that subject, they will remain uninformed by anything which may be got from me. I shall not make any reflection upon the officers of the Army; but I shall reply to the honorable Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] that I do not regard the Army as the only bright spot in the United States. I say that this is purely a civil employment. I say that now the President has authority, under the law, to send to superintend the civilians engaged in the construction of fire-arms, any officer, at his own will and pleasure, without the consent of Congress. It is contrary to the former law; and I say again, that the private establishments which are under civil superintendence are now, in regard to improvements and in regard to the standard which they require for the acceptance of arms manufactured, far ahead of the public armories.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 23 nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Clay, Dawson, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Pearce, Pratt, and Walker—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Brown, Chase, Cooper, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Foot, Gillette, Houston, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Norris, Pettit, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, Wade, Weller, and Williams—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in the third section of the bill, to insert the words "and properly," after "actually," as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into and ascertain the amount of expenses incurred, and now actually and properly paid by the State of California in the suppression of Indian hostilities, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to move to amend the bill by inserting, after the appropriation for the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes, the following:

For an iron steamer to be used in the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes, including Lake Superior, under the War Department, $50,000.

I will only say that that is recommended by the Secretary of War, and is necessary to carry out the surveys.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to make one inquiry. Were these amendments which are now being proposed, on the recommendation of the Departments, submitted to the House of Representatives? Was this amendment submitted to the House?

Mr. STUART. It was not.

Mr. CASS. Before the question is voted on, I desire to say that a survey of the lakes has been going on for some time. It is a very important work. The boat which they have had heretofore is not in a fit condition to carry it on. There is an appropriation in the bill for continuing the survey. The War Department declares that, for the purpose of continuing it, this steamer is essentially necessary. If you do not mean to stop the survey, the steamer must be had. It is a mere question as to whether you will abandon the work or not.

Mr. PRATT. I will simply remark, that I suppose the fact of the want of this steamer must have been known when the bill was before the House. If it was a proper amendment to be placed in it, it should have been sent to the body in which the bill originated, where they would have had time—which we have not now—to consider its propriety. I have voted for no amendments, and shall vote for none, where the matter was known to the Department, and was not submitted to the other House in which the bill originated.

Mr. STUART. I certainly shall not undertake, at this time, to go into any lengthy debate on this subject. I do not intend to detain the Senate a minute. The argument of the Senator from Maryland, if adopted by the Senate, will make it necessary to abolish every committee you have. This subject has been fully and carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce. They have inquired of the Secretary of War in regard to it, and I hold in my hand his letter, in which he says that to carry out this service properly, if an appropriation is made to continue the survey, the steamer is necessary. The House have made an appropriation to continue the work; and the Secretary of War says the steamer is necessary to carry it on. I do not know with what propriety it can be said that, if an appropriation is not put in the bill by the House, it should not be put in at all. You had better do away with the Senate.

Mr. PRATT. I do not want to be misunderstood. I said no such thing. What I said was that whenever the Department desired an appropriation of public money, the estimate should be sent to the House in which the bill originated, so that they could consider of its propriety. I did not say that when the House, upon such estimates being properly submitted, have refused to make the appropriation, that the Senate should concur with the House.

On a division, less than a majority of a quorum voted for the amendment.

Mr. STUART called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. CASS. If the question related to the coast survey, there would be no difficulty.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Seward, Sillidell, Stuart, Sumner, Toucey, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Brown, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Jones of Tennessee, and Pratt—7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act to establish Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery;

An act to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the lands to which that State is entitled under the act of the 8th of August, 1846, and to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers;

An act to amend the provisions of the fifty-sixth section of the act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, approved the 2d March, 1799;

An act for the relief of Sylvanus Culver;

An act to incorporate the National Hotel Company, of Washington city;

An act establishing San Pedro, in the State of California, a port of entry and delivery;

An act to vest in the several States and Terriories the title in fee of the lands which have been, or may be, certified to them;

An act to authorize the State of Illinois to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled under the act of the 2d of March, 1827, granting land to that State in opening a canal to connect the waters of the Illinois river with those of Lake Michigan; and

An act authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, and conferring certain privileges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

CAPTAIN INGRAHAM.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House of thanks of Congress, and the presentation of a medal to Captain Duncan M. Ingraham.

POST OFFICE BILL.

The message also announced that the House insisted on their disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill, and had appointed Mr. HUBBARD of New Hampshire, Mr. APPLETON of Massachusetts, and Mr. VANSANT of Maryland, managers at the same on their part.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WELLER. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. SHIELDS,] who has been called away by the sickness of his colleague in the other House, I am instructed to offer several amendments to the bill. The first is to insert:

For the sword ordered to be presented to Brevet Major General John E. Wool by a joint resolution approved January 24, 1854, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. The next is to insert:

For completing the Mendota and Big Sioux river road, in accordance with the estimate of the Secretary of War, $52,475 58, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. The next is to insert:

For the purchase of a site and the construction of an arsenal at Benicia, California, $93,485.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EVANS. I should like to know why we are giving away nearly a hundred thousand dollars for an arsenal without knowing something about it. Why have we not the report of a committee?

Mr. WELLER. The next amendment which I have is to insert:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed in the settlement of the account of Captain Joseph Foster, assistant quartermaster of the United States Army, to receive parole testimony of disbursements made by him as such assistant quartermaster, in lieu of vouchers for such disbursements which were destroyed by fire in the city of San Francisco, on the 4th of May, A. D. 1851; and that upon the testimony so taken, if satisfactory to the Department, the accounts of said assistant quartermaster shall be audited and settled according to principles of equity and justice: Provided, The sum allowed shall not exceed the balance now due from said Foster to the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, [Mr. BRIGHT.] The Chair will suggest that that appears to be a private claim.

Mr. WELLER. It merely authorizes the Department to receive parole evidence in lieu of vouchers which were destroyed by fire. It is necessary to have the accounts settled.

Mr. GWIN. They cannot progress with the settlement of his accounts without it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. The next amendment is to add the following:

And be it further enacted, That the provision of the first section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th June, 1851," approved September 28, 1850, granting extra pay to officers and enlisted men of the Army serving in Oregon and California, be extended to the officers and men composing the garrison of Fort Laramie, on the Oregon route, for the same period of time as was allowed by the sixth section of the act of March 3, 1853, to the officers and men of two companies of a regiment of mounted riflemen that garrisoned Fort Laramie; and that the provisions of the same section of the same act be also extended to the officers and men composing the escort of the Mexican boundary commission, while they were serving as such escort.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I now offer an amendment which is somewhat detailed. It is a bill which was passed by the Senate some time ago, but never acted upon by the House, commonly known in this body by the name of the retired list bill—a bill providing for retiring disabled officers of the Army:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That if any commissioned officer of the Army shall have become incapable of performing the duties of his office, as provided in the second section of this act, he shall, as provided in the second section of this act, be placed upon a retired list, and withdrawn from active service and command, with the pay proper of the highest rank held by him at the time, whether by staff, regimental, or brevet commission, and the service rations to which he may then be entitled, but without any other allowances. And the officer next in rank shall be promoted to the place of the retired officer, according to the heretofore established rule of the service; and the same rule of promotion shall be applied successively to the vacancies consequent upon the retirement of an officer, as herein provided: Provided, That if the disability result from wounds received in action, the pay proper of the retired officer shall be that of his highest rank by brevet or otherwise.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That, to carry out the provisions of this act, whenever any officer of the Army, who may be incapacitated as heretofore recited, shall voluntarily apply to be retired from active service, or, on being ordered to perform the duties appropriate to his commission, shall report himself unable to comply with such order, or whenever, in the judgment of the President of the United States, an officer of the Army shall have become in any way incapacitated from performing the duties of his office, the President, at his discretion, shall direct the Secretary of War to refer the case of such officer to an Army board, to be composed of not more than nine, nor less than five commissioned officers, to be detailed from those of superior rank to him whose case is under consideration, as far as his grade and the interest of the service will permit; and the said board shall determine upon the case referred to them, and their opinion thereon, with a record of the proceedings, shall be transmitted to the Secretary of War, to be laid before the President for his approval or disapproval. If, in the judgment of the board, the officer be considered incapacitated for active service, the board will report whether, in their opinion, the disability was occasioned by age—the result of many years' faithful service, by wounds received in the line of duty, or by exposure in service; or whether the disability is to be traced to vicious habits, or to exposure unconnected with official duty. If, in their judgment, the disability was incurred in the line of duty, and the President approve such judgment, the disabled officer shall thereupon be placed upon the list of retired officers according to the provisions of this act; but if the board are of opinion that the disability was the result of vicious habits, or of exposure unconnected with official duty, and the President concur in that opinion, then the disabled officer may, at the discretion of the President, be dropped from the rolls of the Army.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That whenever the President shall deem it advisable to cause an officer who has been withdrawn from active service and retired from the line of promotion, as herein provided, to be placed on any duty not incompatible with his condition, such officer shall, for the time he may be so employed, be entitled to all the pay and allowances of the grade with which he was retired from service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I have another amendment, which is also a bill that passed the Senate, and was sent to the House sometime ago, providing for the increase of the compensation of the officers and soldiers of the Army. The House of Representatives have passed a bill of their own increasing the pay of the privates, but leaving the compensation of the officers untouched. We have thought proper to present the original bill which passed this body, and which is one of vast importance. There have been some modifications made in it:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the monthly pay proper of the several grades of the Army, hereinafter enumerated, shall be at the following rates: A major general, $265; a brigadier general, $165; a colonel $135; a lieutenant colonel, $115; a major, $95; a captain of cavalry, $85; a captain of artillery and infantry, $75; a first lieutenant of cavalry, $65; a first lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $57; a second lieutenant of cavalry, $55; a second lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $47; a cadet, $33; a sergeant of engineers, $32; a sergeant major, quartermaster-sergeant, principal musician, chief bugler, principal farrier, and ordnance sergeant, $23; to each first sergeant of a company of dragoons, mounted riflemen, artillery, and infantry, $21; to all other sergeants of those arms, $18; to a corporal of engineers, $18; to a corporal of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $19; to a corporal of artillery and infantry, $13; to a farrier, blacksmith, saddler, and artificer of dragoons, mounted riflemen, and artillery, $15; to a bugler of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $12; to a musician of artillery and infantry, $11; to a private of engineers, $12; to a private of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $11; and to a private of artillery and infantry, $10: Provided, That the existing allowances shall be confined to officers when on duty, or on leave of absence who shall have left their post by reason of wounds received, or disease contracted, in the line of their duty, or for the time regularly allowed by the general regulations of the Army, and that officers absent from duty under any other circumstances, or for a time exceeding the regular leave of absence, shall only be entitled to the pay proper of their respective grades.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the surgeon general and paymaster general of the army shall be allowed the pay and emoluments of a colonel.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That every soldier, who, having been honorably discharged from the service of the United States, shall, within one month thereafter, reenlist, shall be entitled to two dollars per month in addition to the ordinary pay of his grade, for the first period of five years after the expiration of his previous enlistment, and a further sum of one dollar per month for each successive period of five years, so long as he shall remain continuously in the Army; and that soldiers now in the Army, who have served one or more enlistments, and been honorably discharged, shall be entitled to the benefits herein provided for a second enlistment.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That soldiers who served in the war with Mexico, and received a certificate of merit for distinguished services, as well those now in the Army as those that may hereafter enlist, shall receive the two dollars per month to which that certificate would have entitled them had they remained continuously in the service.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That non-commissioned officers who, under the authority of the seventeenth section of the act approved March 3, 1847, were recommended for promotion by brevet to the lowest grade of commissioned officer, but did not receive the benefit of that provision, shall be entitled, under the condition recited in the foregoing section, to the additional pay authorized to be given to such privates as received certificates of merit.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to confer the brevet of second Lieutenant upon such meritorious non-commissioned officers, as may, under regulations to be established, be brought before an Army board, composed of four officers of rank, specially convened for the purpose, and be found qualified for the duties of commissioned officers; and to attach them to regiments, as supernumerary officers, according to the provisions of the fourth section of the act approved April 20, 1813, entitled "An act making further provision for the corps of engineers."

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the allowance to soldiers employed at work on fortifications, in surveys, in cutting roads, and other constant labor, of not less than ten days, authorized by the act approved March 2, 1819, entitled "An act to regulate the pay of the Army when employed on fatigue duty," be increased to twenty-five cents per day for men employed as laborers and teamsters, and forty cents per day when employed as mechanics, at all stations east of the Rocky Mountains, and to thirty-five cents and fifty cents per day, respectively, when the men are employed at stations west of those mountains.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the first section of the act granting pensions to the widows and orphans of persons dying in the naval service, approved August 11, 1818, be extended to the widows and orphans of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and soldiers of the Army of the United States, including volunteers and militia, mustered into the service of the United States.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That, in addition to the number of cadets authorized by the existing laws, there shall be appointed two from each State.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that amendment. It is a very important one, voting away millions of dollars.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I voted for this as a separate and independent bill. I shall not vote for it as an amendment here. The practice of attempting to turn every appropriation bill into a bill for legislation is growing to an alarming extent. I shall vote against this without reference to the propriety of the bill for which I voted; for I cannot consent to legislate in this manner.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I agree with the Senator from Delaware. I have uniformly voted against putting amendments increasing salaries on the general appropriation bills. It has a bad tendency to legislate in that manner; and anxious as I am to increase the compensation of the officers and soldiers, I shall be compelled to go against this, though at the proper time I should support it. It is due to the Senator who offers the amendment, that I should state that I have uniformly voted against such amendments.

Mr. WELLER. I have only this remark to make. I believe the merits of the amendment have been fully discussed by the Senate, for it is substantially in the form in which it heretofore passed the Senate. The excuse which the committee have in offering it in this shape is, that, under the rules of the House of Representatives, they have been wholly unable to obtain any action upon the bill; and as they regard it as very important to the country, in order to preserve the Army and make it what it should be, they have considered it necessary to offer it as an amendment to this bill. We believe that, by the passage of the amendment, the Army will be made what the country desires it should be—efficient.

Mr. DAWSON. The lowest clerks in your Departments receive about twelve times as much as a private soldier in the Army. We have raised the salaries of our clerks in this city twenty per cent., and yet it seems that the pay of the officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States cannot be increased; but they are to subsist upon arms and hard service. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Dawson, Fessenden, Fish, Houston, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pratt, Sebastian, Seward, Sidel, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Walker, and Weller—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Chase, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Pettit, Rockwell, Toombs, and Wade—14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. The next amendment which I have to offer is to carry out the provision of an existing law:

And be it further enacted, That the amount which may be found necessary to pay, under the act of 27th March, 1854, the widows and orphans of the United States troops who perished by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco, be paid out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to cause the balance due, on the books of the Treasury, on account of the advance of pay to officers of the United States Army, whose widows or children may be entitled to the benefits of the second section of said act of 27th March, 1854.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I have still another amendment in regard to the board of officers appointed by the act passed in 1852, to examine certain claims in California:

And be it further enacted, That the board of officers appointed under the sixth section of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1853, approved August 31, 1852, is hereby authorized and directed, in addition to the powers and duties already conferred upon it, to extend its examination to claims arising from the destruction of property by the troops serving under the command of Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont, in California, in the years 1846 and 1847, by his orders, as well as for the destruction of property by the enemy, caused by the occupancy of the claimants' premises by the said troops; that the said board is empowered to examine witnesses under oath, and take testimony, if necessary, in California or elsewhere; that for the payment of the claims heretofore reported favorably upon by the board, including that numbered 197, being the claim of Santiago Arguello, and amounting to $11,543, and for the compensation of the members of said board, for their period of service as such, at a rate not exceeding $3,000 per annum, each, deducting therefrom their Army pay, the sum of $159,500, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the treasurer of said board, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,000 for contingent expenses of said board, including their office rent, clerk hire, stationery, fuel, payment of witness fees duly summoned to the board, at rates not exceeding those paid by the United States district court in California, or elsewhere, as the case may be, and the traveling expenses of said board not exceeding sixteen cents per mile to each member, and other incidental expenses.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. If this bill is to be turned into an omnibus, I want to see the vote upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WELLER. I have not heard what the objection of the honorable Senator from Delaware was. From the position in which he usually stands, it is utterly impossible to hear him. I will state, however, that this board was organized on the 31st of August, 1852. They have had claims presented to them to the amount of $855,803. They have suspended and ruled out $411,000. There have been withdrawn and paid $170,000; rejected $153,933; and finally passed, $129,000. All that the amendment proposes is, that the board shall have authority to sit in the State of California for the purpose of taking testimony in connection with these claims. I stated to the Senate, on a former day, that in my judgment, unless the board were sent to the State of California there was great danger that a very large amount of fraudulent claims would be allowed; that that was the only place of which I had any knowledge where the proof could be obtained that would enable the board to pass in a proper manner upon them. I undertake to say, therefore, Mr. President, that the only question presented is, whether the authority shall be given to the board to sit in the State of California, if, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, they should do so. It is the only place where fraudulent claims can be detected. I know that there have been fraudulent claims made; and I know that there are some forged claims now in existence; and that unless the board pursue a cautious course, unless they avail themselves of all the testimony, which can be obtained nowhere else than in that State, there is great danger of a large amount of money being filched from the Treasury. It is, therefore, to protect the public Treasury that I have proposed this amendment; and you will allow me to say, also, Mr. President, that the committee have carefully examined the report made by this board of commissioners at the present session of Congress. They seem to have examined the claims with very great care; and I may say that I know of no court which could have investigated them better. I am glad that they have done so, because I am anxious that all just and honest demands should be paid; but I am not willing that fraudulent, trumped-up ones, which I know to be in existence, should be paid. I do not, however, wish to consume time. I ask that the vote may be taken.

The question was taken by yeas and nays; and resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Benjamin, Brodhead, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Sebastian, Seward, Thomson of New Jersey, and Weller—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Butler, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Douglas, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, Pratt, Rockwell, Sidel, Sumner, Toombs, and Wade—23.

And the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WELLER. The next amendment which I have, is to add:

And be it further enacted, That the act approved September 28, 1850, entitled "An act granting bounty lands to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," an act approved March 22, 1852, entitled "An act to make land warrants assignable, and for other purposes," and an act approved February 3, 1853, entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," shall not be so construed as to deprive any widow of the benefits therein granted for the services of her husband, though she may have married again: Provided, however, That the applicant is a widow at the time of making the claim.

Mr. SEWARD asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and taken—yeas 23, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Chase, Cooper, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Sebastian, Seward, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Clay, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Hunter, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Sidel, and Toombs—11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. The next amendment is to add:

And be it further enacted, That the same allowance, in respect to rations, be hereafter made to the military commandant of the Schuykill arsenal, in the quartermaster's department, as to the commandants of the arsenal in the ordnance department.

I have a letter of the Secretary of War in regard to this.

The question was put; and the Presiding Officer declared that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. WELLER. I hope, sir, the Senate will not vote down an amendment, until they hear the report in relation to it. I was surprised some time ago to find that an amendment which I had offered had been voted down, although no intimation of any objection to it had been given. Now, if there be any objection to this amendment, I trust Senators will not vote upon it without ascertaining whether their difficulty cannot be obviated. I have a letter from the Secretary of War, which I think will satisfy every Senator that it ought to be adopted. Certainly some explanation ought to be asked for, before it is summarily voted down.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I have another amendment.

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and cause to be placed on the files of his Department such additional muster-rolls of the battalion of volunteers commanded by Lieutenant Colonel John C. Fremont in California, duly authenticated by the proper officers, as have not heretofore been received and filed; and to cause such a correction of the muster-roll to be made in regard to the period of enlistment, terms of service, and amount of pay of the members of said battalion as upon satisfactory proof he may deem right and proper, as far as practicable, to correspond to the pay roll of the paymaster of said battalion in respect to pay and services, so that all who served in the military service of the United States in California during the late war with Mexico, whether under the command of naval or military officers, may be entitled to all the benefits of all the acts of Congress providing for the emoluments of the volunteers in the Mexican war.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that. We have a very short time now to legislate upon this appropriation bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WELLER. The amendment makes no appropriation. Congress made an appropriation of $101,000 to pay all those men who had served in California. They were to be paid, under the law that was passed, according to the pay-rolls in the War Department, filed by the paymaster of the battalion. Some of the muster-rolls were filed in the Navy Department. The effect of the amendment is to transfer those rolls from the Navy Department to the War Department. It will place those whose names are on the rolls in the Navy Department on a footing with the others. They were intended to be covered by the original law, but by confining it to the rolls in the War Department, a portion of them being in the Navy Department, have been excluded.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask the Senator from California whether he is anxious that this bill should become a law?

Mr. WELLER. I apprehend that is hardly a serious question. The Senator, I am sure, cannot suppose that I would stand up and offer amendments for the purpose of defeating the bill, or put them on a bill which I supposed was about to be defeated.

Mr. BRIGHT. I supposed the honorable Senator was friendly to the bill. I had no doubt of it. I merely intended to suggest that there was no probability that this amendment could be considered and acted upon by the House. It is utterly impossible. I think the bill is already loaded to an extent which defeats it.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator, a short time since, reported from a committee of conference, that the Senate gave up five of their amendments to every one that the House agreed to; and I think we had better send down ten or fifteen times as much as we intend to retain on the bill. The Senator says that we give up nearly everything to the House. We, therefore, should not vote down a measure when it is a proper one. This is merely transferring the pay rolls from one Department to another.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand that perfectly; but it is very apparent that these amendments cannot be considered by the House.

Mr. GWIN. Let us try them anyhow.

Mr. PRATT. I would inquire if there is any limitation in the amendment that there shall be no payments beyond the amounts heretofore appropriated?

Mr. WELLER. I have no objection to such a limitation.

Mr. PRATT. I understand that $101,000 have been heretofore appropriated for the purpose of paying these soldiers; and this is merely extending the list. If the Senator will put in a limitation, in the form of a proviso, that no more money shall be paid than has heretofore been appropriated, I shall have no objection to it.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California modify his amendment?

Mr. WELLER. I have no objection to doing so.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the amendment as modified.

On a division, ten Senators voted in the affirmative.

Mr. GWIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WALKER.) They have been demanded before, and refused.

On counting the negative side, but seventeen Senators rose—no quorum voting.

Mr. GWIN. Now we can take the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall vote against the amendment, because I do not see that it is important whether the roll is in one place or the other. I cannot see at this time that it is very important. Upon another occasion, and on another bill, I may be ready to vote for it.

Mr. GWIN. It is important, inasmuch as they cannot get their pay unless this is done.

Mr. DAWSON. Here is the law which made the appropriation:

"And be it further enacted, That for the pay and equipment of mounted riflemen, finding their own horses and forage, volunteering and serving under the command of Captain John C. Fremont, in California, in the year 1846, upon the muster-roll now on file in the War Department, and supplies for the volunteers in said service, $168,000."

A part of the muster-rolls are in the Navy Department, and cannot be transferred to the War Department to meet the appropriation. The object of the amendment is merely to justify the Secretary of War in transferring them to his Department, and then the money appropriated two years ago will be paid out under those muster-rolls.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Benjamin, Brodhead, Chase, Dawson, Fessenden, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Sebastian, Seward, Stuart, Toucey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Brown, Butler, Clay, Cooper, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Hunter, Pettit, Pratt, and Rockwell—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. The last amendment which I have is the following:

"And be it further enacted, That in the event the Secretary of War shall deem it inconsistent with the interest of the military service to furnish a sufficient portion of the military building at Fort Leavenworth for the use of the territorial government of Kansas, the sum of $25,000 shall be, and in that contingency hereby is, appropriated for the erection of public buildings for the use of the Legislature of Kansas, to be expended under the direction of the Governor of said Territory."

Mr. DAWSON. The public houses in which the officers of the Army live are now engaged. By the Kansas bill the civil authorities are authorized to locate their seat of government there. Since its passage, the Secretary of War has signified to the committee that those buildings could not be given up. In consequence of that communication, this appropriation is proposed to be made. It is necessary to enable them to carry on the government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I submit an amendment from the Committee on Indian Affairs, embracing appropriations for carrying into effect Indian treaties which have been ratified since the passage of the Indian appropriation bill:

Shawnees.—For the first installment of interest, at five per cent, on $40,000 for education, per third article of the treaty of May 10, 1854, $2,000.

For the first of eight annual installments of money, in payment for lands, per third article of the treaty, May 10, 1854, $100,000.

Kaskaskia, and Peoria, and Wea, and Piankeshaw.—For the expenses of surveying the lands, as provided in the third and fourth articles of the treaty of May 30, 1854, $5,300.

The payment of the first of three installments in money, of $13,000 each, for purchase of former permanent annuities, and relinquishment of claims and damages, per sixth article of the treaty of May 30, 1854, $13,000.

For the first of five installments, for support of a blacksmith and assistant, per sixth article of the treaty of 30th May, 1854, $720.

For the erection of a smith shop, and purchase of tools therefor, per sixth article of the treaty of 30th May, 1854, $120.

Miamies.—For the expenses of surveying the lands as provided in the second article of the treaty, June 5, 1854, $7,452.

For interest, at the rate of five per centum, on $50,000, for educational purposes, &c., per third article of the treaty June 5, 1854, $2,500.

Reappropriation: For payment of the valuation of improvements on lands ceded, as stipulated in the sixth article of the treaty of 1834, and the seventh article of the treaty of 1838, (the amount having been carried to the surplus fund by warrant No. 94, of September 24, 1852,) per fourth article of the treaty, June 5, 1854, $8,000 68.

For the payment to the Miamies residing on the ceded lands of the first of six equal annual installments for purchase of former perpetual and other annuities, and relinquishment of claims, &c., per fourth article of the treaty, June 5, 1854, $31,739 11.

For payment in full to John Grigg and Sash-o quosh, as provided in the fourth article of said last mentioned treaty, $9,689 23.

For payment of the claims of Miamies who live on the ceded lands, for damages and loss of stock and other property, and for losses of improvements, &c., caused by their removal from Sugar Creek, per fourth article of the treaty, June 5, 1854, $7,775 82.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Another amendment becomes necessary in the form of a proviso to that, to annul certain appropriations made in the Indian appropriation bill:

Provided, That the following appropriations contained in the Indian appropriation act, passed at the present session, are hereby annulled and repealed:

For fulfilling treaties with the Shawnees:
Permanent provision for salt, $60; blacksmith and assistant, $840; iron and steel, $220.

For fulfilling treaties with the Piankeshaws:
Permanent annuities, $800.

For fulfilling treaties with the Weas:
Permanent annuity, $3,000.

For fulfilling treaties with the Miamies:
Money in lieu of laborers, $250; agricultural implements, $200.

For fulfilling treaties with the Delawares:
Permanent annuity, fourth article, treaty of August, 1795, $1,000; permanent annuity, third article, treaty of September, 1809, $500; permanent annuity, fifth article, treaty of October, 1818, $4,000; permanent annuity, article supplementary, &c., 1829, $1,000; permanent provision for blacksmith, October, 1818, $720.

Permanent provisions for iron and steel for shop, October, 1818, $220.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the unanimous consent to make a report from the committee of conference on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. WELLER. That will necessarily take some time; because I shall have to find out what amendment numbers one, fourteen, sixteen, and so on, is.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have another amendment:

Memonones.—For payment of expenses incurred in negotiating the articles of May 12, 1854, with the Memonones, supplemental and amendatory to the treaty of October, 1843, $950.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next amendment which I have is:

"And be it further enacted, That the sums appropriated by the act of March 3, 1849, for the removal and subsistence of the Memonones, and for the establishment of a manual labor school, &c., for them, and now remaining in the Treasury, together with the sums for the pay of a miller, heretofore appropriated, be paid to, and extended for the benefit of said Memonone Indians, according to the stipulations of said supplementary and amendatory articles."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next is to perform a treaty with the Creeks:

For payment, as stipulated by the article dated June 13, 1854, supplementary to the treaty at Fort Gibson, November 3, 1828, to individuals of the Creek nation for claims for property abandoned and lost in consequence of their emigration west of the Mississippi, to be distributed under the direction of the chief agent of the United States to the Creeks, in the proportion as set forth and determined in the schedule referred to in the second article of said treaty of November 3, 1828, $350,000: Provided, however, That the appropriation of $17,500 for interest thereon, contained in the Indian appropriation act, passed at the present session, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The last amendment which I have from the committee is to insert:

For extra clerk hire for the service of the Indian office for one year, commencing on the 1st of August next, $5,600.

For payment of the expenses of the delegates of the Creek nation, now in this city, $1,199 55.

Mr. PETTIT. The first part of that amendment seems to reach from the first of August next. It must have been drawn up some days ago.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It means this August, and I so modify it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have another amendment, which I do not offer from the Committee on Indian Affairs:

That the joint resolution entitled "A resolution explanatory of the act appropriating money for the removal of the raft of Red river," approved January 7, 1853, be, and is hereby, repealed, and that the Secretary of the Department of War be authorized to expend the appropriation in reference to Red river raft in such a way, and for such purposes as he may approve, having in view the improvement of the navigation of Red river in and around said raft.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. As the yeas and nays are called for, a few words will explain the amendment to the Senate. In the first place, Mr. President, the appropriation which it seeks to control has already been made; and unless some provision is made in regard to it, it will become ineffectual, because it will relapse into the surplus fund. In the next place, the amendment does not propose to divert the fund to another purpose, but only to enlarge the discretion of the Secretary of War, and enable him to carry out the object of the appropriation. Unless it is passed, that appropriation will be placed in the singular predicament of being the only one contained in the last river and harbor bill which is tied up from the purpose for which it was made. This proposition is embraced precisely in the river and harbor bill which we have just passed. It is also embraced in a resolution which passed this body, I think, without a division, and went to the other House; so that it has been deliberately sanctioned by both Houses; and yet, in consequence of not being on the same bill, there is no certainty that it will pass. I omitted to move it to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, at the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia that the Army bill was the proper place for it.

Mr. HUNTER. I did not say I thought it right. I thought it more proper in the Army than in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I cannot vote for it.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. He thought it more proper. The expenditure is to be made by the Secretary of War. It is, therefore, peculiarly appropriate to the Army appropriation bill. It contains no new appropriation. It simply carries out the object indicated in the old law. I will simply remark, in conclusion, that an amendment involving precisely the same principle was incorporated, by a deliberate vote of the Senate, upon the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I allude to the one offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] in reference to the use of a former appropriation for his State. The principle and precedent have been sanctioned by the deliberate votes of the Senate; and, with this explanation, I submit the question.

Mr. PRATT. This very appropriation is contained in the river and harbor bill; and although I believe it to be right, yet I believe all the other appropriations in that bill are right, and I wish them all to share the same fate. If this is to be contained in another bill, so as to give it additional chance, we might as well add that whole bill to this.

Mr. BENJAMIN. This is not an appropriation now made for the States of Arkansas and Louisiana. The appropriation was made in the river and harbor bill two years ago. All the other appropriations made in that bill have been expended. This particular appropriation alone remains unexpended by reason of a particular limitation contained in the appropriation bill which has prevented the Secretary of War from carrying out the object of the appropriation. It is true we have put it in the river and harbor bill again this year, but it is too late in the session for that bill to pass. The object is not to put us in any better position than anybody else, but to give us the same rights that all others have already enjoyed. The appropriations made two years ago for all other sections of the Confederacy have been expended in their favor. This one appropriation for the benefit of Louisiana and Arkansas has not yet been expended, and the object of this amendment is to enable the Secretary of War to expend it.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish simply to make one observation in reply to the objection of the Senator from Maryland. He objects to this amendment because the same provision is contained in the river and harbor bill. I think he was silent when a similar proposition was made in relation to the improvement of the Albemarle sound, and added without a dissenting voice in the Senate to the civil and diplomatic bill, though that very provision is embodied in the river and harbor bill.

The question being taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 33, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Benjamin, Brodhead, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Houston, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Morton, Pearce, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Hunter, Mason, and Pratt—4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the bill for the relief of Thomas Bronaugh, and for the repeal of the "act to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein," approved the 29th of June, 1854, and the joint resolution directing the presentation of a medal to Commander Duncan N. Ingraham; which were then signed by the President pro tempore.

The message also announced that the House had passed, without amendment, Senate bill to incorporate the Pioneer Manufacturing Company of Georgetown, District of Columbia.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, and for other purposes."

Mr. HUNTER asked unanimous consent to be allowed to present the report of the committee of conference on that bill; but, objection being made, the Senate continued, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have an amendment to offer which has been estimated for by the Department:

For the construction of a military road from the Rio Grande, near El Paso, to the river Colorado, and for sink wells thereon, $12,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I offer an amendment to come in after the appropriation "for pay of the Army:"

Provided, That hereafter the officers of engineers in command of, and superintending works, shall be entitled to the pay and emoluments attached to their brevet rank during the period of their service in such commands.

I will, in a word, explain this amendment: Two officers of the engineer corps are now engaged in superintending the works at Fort Point and Alcatraz Island, in the Bay of San Francisco. They are both brevet officers, but do not receive the pay of their brevet rank. It is a highly important and responsible station. They have disbursements to make of enormous amounts of money, and receive nothing but their ordinary pay.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASON. I have an amendment to offer. It is to insert after the appropriation for repairs and improvements, and new machinery at Harper's Ferry, the following:

For the erection of a new arsenal at Harper's Ferry, $27,000.

For the purchase of a house and lot on Cliff street, at Harper's Ferry, at its junction with Shenandoah street, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $8,850: Provided, That whatever portion of this appropriation may be required therefor, shall be applied towards removing said house.

For repairs and improvements to the rifle works at Harper's Ferry, $5,500.

Mr. President, these proposed appropriations are amongst the estimates from the War Department for the armory at Harper's Ferry. They were given to me by the member of the House who is now at the head of the Military Committee there, with the information corroborated by the papers which he showed me, that they were taken from a series of estimates made by the War Department; and he requested that I would offer them.

Harper's Ferry is not far from my own residence, and I happen to know personally that the arsenal where the arms are now stored, from its position, was subject to inundation from the river some two or three years since, and the War Department then asked for authority to be enabled to build a new arsenal, on higher ground. They commenced it, and this appropriation will enable them to complete it. The other item is for the purchase of a house, which, I can say, from my knowledge of the premises, is desirable to be purchased and to be removed, in order to avoid risks of fire. It is a policy which has been pursued by the Government, to avoid the risk of fire by purchasing adjacent buildings, when necessary. These items have been selected from the appropriations recommended by the War Department, as those most important; and I submit them to the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is very obvious that these armories are to be a source of continual annoyance to us. The Secretary of War, in his letter which was read here to-night, and which, I think, was treated with great indifference, because his recommendation was rejected, stated that we have now six hundred thousand stand of arms in the national armories. We have upwards of two millions deposited with the States. Now, sir, I think we had better get rid of the whole matter, and, therefore, I offer this amendment as a substitute for that offered by the Senator from Virginia:

And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be sold, to the highest bidder, after sixty days' notice in one or more newspapers published in the cities of Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, the grounds and property owned by the Government at Springfield, in Massachusetts, and Harper's Ferry, in Virginia, and used as armories of the United States.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I think it not at all improbable that, if it becomes the established policy of this Government to leave the responsibility for the manufacture of arms to the Executive, and to take away the control, it must result in changing the whole scheme of manufacturing arms, and it will pass over to private contract. I think that must be a necessary result, if the Executive cannot be responsible, if you take away the control, as has been done by an amendment, which has prevailed, to the bill. But yet, until that is done, the public property ought to be preserved. As I said before, there is no arsenal, or proper place for storing arms, adequate for the purpose, at Harper's Ferry at present. I shall vote against the amendment of the honorable Senator from Tennessee, but reserve to myself, as a Senator from Virginia, to determine upon the policy of changing the whole system, and giving it over to private contract, if the policy prevails of leaving the responsibility with the Executive, and taking away from him the control.

Mr. DAWSON. I am opposed to both amendments for the present. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia is for the building of a new arsenal at Harper's Ferry. That is a matter which ought to have gone before the Committee on Military Affairs of this body. The Senator has referred to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House of Representatives. He should have presented the amendment to that House.

Mr. MASON. I was informed by that gentleman that he did present the amendment, in a different form—in a very general form. There is a fund at Harper's Ferry, derived from the sale of certain public property there, amounting, I think, to $80,000 or $90,000. When the proposition was presented to the House of Representatives, it was, to leave that fund at the discretion of the War Department, to be expended at Harper's Ferry for various purposes of improvement, these among the rest. It was voted down by the House in that form, and we, therefore, selected these as the most important items of the estimates of the War Department.

Mr. DAWSON. I have every confidence in the gentleman representing that district in the House of Representatives; but I say to the Senator now, and I say to the Senate, that it is better to let the matter pass over. The object is to remove a House which belongs to an individual out of a particular street. A year or two ago, I think, an appropriation of $16,500 was made for the purpose of beginning the new arsenal. That appropriation of $16,500 has not gone in that direction.

Mr. MASON. Part of it.

Mr. DAWSON. You say part of it has not gone. They have done nothing.

Mr. MASON. They have done a little.

Mr. DAWSON. They may have gone on, and dug a foundation, but that is a small beginning. My objection is, that the change which has taken place in relation to the armories by the vote to-night, has produced a feeling in the mind of the Senator from Virginia which has almost brought him to vote for the entire repeal of the laws establishing armories. Then why should we now make an appropriation of money to build an arsenal in the neighborhood of that armory, to take care of the public arms. The better plan, and the prudent one, is that which I suggest: to avoid, for the present, any appropriation for these armories, especially when it is based upon facts which we do not thoroughly comprehend. I am also opposed to the amendment offered by my friend from Tennessee; and I beg to say to him that I think it is better to let this matter lie over until the next session of Congress, when the subject can be taken up and thoroughly investigated; and if his proposition shall succeed to dispose of the armories, any further appropriations will be unnecessary. I think, however, the Senate ought not now, under the existing circumstances, to vote a single dollar of appropriation for arsenals or armories. I hope Senators will concur with me in that opinion.

Mr. MASON. I said this, and I repeat it: if the Executive is to remain responsible for the management of the armories, you must leave the control with the Executive; and if you take away the control, it must result in the change of the whole system; but until that is done, there ought to be some means provided for preserving the arms which are made.

Mr. DAWSON. Now, I will ask the Senator from Virginia whether this amendment of his is a recommendation of the Department, or presented from a committee?

Mr. MASON. It was my misfortune not to be heard by the honorable Senator who makes the inquiry. I said it had been estimated for by the War Department, was before the House in a more general form, rejected there, as I am informed, because of its general character, and presented here in the form of specific appropriations.

Mr. DAWSON. The estimate for the preceding year, I think, was $16,500, and that amount was appropriated. There was no estimate for this purpose laid before the Committee on Military Affairs of this body; at least, none that I saw.

Mr. SLIDELL called for the yeas and nays on the amendment of Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, to the amendment; and they were ordered, and being taken resulted—yeas 21, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Chase, Clay, Dawson, Douglas, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Jones of Tennessee, Pearce, Pettit, Sumner, Toombs, and Wade—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bright, Brown, Cooper, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Foot, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—25.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. Mason's amendment was also rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendment:

For the purchase of three thousand stand of Sharp's rifle, $90,000: Provided, The Secretary of War, after fair practical test thereof, shall deem the purchase advisable and proper.

I wish simply to read the statement of the Ordnance Bureau and the Secretary of War upon this subject:

WAR DEPARTMENT, }
WASHINGTON, July 29, 1854. }

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th instant, inclosing a resolution of the Senate, directing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of an appropriation for the purchase of the "Sharp's rifle" for the use of the Army of the United States, and asking whether they are necessary, and what sum should be appropriated for the purpose.

In reply I transmit you a report of the Colonel of Ordnance on the subject, in whose views I concur, and recommend an appropriation of $90,000, subject to the restrictions stated by him.

The resolution of the Senate is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

Hon. JAMES SHIELDS, Chairman Committee of Military Affairs.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, }
WASHINGTON, July 28, 1854. }

SIR: In answer to General Shields's letter of the 9th instant, respecting the expediency of an appropriation for the purchase of Sharp's rifles, I have the honor to report:

In the examinations and trials of breech loading arms, by boards of officers, Sharp's principle has been pronounced superior to others, and his arms most suitable for the use of mounted troops. Some of them have been purchased and issued to the troops, and are now undergoing the final test of trial in actual service. Reports of the result of that test have not yet been received; but there is reason to suppose that they will be favorable. If they should be such as to warrant the adoption of the arm into the United States service, there will be required, to supply all the mounted troops with arms made on this principle, of patterns suitable for the different kinds of mounted troops, riflemen, and dragoons, about three thousand; to preserve which, with their appendages, will require about $90,000.

As the adoption of Sharp's arms is dependent on the result of the practical test, their purchase should be authorized, subject to the result of that test; which will be effected by an appropriation for the purchase, if the Secretary of War should deem it advisable and proper.

General Shields's letter, with its inclosure, is returned herewith. Respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. K. CRAIG, Colonel of Ordnance.

Hon. JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

Thus we have a distinct recommendation of Colonel Craig, of the Ordnance Bureau, and of the Secretary of War. The object of this purchase is to obtain arms to equip three thousand of our mounted troops. It is for a specific object, and is dependent upon the result of the final test. So far as tests have already taken place, they are pronounced by the War Department to be superior to any other description of arms which have been in the possession of the Government of the United States. I believe it will be well to make this appropriation. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not understand this. But a few minutes ago we said mechanics were the proper persons to judge of the manufacture of arms, and that they must be employed for that purpose. Now it is proposed to refer this question to the War Department, and, of course, to a board of officers. How is the Secretary of War to ascertain the practicability of this arm? It is well known that the Secretary of War will refer this matter to a board of officers, or judge of it himself.

Mr. TOUCEY. It has already been examined.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Then it has been by military officers; and I supposed we had decided in favor of mechanics. I am opposed to this special legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON. The feeling under which the Senator from Pennsylvania makes those remarks can be very plainly seen. His feeling is that of regret, not to express it in any stronger language, that a particular view which he has had in regard to the public service has not been sustained by the votes of the Senate to-night in reference to the armories. There is no inconsistency between the proposition which we offer—to purchase arms made by private individuals when they are deemed fit by the Department after a practical test—and voting against putting Army officers to superintend the making of arms. They are two entirely distinct and separate matters. One relates to the supervision of the armories, the other to the purchase of arms to equip the forces of the United States. I regret that we cannot all agree, and have but one view upon any public subject; but I humbly submit that there is no such inconsistency as the Senator from Pennsylvania thinks in this instance. I see no propriety in the complaint which he makes, for this amendment relates to the purchase of arms already made, and the other to the supervision and direction of the making of them.

Mr. DAWSON. It is true, no doubt, as stated by my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. JOHNSON,] that a majority of the committee have to-night recommended this appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask the honorable Senator one question? How often has he participated in the same kind of action that he should lay a stress upon the word "to-night," as to the action of the committee in this instance?

Mr. DAWSON. I have not objected to that, but I say that this appropriation has been recommended to-night, I suppose, by a majority of the committee, they standing three to two. A substantial objection to this proposition is, that the Secretary of War says these rifles are now undergoing an experiment. There is no ascertained fact in relation to them which would justify Congress in making an appropriation of $90,000 to purchase them. It is true as my friend from Arkansas says, they have been examined by the head of the Ordnance Bureau, and he has formed a favorable opinion in regard to them.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has he not said that, as far as they are tested, they are superior to any other arms?

Mr. DAWSON. Precisely so; but we have yet no report from the Department of War as to the final result of the experiments. It has been already said to-night that we have more than six hundred thousand stand of arms now in our possession. Then why should we, at this period of the session, make an appropriation of $90,000, when there are other arms before the same committee competing for the appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON. This is simply to furnish three thousand of our mounted troops.

Mr. DAWSON. We shall be in session in ninety or one hundred and twenty days from the present time. Why then should we hurry this matter? I am decidedly in favor of doing anything that is right, but I do not wish to act precipitately.

Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. WALKER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "Sharp's rifle," and inserting "the best breech-loading rifle, in the opinion of the Secretary of War;" so as to make the amendment read:

For the purchase of three thousand stand of the best breech-loading rifle, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, for the use of the United States Army, $90,000: Provided, that the Secretary of War, after a fair practical test thereof, shall deem the purchase advisable and proper.

As has been remarked by the Senator from Georgia, there are other breech-loading rifles now in competition with Sharp's. I have had some experience in the use of arms. When I first saw Sharp's rifle I thought it was the best I had ever seen; but I am satisfied, from further observation, that it is not the best I have seen. I have heard the opinion of those who have used it; and while it is a remarkable gun when used with care, for a few times, it is not upon a plan of construction that ever can last in long service. At least, sir, that is my opinion. I have seen other arms which I think are constructed on a better principle, and more calculated to stand hard service, and long service. But, sir, I would not propose an amendment to this bill which should make it the imperative duty of the Secretary of War to select that particular arm, if, in his opinion, it stood the test; but I am willing to take the amendment in the shape I have proposed, in preference to the other; but I am not certain that I shall vote for it if so amended. It will then, at any rate, certainly be in a better form.

Mr. TOUCEY. The rifle which is mentioned in the original amendment is, I think, the best one of that description now extant. That is the opinion of the most competent and experienced men. That is the opinion of the War Department, and of the Ordnance Bureau. It is the best breech-loading rifle, and is designed to be supplied for mounted men. It is on trial in the hands of infantry, to ascertain whether it is not also the best weapon for infantry. I am confident in saying that such is its range and its efficiency, that it will more than double the power of the troops in whose hands it is placed. It has recently received a gold medal from the Emperor of France, who is a very competent judge. It has been tried by a board of officers here, I think, more than once, and their judgment has been entirely in favor of the weapon. Now, under those circumstances, this appropriation is asked; but it is made to depend upon the judgment of the Secretary of War, and if there is another, that is better, this one will not be purchased. I therefore hope the amendment of the committee will be adopted.

Mr. WALKER. The arm to which I referred has been submitted to a board of officers for test; and if I had it here, I think I could show that, in point of range and penetration, and in almost every other respect, it is superior to the Sharp rifle. That is the report which has gone into the War Department, or the Ordnance Bureau, from the board of officers who made trial of it; but I understand the report has not been taken up for examination, and, consequently, has not been submitted. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment, to see whether discretion is to be left to the Secretary or not.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Chase, Clay, Dawson, Evans, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, Pratt, Rockwell, Seward, Slidell, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—22.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bright, Brown, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Johnson, Morton, Sebastian, Stuart, Toucey, and Weller—12.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted; and the question recurred on the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. TOUCEY. I shall vote for the amendment as amended. I am so entirely confident of the superiority of this arm, that I entertain no doubt that it will be selected by the Secretary of War. I voted against the amendment to the amendment, because it was authorizing the purchase of arms not known to the Senate; whereas, as the amendment originally stood, it restricted the Secretary to this, and he would reject it if there were a better one; but still I will vote for it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment, as amended, resulted—yeas 19, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Brodhead, Brown, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, James, Johnson, Mallory, Morton, Sebastian, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, and Weller—19.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Butler, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Pratt, Rockwell, Seward, Slidell, Sumner, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—23.

So the amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the appropriation "for continuing the explorations and surveys to ascertain the best route for a railway to the Pacific:"

And three experienced civil engineers shall be appointed by the President as commissioners, to whose examination the Secretary of War shall submit all reports, maps, profiles, and records of all explorations and surveys conducted under the direction of the War Department, relating to a railroad to the Pacific; and it shall be the duty of said commissioners to report, as soon as practicable, to the Secretary of War upon the comparative facilities afforded for a railroad by the different routes surveyed, the commercial necessities therefor, and advantages thereof, its probable profit and cost; and to submit such views upon the mode of construction, and upon the general subject, as are usually presented by engineers in relation to such subjects, and which they may deem necessary and proper. And the said commissioners shall be paid such amounts for their services and necessary expenses for clerk hire, out of the foregoing appropriation of $150,000, as the Secretary shall consider reasonable and proper compensation for the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) Is that recommended by any one of the standing committees of the Senate?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; but it contains no appropriation.

Mr. PRATT. Does it not contain an appropriation for the pay of the officers?

Mr. FESSENDEN. If Senators will examine the clause to which the amendment is moved, they will find that it contains an appropriation, the expenditure of which this amendment directs in a particular mode.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that such an amendment is not in order to a general appropriation bill. If the Senate desire it, he will submit the question to their decision.

Mr. WELLER. If such a thing be proper, I should like to have the reasons on which the opinion of the Chair is founded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair founds his opinion on the fact that the amendment has not been recommended by any one of the standing committees of the body, and is not in pursuance of an estimate from the head of any Department. It is, therefore, excluded by the rule. But the Chair will submit the question to the Senate whether the amendment is in order under the 30th rule.

Mr. WELLER. That, I suppose, is a debatable question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLER. I should like to hear the rule read. I know that certain things have to be estimated for by a Department, or presented by a standing committee, but I have never yet heard that the rules of the Senate prevent a Senator from proposing to modify or change the direction of an appropriation already made by the bill itself. If I understand it, this amendment simply provides the manner in which a sum appropriated by the bill shall be used. It provides for a board to make the appropriation more effective. I cannot see any rule of construction or parliamentary practice by which the amendment can be excluded.

Mr. CHASE. The Chair will remember that, during the last session of Congress, upon a motion in respect to an appropriation for the Pacific railroad exploration, the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. WALKER,] moved to strike out the whole amendment, leaving only the appropriation, and to direct the expenditure of that appropriation to another object, introducing a new and distinct proposition entirely. That question was largely debated at the time in the Senate, and it was ruled that the amendment was in order, and the Chair, in so ruling, was sustained by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair

has sustained what he understands to be the rule, but he will submit the question to the Senate, whether they will receive the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask that the 30th rule be read?

It was read as follows:

"30. No amendment, proposing additional appropriations, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law, or a treaty stipulation."

Mr. DAWSON. None of these surveys have been returned, and in all probability they will not be here before the meeting of the next session. I dislike to create a board of this sort—

Mr. WELLER. The question is now, whether we shall entertain the amendment? Not upon its merits.

Mr. DAWSON. But the question of order is, whether this shall be received? The bill already appropriates $150,000, and the amendment proposes to apply part of it to the payment of three civil engineers or commissioners. It seems to me that that is clearly an appropriation in the contemplation of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had no doubt on that head, but he has submitted the question to the Senate whether they will entertain the amendment.

Mr. WELLER. The only question is, whether it is in order for a Senator to move an amendment directing the particular manner in which an appropriation provided for in the bill shall be expended.

Mr. SEWARD. It seems to me that the appropriation is a given sum of money, and when a Senator is not satisfied with that, he can move to give to that sum of money a different direction, without conflicting with the rules.

Mr. PRATT. Suppose an appropriation were made in the bill for the building of the Capitol under the direction of the War Department, would it be contended that it would be in order, because that appropriation was in the bill, for an individual Senator to offer an amendment to divert that money to some object not recommended?

Mr. WELLER. No, sir; but I apprehend it would be in order to propose an amendment to change the manner in which that building should be constructed. Suppose the original appropriation provided for a certain building, could I not move to change the character of that building without having an estimate from the Department? Undoubtedly I could.

Mr. PRATT. I do not know about the character of the building; but here you have commissioners who are to exhaust this sum.

Mr. SEWARD called for the yeas and nays on the question whether the amendment could be entertained under the 30th rule; and they were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Benjamin, Chase, Clay, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, James, Mallory, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, and Weller—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Brown, Evans, Johnson, Morton, Pratt, Slidell, Stuart, Tompkins, and Toucey—10.

So the amendment was received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WELLER. I am directed by a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendment as an additional section:

SEC.—And be it further enacted, That the Secretaries of War and the Navy, if, in their opinion, the public service requires it, are authorized to purchase of the patentee his patent for practical anasthesia; and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, to be charged in equal amounts to the Army and Navy: Provided, however, Before making the purchase, they shall obtain the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States affirming the validity of any such patent.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEYER. I offer the following amendment, as an additional section:

SEC.—And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to cede and convey to the city of St. Louis the tract of land of thirty-seven sixty-four one hundredth acres, on which the St. Louis arsenal now stands, together with the permanent and fixed improvements, for such sum of money as the said Secretary shall deem reasonable, not less than the original cost of the lands, buildings, and permanent improvements thereon, to be paid by said city into the Treasury of the United States; and the sum of money which shall be so paid, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby appropriated to the construction of another arsenal on the tract of land on which Jefferson barracks are situated, and the removal thereto of the arms, munitions, machinery, and tools now at said St. Louis arsenal: Provided, That the possession of said tract of land shall not be delivered to said city until after the new arsenal is completed, and the arms, munitions, machinery, and tools aforesaid removed thereto, for which purposes the period of two years from and after the payment of the purchase money shall be allowed: And provided also, That the said sale and conveyance shall be on condition that the said tract of land shall forever remain a public park for the use of the inhabitants of said city, and shall be maintained and regulated as such by the said city.

I will send to the Secretary to be read the letter of the Secretary of War, together with the report of Colonel Craig to the Secretary of War, on the subject.

The Secretary read them, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, January 27, 1854.

SIR: I have considered the subject of the resolution left by you at this Department, directing an inquiry into the expediency of ceding to the city of St. Louis, for the purpose of a public park, the ground on which the United States arsenal now stands; and I herewith transmit a report from the Colonel of Ordnance on the subject. I see no objection to the cession, if time be allowed and means be provided for the construction of an arsenal on another site, and the removal thereto of the arms, munitions, machinery, tools, &c., now at the St. Louis arsenal, for which purposes the sum of $250,000 is estimated to be required.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JEFF. DAVIS.

HON. THOMAS H. BENTON, Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, January 27, 1854.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the reference to this office for report of the resolution of the House of Representatives instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of ceding to the city of St. Louis, for the purpose of a public park, for ever, the ground on which the United States arsenal now stands, and to submit the following remarks on the measure, the expediency of which is the subject of inquiry.

The arsenal is near, and just outside, the limits of the city of St. Louis. It was located and its construction commenced in accordance with the act approved May 20, 1826, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the War Department to purchase a site for an arsenal at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and to provide for the erection of an arsenal at the same." The site selected, and on which the arsenal now stands, contains thirty seven forty sixth hundredth acres, and is estimated to be now worth at least $200,000, exclusive of the inclosing walls, interior fences, drains, culverts, and roads, which are valued at $30,000. The buildings, which are constructed in the most permanent manner, are valued at $163,010. The arms and munitions of war of all kinds, together with the machinery and tools in store and in use, are valued at $1275,773.
